IF ANDREW CARNEGIE would only pension the widows and orphans that have been made at Homestead, Pa., through the greed of himself and pals, he would have less money to pension ex-presidents.

THE MINERS' MAGAZINE is the property of every member of the Western Federation of Miners. The editor would suggest that each member of the Western Federation of Miners, number among his resolutions for the year 1913, that he will become a subscriber and aid in building up a publication, that is fighting for the interests of the working class.

THE SUPREME COURT of the state of Mississippi has upheld the Constitutionality of the ten hour law.

The law was contested by a lumber company, on the grounds, that such a law was an infringement on personal liberty.

A corporation is certainly very jealous of any invasion on the liberty of a slave to work as many hours per day as his physical make-up will permit of.

The corporation is so jealous of personal liberty being infringed upon, that it would ask a court for an injunction restraining any organization from preventing a slave from being slowly murdered through long hours and starvation wages.

THE GOVERNOR of Arkansas is certainly a man of courage, A governor who issues pardons to 360 prisoners, on the grounds, that the majority of these prisoners were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment for trivial offences, to serve the financial interests of soulless contractors, is worthy of the admiration of every honest man in America.

The contractors with a political pull wanted cheap labor and convict labor was looked upon as the cheapest.

It became necessary that convicts should be secured, in order that the contractors might grow fat, and official authority in Arkansas was prostituted, that labor in stripes should mint dividends for political cormorants.

What must be said of the officials who made the arrests for trivial offenses, and what must be said of the courts of Arkansas, that resolved themselves into agencies to furnish convicts to greedy contractors. The Judicial Recall is needed in Arkansas.

THE EXPRESS COMPANIES die hard. They now express the fear that the government will not be able to make a success of its parcels post system. Why not? Other governments have. The government will do the work much better than the express companies do. During the whole business life of the writer, he has not experienced one instance of where the government has failed or bungled in its function of properly handling his mail business. He has during this time experienced innumerable instances where the express companies failed to give satisfaction. This is due to the fact that the government is carrying on the post office department solely with the idea of performing a social SERVICE for the whole people, while in the case of the private express companies, they are carrying on their business solely with the idea of gouging the people for the PROFIT of their stockholders. The government cannot help but succeed in such undertakings, and the private profit mongers might well save all fears up against that time when the people shall take from them all their powers of private monopoly by socializing every means of social service pretty much as they are doing through such small beginnings as the parcels post system.—Spokane Labor World.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., is credited with having financed the investigation and exposure of police graft in New York. He has contributed $200,000 and is prepared to give as much more, if necessary, to "stamp out" corruption.

Mr. Rockefeller, we take it, has profited little from the graft investigations and crusades which culminated in the San Francisco endeavor to get "the man higher up."

If he were to consult with Francis Heney or Lincoln Steffens or any of the graft investigators who were capable of identifying what they had discovered, he could learn without any considerable expenditure the graft which so arouses him is not an isolated manifestation, but a symptom of a systematic disorder.

The same forces which produced Standard Oil are responsible for police graft in New York. There is not a whit difference between the police lieutenant who retires with a fortune or a United States senator who has an intimate correspondence with Mr. Archbold.

The path is crooked, but it's the same trail, whether it runs to police headquarters, to 26 Broadway, to the tenderloin or the senate chamber.—Milwaukee Leader.

J. P. MORGAN, in his testimony before the Congressional Committee investigating the Money Trust frankly admitted that he and his "interests" controlled $25,000,000,000 of wealth.

Then Morgan coolly informed the country—as though we were all in the kindergarten class of financial legerdemain—that it would be impossible for any group of individuals to monopolize money and credits.

And then some of the smug minor financiers and editors, who are paid to make excuses apologize and falsify, gravely nodded their heads in assent and remarked what a wonderful man the king of finance really is.

But suppose that Morgan and his group of industrial captains quietly began to sell bonds and stocks and locked up in safety vaults a billion or so of gold and silver and money became "tighter" and still "tighter" from day to day, how long would it take for credits to tumble to a point where property would be almost given away in a wild panic to save something from impending bankruptcy?

The question answers itself, and it proves that, besides being the greatest financial juggler of the present time, Morgan is also the greatest liar on earth.—Cleveland Citizen.

IF THERE SHALL BE a panic during the Wilson administration, if there shall be a return of what the Republican politicians have been pleased to characterize as "Democratic hard times," some one is going to suffer.

The man who finds himself out of a job, the citizen who finds his factory closed or his business bankrupt, the depositor who is consoled with the promise that he will be paid in full, will not be alone. The man who caused the panic—the malefactor of money—who plied down the structure to show his spite against the party that didn't free the slaves, will get it good and plenty.

The successor of Andrew Jackson has spoken. He has warned Morgan and Rockefeller and Belmont and Ryan and their ilk that they are in peril. If there's a panic, the president will hang the guilty man higher than Haman's gibbet.

In our mind's eye we can see the malefactors of great wealth, who haven't had a chill chase down their spines since Roosevelt threatened to send them to the penitentiary, shaking in their boots, and vowing to save the situation and their necks regardless of what congress may do or Bryan may say.

So there'll be no panic, for Mr. Wilson has sworn it. If any man shall be found trifling with the people's confidence or with a lighted match in the vicinity of the Democratic magazine, the chief magistrate will cause him to be seized and held up to public view for the reprobation of every Democrat who believes that modern industry is a criminal conspiracy.—New York Call.

Wilson must be tolerated for expelling from his expanded lungs some "hot air" that will merely cause Oily John to "wink the other eye" at Morgan.

The threats of Wilson are as harmless as the bellowing that was indulged in by Teddy against the malefactors, against whom he hurled that verbal froth that tickled their risibilities.

The bluff of Wilson is merely a joke.

GOVERNOR WILSON, the president-elect, in discussing "The New Freedom" written for the January edition of the World's Work, says:

"The truth is we are caught in a great economic system which is heartless.

"When I hear judges reason upon the analogy of relationships that used to exist between workmen and their employers of a generation ago I wonder they have not opened their eyes to the modern world. You know we have a right to expect that judges will have their eyes opened, even though the law they administer hasn't awakened."

"American industry is not free, as once it was free; American enterprise is not free; the man with only a little capital is finding it harder to get into the field, more and more impossible to compete with the big fellow. Why? Because the laws of this country do not prevent the strong from crushing the weak. That is the reason and because the strong have crushed the weak and strong dominate the industry and the economic life of this country."

"If business men could vote secretly they would vote overwhelmingly that the present organization of business was meant for the big fellows and was not meant for the little fellows."

It is refreshing that Wilson recognizes that our economic system is heartless. Every man and woman of intellegence whose capital is limited and every man and woman who belong to the working class who have felt the crushing weight of industrial slavery, know that the giants in finance and commerce are the masters and rule with an iron hand.

We know the many diseases in our social life, and it is not necessary that, Wilson shall indulge in repeating the wrongs and outrages from which the masses of the people suffer.

The people who bear the scars of the struggle to live, are far more interested in knowing what remedies President-elect Wilson is going to use to make it possible for the victims of "predatory wealth" to escape the penalties inflicted by merciless despots. President Wilson has four years before him, in which four years, he has the opportunity of demonstrating to the people, as to whether or not, he is possessed of the back-bone and ability to expel the heartless from our economic system.

The Authorities Must Take Action

AS WE GO TO PRESS we have received special information from South Porcupine that an attempt has been made to inaugurate a new reign of terror in the interests of the mine owners.

It looks a fierce proposition when the Ontario police beat men up and start a row and then arrest and charge them with unlawful assembly. These men are now held on $1,000 bail, and the treatment they have received is worse than that meted out to criminals in Russia. The following is a copy of a telegram sent to the Attorney-General by Secretary W. C. Thompson of the Western Federation of Miners:

"South Porcupine, Ontario, December 23, 1912

"Porcupine Miners' Union strongly protests against treatment of men in South Porcupine jail. Men are not allowed to communicate with their friends and were not given anything to eat from half-past seven Tuesday until one o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. Want action taken at once to give these men their rights."

Apparently the mine owners are growing desperate, as they realize the futility of their attempts, up to the present, to make any headway whatever in connection with the strike in South Porcupine. It is now generally conceded that the Western Federation of Miners have been successful in their efforts to tie up the mine. The mine operators have met with very poor success in securing help to take the places of the strikers. They have, through their agents, scoured the country far and near in a vain endeavor to secure strikebreakers. Quite a number of men who have been induced by means of willful misrepresentation upon the part of unprincipled and unscrupulous agents of the mine owners to come to Porcupine under the impression that no trouble existed at the present time. The majority of these importations absolutely refuse to work when they learn the true state of affairs. Some of them go into the mines, and it is a fact that when they once get in the toils it is a hard matter to get away again. Men have been forced to keep at work under the muzzles of revolvers in the hands of notorious Thiel gunmen—men who are desirous of deserting the ship if they get a chance. Once or twice the imported strike-breakers have risen in revolt and forced their way out. There has been no force or violence of any kind exercised by the men on strike; indeed, they have carried themselves in a most exemplary manner, and no exception whatever can be taken regarding their conduct since the commencement of the strike up to the present time.

In spite of this a state of almost martial law prevails. First came the importation of as unprincipled a gang of scoundrels under the guise of Thiel detectives, that it was possible to scrape together. These men were brought in to act as a standing army for the mine owners. They were composed of thugs, gunmen and ex-convicts—individuals of the most notorious and undesirable character, and they were enlisted for and paid by the operators, whose one aim was to smash the union and the wage rate at the same time.

With this unsavory gang in control, no man or woman or child was safe on the streets; women were openly insulted, and the strikers subjected to all kinds of provocation in an attempt to force a riot that could be used as an excuse for bloodshed and the shooting up of the men on strike. That such a state of affairs was possible was indeed a sad blot upon the fair name of the Province of Ontario. These Thiel desperadoes deliberately trampled on the laws, and, as is now well known, began at last to wantonly shoot down peaceful and inoffensive miners. It was only because the public conscience was thoroughly aroused and public sentiment was asserting itself in no uncertain manner that the authorities were at last forced to act, and the Ontario or provincial police were put on duty and the discredited Thiels run off the job. For some time after things ran along a great deal more smoothly. It was apparent, however, that the mine owners had the right kind of wires to pull. The Ontario police is just as much a standing army of the mine owners as the Thiels ever were. The authorities have always favored the barons. It was only the fear of public sentiment that kept the Ontario police in their places, but at last it is apparent that the passive tactics do not meet with the approval of the mine lords who own the lands and the mines, the police and officials, and everything else in sight except the men, who by their labor develop the wealth of the mines that by right should belong to the people of Ontario.

Up to the present time the strikers have met the various trains upon their arrival and made known the fact that a strike was on, with the result that but few of the new importations could be induced to act the scab. Recently, however, there was daily accumulating evidence that the police were getting reckless, or were being urgd on by those in authority. Last week a train arrival bearing a number of new importations. The strikers were down, as usual, to meet it—probably 100 or 150 of them. A big bunch of the Ontario police were on hand, and at once boarded the front and rear of the Pullman car and refused to allow anybody to enter it, though a number of men had Pullman tickets and the Pullman conductor insisted on their right to come in. The police also interfered with the men boarding the other cars, and as they were in the habit of taking this train to Timmins, one man resented such high-handed and unwarranted conduct. Without any provocation whatever the police got busy with their clubs and started in to beat up the people on the station platform, and very nearly succeeded in working up a bloody riot. In the mixup Constable Smith of South Porcupine, drew his gun and opened fire on a man who was trying to make a getaway from the scene of trouble. When the train arrived in Timmins the provincial squad who escorted it out there joined the local officers and marched the strikebreakers to the Goldfield hotel for supper, afterwards herding them to the Hollinger mine, this despite the fact that many of the strikebreakers were unwilling to proceed with them. It was a case of "you've got to go, whether you want to or not." It was a badly-scared aggregation and from the looks of the bunch it was a sheer waste of money on the part of the mine-owners to bring them out at all. The strikers are becoming angry at the actions of the provincial men and are losing what little respect they did have for them in the first place, for they are plainly demonstrating they have no respect for the law they are supposed to uphold and are perfectly willing to violate it if by so doing they can benefit the mine owners, who are allowed to be a law unto themselves. The mine owners are not amenable to the provincial laws—at least not when these provincial misfits interpret it. However, they more than make up for this by getting after the strikers upon the slightest pretext. To know how thoroughly the monied interests run things in this district one must be here in person to see for himself otherwise he would not believe it possible such a state of affairs could actually exist. In spite of this, however, the miners have, up to the present at least, had decidedly the best of the argument. The mines are in bad shape and the few men in them know as much about mining as a hen would know about shoveling sugar. How long this kind of law and order will last it is hard to predict.

Anything is liable to happen at any moment now, and if bloodshed should unfortunately occur, the blame can be laid at the door of the Ontario police, who have clearly prostituted the law.—Industrial Banner, Toronto.

For Unity and Solidarity

TO THE EDITOR: I read with a great deal of interest, news item in Saturday's issue in re: "Socialists to Vote on Ousting Wm. D. Haywood." I would like to express myself throught your columns in a few brief comments:

1. A party, no matter what label it bears, that throws open its doors and admits to membership anyone—capitalist or proletarian—on the one condition that he pledges himself to quit voting the old party ticket, and subscribe to, and vote for the "Socialist party" principles—such a party never was, is not, nor ever can be the real, loyal, honest, sincere champion of the working class.

2. A party that in national convention assembled decides against "indusrial unionism" and stands as an advocate and ally of craft unionism is not a true working class party.

3. A party that decides against the principles of "direct action" and the "social general strike" and repudiates the same in favor of a capitalistic, non-effective "ballot," such a party is positively not the one to lead the working class from slavery and oppression to freedom and justice.

4. A party that conspires to "vote" a Wm. D. Haywood out from its ranks, just because he has sense enough to know (by bitter experience) that the ballot as a weapon or method of emancipation, is noneffective, and that "direct action" and the "social general strike" would prove effective—such a party is not, never was, nor ever will be instrumental in bringing about the economic emancipation of the working class. No! No!!

5. The Socialist party, when tested by the principles of true socialism—the socialism of our deceased brothers, the martyrs of 1887—are found to be a sham, a fraud, a base and spurious counterfeit. Whoever puts any confidence in their claims, their doctrines or teachings is a credulous fool, and whoever advocates their principles—antisocialism, etc., and still contends that said "S. P." is the champion of the proletariat is a hypocritical liar, and is doing just the very one thing the capitalists wish, viz.: deceiving, deluding and dividing the working class.

If we had 100 such men as "Bill" Haywood, I want to tell you the capitalist exploiter would be quaking with fear, instead of shaking with glee over the out-of-date, wornout, non-effective "intellectuals" of the "S. P.," Vive Lai Haywood! Viva La Social General Strike and Direct Action! Yours for unity and solidarity,

N. J. B. BAILEY.

The above appeared in the Chicago Daily Press and was sent to us by a reader of The Miners' Magazine, who expressed this wish, that we comment on the same.

The writer of the above, N. J. B. Bailey, in his communication to the Press has certainly placed Haywood among the Anarchists, and we presume that "Big Bill" is proud of being classed with those revolutionists who overthrow Capitalism every time their tanks become loaded with cheap swill, commonly known as beer.

Bailey, however, in recognizing the fact that Haywood is an anarchist, discloses that he, himself, is an anarchist, and if he belongs to the Socialist Party, should be expelled as a heretic.

Bailey seems to have great faith in the potency of such men as Haywood. It is only men of small mental calibre who worship what they conceive to be heroes.

Haywood is a hero in the estimation of Bailey, but heroes who sprint for a laundry when scenting danger will never "make a hit" with real men. Haywood has no place in the Socialist party, and if he was not dead to honor, he would resign from a party whose principles are not in accord with "Sabotage," "direct action," and "hitting the ballot box with an ax."

The Capitalists—the wise men—recognize the efficiency of the ballot and see to it that they control the legislative, judicial and executive departments of government, so that their representatives, when called upon, can use all these functions of government to supress the rebellion of labor.

Capitalism places its agents in public office, and these agents of Capitalism in office, can use all the armed forces of city, county, state and nation to hold labor in chains.

But "Direct Actionists" boosters for "Sabotage" and professional politicians who yearn to use a cleaver on a ballot box, are so much wiser than the Capitalists, that a party whose doctrines favor political unity at the polls is scorned and should be repudiated. "Verbum Sap."

Conviction of Dynamiters Will Aid Unionism

THE CONVICTION of the thirty-eight dynamiters will help Unionism rather than hurt it. The basic ideas of the movement—those responsible for its strength and growth—are fraternity and fair play. Any departure from these principles harms and retards, for they are bypaths leading away from the main road. It is not too much to say that every bomb exploded has set Unionism back five years, for this violent disregard of others is in itself a denial of the movement's essential ideas.

But it is a mistake to assume that the arrest and conviction of union men for crimes against the law will ever come to stand as a remedy. It may discourage violence, but it will not eradicate it. The root of the trouble is the STRIKE, for it is out of the strike that violence proceeds.

George W. Perkins, president of the Cigarmakers' Union, put the matter in a nutshell recently when he said to an interviewer:

"You are going to ask me about violence. There often is violence. I do not wish to defend it. But it arises out of the spirit of the contest. The men feel injured, they think of their families, see strangers taking their places. It is too late, when the strike is on, to say that some one, on one side or the other side, or maybe both sides, has exceeded the limits of justice. When the war is on, passion, for the time being, rules some of the combatants."

It is with the strike that we must deal, for it is as a result of the strike—the rule of passion—that employers and employes pit violence against violence and crime against crime.—Rocky Mountain News.

The above editorial in the Rocky Mountain News will not be relished by the majority of members of organized labor, who have observed closely the various stages of the great trial that ended before Judge Anderson at Indianapolis December 28th.

The News takes it for granted that the thirty-eight men convicted were guilty, regardless of the fact, that their conviction was brought about throught the most corrupt agencies that ever disgraced the judicial history of this country. The News takes the position that the conviction of these thirty-eight men "will help Unionism rather than hurt it."

We will agree with the News that the conviction of thirty-eight men by the Steel trust in collusion with the Burns Detective Agency, "will help Unionism rather than hurt it."

The conviction of these men that was brought about by all the agencies that the Steel trust could summon to its assistance, will clear the vision of a vast number of the membership of organized labor, and countless thousands of men and women of the labor movement, through the conviction of these men, will be forced to recognize the fact, that there is a class struggle, and that this struggle will never end until Capitalism is overthrown.

The conviction will have the effect of strengthening organized labor by making its membership class-conscious and class-loyal, and bringing labor closer together industrially and politically.

San Diego (Russia)

FELLOW WORKERS: No doubt many of you would like to know the state of affairs in this mediæval city. The police thugs and vigilantes expected a renewal of the fight on the 15th of October and so were armed and ready to repeat their atrocities. Finding everything quiet they were put on the guessing seat, and have been kept there ever since. This naturally brings on nervitis which is a hard complaint to cure. Similar to hydrophobia.

Some of our members have been dogged everywhere they go. Tuesday night last at 9 o'clock three of our boys were reading in the hall when who should come in but the wildeyed chief, Keno the great, and his aid de camp. He spotted a red flag on the wall made of paper, and immediately tore it down and into pieces, stating that as often as we put them up he would tear them down. He then wheeled round on a fellow worked suffering from tuberculosis, who had just come from San Pedro that day. After asking him where he came from, and if he carried a card, he whipped out his gun and pointed it at the fellow worker, saying: "Now, you s—— of a b——, get to hell out of here and don't you come back." After forcing the fellow worker out of the hall at the point of a gun, an automobile arrived and Keno and his aide de camp drove away. This is the first time that Keno, the nervitis patient, has been seen out after daylight, so we expected something special in the "Onion" the next morning. Sure enough there it was in big head lines, TWO BANDS OF INSURRECTOS IN HIDING AT THE FOOT OF G STREET. A SHACK FULL OF AMMUNITION AND BARRICADED WITH DRY GOODS BOXES. ALSO A STRANGE SLOOP WAS SEEN IN THE BAY. Detectives kept watch all night, but were unable to catch certain individuals whom they expected to find. Needless to say the next day they searched some shacks but found nothing.

From the foregoing facts it will be seen that it is impossible to hold propaganda meetings here or do any very effective work. Not only are the streets denied us but halls as well. If the fellow workers who received financial aid from Local 13 before leaving San Diego, are in a position to do so, we would like to have them send whatever amounts they can afford. The only way in which we can keep up the local is by dues and contributions together with what literature we are able to sell.

This is not an appeal for funds, but only a gentle reminder that Local 13 needs the dough and has poor chance to get it.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

The above communication appeared in the Industrial Worker, published at Spokane, Wash. The communication is from the pen of the Press Committee, which committee, is about all that is left of the I. W. W. in San Diego. A year ago, the pastures were green in San Diego, and the workless loafers and parasites, enjoyed the alfalfa that was furnished by the dupes who entertained the opinion, that the cause of the flim-flammers and swindlers was based on some semblance of justice. The red flag of the hoodlum brigade was unfurled, and the jawsmiths appropriated to themselves a license to spew their slime and slander upon anybody and everybody, who hesitated to gulp down their lunacy about the "One Big Union."

Their vilifications became so infamous, that the authorities were forced to refuse the scurrilous beggars a permit to speak upon the streets, and when these lazy and worthless defamers were denied a permit to hurl their foul verbal excrement against those who repudiated their fanaticism, they immediately raised the cry that the right of Free Speech was being assassinated in San Diego.

Immediately a literary bureau was established, and bulletins with glaring head lines were issued daily, calling upon organized labor, the Socialist Party and every lover of liberty to dig down into their pockets and forward funds, in order that Free Speech might not become a corpse in San Diego.

Many members of organized labor, Socialists and other sympathizers, swallowed the bait and parted with their money, believing that they were aiding in protecting legal rights and Constitutional liberties.

The scrap was started in San Diego, in order that funds might be secured under the pretext that Free Speech was in jeopardy, and the sweatless mendicants who hatched the scheme to repeat the Spokane fiasco in San Diego, reaped a rich harvest from the gullible.

When the fake in San Diego became so transparent that even the blind could see its perfidy, the long green ceased to come to San Diego, and then, the I. W. W. Arabs folded their tents and "pulled their freight" for "pastures new" in the hope that another "Free Speech" scrap could be launched to secure the "Mazuma."

The letter of the Press Committee of San Diego practically admits, that there is scarcely a "grease spot" left of the "Bummery," and it is about time that the members of organized labor closed their purses to the Syndicate of Skates who are yelping about emancipating a world through "Direct Action," "Sabotage" and "Hitting the Ballot Box with an Ax."

If "Direct Action" and "Sabotage" were so powerful in bringing Capitalism to its knees, as the jawsmiths proclaim, it is strange and singular that their is nothing now left in San Diego, save a hungry Press Committee, that pleads through a communication for Soup Money.

One Big Union; One Big Soup House. Trautmann, pass the "Mulligan" to "Big Bill!"

Will He Pay the Penalty?

ABOUT a year ago the confession of the McNamaras was as great a surprise as though a peal of thunder burst from a cloudless sky. The membership of organized labor throughout the country believed in the innocence of the McNamaras and the fact that they were smuggled out of the state of Indiana without a hearing in a court of record of the state in which they lived, had the effect of causing the vast majority of men in the labor movement to feel more firm in the belief that the McNamaras were victims of a conspiracy.

When the confession was made, the daily journals from ocean to ocean, thundered their condemnation against the crimes admitted by the McNamaras, and many of those journals demanded "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

These journals, however, that howled for the most drastic penalties for the McNamaras had not a word of denunciation for that aristocrat and multi-millionaire, William Wood of the Wool trust, who has been indicted for planting dynamite, in order that the crime might be charged to the textile strikers of Lawrence, and public sentiment poisoned against the slaves of an industrial oligarchy.

William Wood did not belong to the working class, nor is he a member of organized labor. Wood is an exploiter, whose profits have been reaped from the ill-paid labor of men, women and children.

While the explosives planted by Wood and his hirelings, did not kill twenty-one human beings, yet, Wood in his greed for dividends, slowly but surely murdered men, women and children, whose miserable wages hurried them to premature graves.

The McNamaras, according to their confession, used dynamite to commit murder, but Wood can be guilty of industrial murder, and through his greed for profit, slowly but surely starve his slaves to death, and yet, the journals that froth over the acts of men made desperate through the soulless exploitation and heartless despotism of economic tyrants, permit a czar in the industrial world to escape with impunity.

The McNamaras have been pilloried with editorial denunciation, but a lord of the woolen mills of Massachusetts, indicted for planting explosives to fasten crime upon strikers, is handled with velvet gloves by the scribbling hypocrites who take the position that "the king can do no wrong."

Fair-minded and honest men in the labor movement, will not condone crime on the part of men identified with organized labor, but if there is any virtue in that often-repeated saying that "all men are equal before the law," then Wood, the dynamiter, who premediated a cold-blooded crime against labor, should pay the penalty of his lawlessness.

We shall see.

America's First Banker

AFTER MANY YEARS a committee of Congress has mustered the courage to bring J. Pierpont Morgan before it and question him as to the sources of his financial power.

It has been a long time since the government had Morgan on the carpet.

It was in the Civil war that Morgan first appeared upon the scene as a financier. He was then 24 years old.

The government at the outbreak of the war was selling condemned carbines. Arthur M. Eastman, a New Hampshire citizen, possessed of the virtue of foresight, contracted to purchase 5,000 carbines at $3.50 each.

The records disclose that J. Pierpont Morgan was his financial backer.

Eastman sold the carbines to Gen. Fremont, who had no authority whatever to buy them, for $22 each.

The carbines were shipped direct from the New York arsenal, where they were stored by the government, to the St. Louis arsenal, where Fremont was stationed.

The transaction, which was typical of the manner in which the government was cheated and swindled by army contractors, led to a congressional inquiry. The committee, after ascertaining the facts, reported:

"Thus the proposal actually was to sell to the government at $22 each, 5,000 of its own arms the intention being, if the offer was accepted, to obtain these arms from the government at $3.50 each. . . . It is very evident that the very funds with which this purchase was effected were borrowed on the faith of the previous agreement to sell. The government not only sold for one day for $17,486 arms which it had agreed the day before to repurchase for $109,912—making a loss to the United States of $92,426—but virtually furnished the money to pay itself the $17,486 which it received."

The committee recommended the witholding of payment, in that the fraud was palpable and the arms worthless. Subsequently a commission was appointed to pass upon the claim in connection with others of like nature. The commission found that while the government had been cheated, and Fremont had no authority to act as he did, yet the fact that he purchased the carbines imposed a certain obligation upon the government. To settle the matter, it decided that payment at the rate of $13.31 a carbine should be made.

Morgan was not satisfied. He took the $13.31 that the commission allowed for the carbines that had been bought from the government for $3.50 and brought suit before the court of claims for $58,000. The case was entitled Simon Stevens vs. The United States Government.

In the statement of the case before the court the fact was emphasized that, according to the government the carbines had been inspected and pronounced unserviceable by its ordnance officer. Judge Peck found that Morgan was a principal, though the suit was brought in another's name. The judge said, in delivering his opinin:

"By arrangement between Stevens and one J. Pierpont Morgan the voucher for the first 2,500 carbines delivered was to be made out in the name of Morgan, which was done; the said voucher was signed by F. D. Cadwallader, Captain of Ordnance, United States Army, and was for the sum of $55,500. By further agreement this voucher went into the hands of Messrs. Ketchum, Son & Co."

In face of the facts, the court allowed the claim in full and opened the door for a raid upon the treasury by the "patriotic" contractors who had seized upon the government's necessities to enrich themselves by means which would have justified their summary execution by drumhead courts-martial. Meyers, in his "History of Great American Fortunes," comments on the court's decision:

"Judge Peck held that when Fremont had agreed to buy the rifles he had entered into a contract which bound the government, and that a contract was a contract. The court took no cognizance of the fact that the worthless, condemned rifles had been represented as new; nor did it consider the fact that the money with which they had been bought from the government was virtually government money. It gave Stevens a judgment against the government for $58,175.

"It was this particular decision which assured the 'open sesame' for the holders of what were then cynically called 'dead-horse' claims, to collect the full amount of their swindling operations. The government could now plead itself defenseless against the horde of contractors who had bribed officials to accept decayed ships and defective armor, worthless arms and shoddy clothing, flimsy tents, blankets and shoes, and haversacks which came to pieces, adulterated food and similar equipment and supplies. As for criminal action, not a single one of these defrauders went to prison or stood in any danger of it; the courts throughout the land were perennially busy rushing off petty defrauders to imprisonment and employing the full punitive power of their machinery against poor, uninfluential offenders."

So was founded the fortune of the House of Morgan, the Morgan that a great university has honored for his services in the panic of 1907 when, with the federal treasury placed at his disposal and with the promise of immunity from the chief executive, who had been frightened at the spectre of colossal disaster, he obtained possession of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company and completed the monopoly of the United States Steel Corporation.

It is illuminating that the Morgan who sold condemned carbines to the government when the Union was imperiled, at an enormous profit, should now, to quote one of his eulogists, be deemed "the greatest banker and the greatest financial factor in the Western Hemisphere."

They Are Still Hungry

THERE WAS A FEAST at Christmas, but the next day, there was a famine. In the name of Charity, funds and food were solicited for the penniless and unfortunate, and in every city of magnitude in the United States, the homeless and shelterless were served with the crumbs of charity.

For such generosity manifested towards the poor, the daily journals from the Atlantic to the Pacific teemed with editorials that showered praise upon the givers who made it possible for the impoverished to participate in the luxury of a "square meal."

Salvation Armies, Volunteers of America, Sunshine Missions and charity organizations of every description, were appealing to the people to open their purses, in order that the hungry might be fed on that anniversary, when pulpits proclaim: "Peace on Earth Good Will to men."

But Christmas has passed into history, and the hundreds of thousands of people who were recipients of charity on this anniversary of the birth of Christ, find themselves, still looking into the future with hopeless hearts, their vitals clutched by the grip of want. The daily journals were extravagent in their laudations of that class whose contributions provided a meal for the hungry on Christmas Day, but none of these journals touched the cause that made human beings forget their pride and dignity, to become beneficiaries of a charity meal.

Not a word was said of the wrongs of an industrial system that reduced men, women and children to pauperism.

Not a word of censure was said of that heartless exploitation of a master class, whose dividends are coined from the destitution of enslaved labor.

These journals that lauded the rich who gave to the poor, did not even hint that charity was the product of Capitalism, that charity was but the effect of economic slavery.

As the beneficiaries of charity on Christmas Day are again hungry and penniless, it might occur to our daily journals, that charity is but a poor substitute for justice.

When the reign of justice is established, there will be no need for that charity that is even repulsive to the victim of poverty.

Their Vengeance Glutted

JUDGE ANDERSON of the Federal Court of Indianapolis has imposed sentences on the officials and members of the Structular Iron Workers.

The following were senteneed to various terms of imprisonment:

Seven Years.

Frank M. Ryan, Chicago, president of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers.

Six Years.

Olaf A. Tveitmoe, San Franeiseo, secretary of the California Building Trades Counеil.

Herbert S. Hockin, former secretary of the Iron Workers' Union and formerly of Detroit.

John T. Butler, Buffalo, vice president of the union.
Eugene A. Claney, San Franeiseo.
J. E. Munsey, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Philip A. Cooley, New Orleans.
Frank C. Webb, New York.
Michael J. Young, Boston.

Four Years.

John H. Berry, St. Louis.
Peter J. Smith, Cleveland.

Three Years.

Charles N. Baum, Minneapolis.
Henry W. Legleitner, Denver.
Ernest G. W. Basey, Indianapolis.
Edward Smythe, Peoria, Ill.
William E. Reddin, Milwaukee
Murray L. Pennell, Springfield, Ill.
Paul J. Morrin, St. Louis.
William J. McCain, Kansas City, Mo.
Michael J. Hannon, Seranton, Pa.
George ("Nipper") Anderson, Cleveland.
Wilford Bert Brown, Kansas City, Mo.
Michael J. Cunnanea, Philadelphia.

Two Years.

Frank J. Higgins, Boston.
William K. Painter, Omaha.
Fred Sherman, Indianapolis.
Richard H. Houlihan, Chieago.

One Year and One Day.

William C. Bernhardt, Cincinnati.
Charles Wachtmeister, Detroit.
William Shupe, Chicago.
James E Ray, Peoria, Ill.
Edward E. Phillips, Syraeuse, N. Y.
Fred Mooney, Duluth, Minn.

Suspended Sentences.

Patrick F. Farrell, New York.
James Cooney, Chieago.
James Coughlin, Chicago.
Hiram R. Kline, Muncie, Ind., former organizer of the Carpenters' Union in Detroit.
Frank J. Murphy, Detroit.
Edward Clark, Cincinnati, confessed dynamiter, who testified for the government.

Years ago, the Steel Trust declared war against organized labor, and J. P. Morgan, one of the world's mightiest financial pirates, declared vengeance against unionism among the steel workers.

The steel workers' organization was ultimately shattered and rendered helpless.

The structural iron workers challenged the belligerency of Morgan and his fellow conspirators, and the trials at Indianapolis, lasting three months, with the conviction of almost two score of men prominently identified with the organization, prove that Morgan and his confederates are implacable enemies of organized labor.

Morgan, through his vast economic power, was able to bring to his assistance the machinery of the national government to convict the men whom he looked upon as active in the organization of the working class.

We will not say that laws were held sacred by every official and member of the Structural Iron Workers, but we do say that the crusade waged by Morgan & Co. against this organization had its effect in causing men to meditate on deeds of violence.

The direct actionists, advocates of sabotage and scoffers of political unity at the ballot box, can learn some lessons from the trials at Indianapolis. The working class did not control the courts nor any function of government that was used to fasten guilt on the Structural Iron Workers. Again, if the Structural Iron Workers are guilty of the charges that they were convicted of, then their acts can be construed as nothing else save sabotage and direct action.

We firmly believe in the innocence of the vast majority of these men and we trust that their conviction will result in the industrial and political solidarity of labor, so that Morgan and men of his ilk in the coming years will not be able to command every function of government to send labor to prison to glut the vengeance of soulless exploiters.

Governor Donaghey's Emancipation Proclamation

A NEW EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION was declared by Governor Donaghey of Arkansas when he pardoned 360 convicts who has been sold into slavery by the prison authorities of that state, under the convict lease system.

Governor Donaghney, giving his reasons for this wholesale delivery, made accusations which, if true, are the last words in condemnation of the convict contract system.

He asserted that men were being condemned to the penitentiary and the county jails for long terms and on frivolous charges, through the political influence of the holders of convict leases, simply to swell the number of the cheap slaves these companies were exploiting.

This may sound unbelievable, but wherever investigated, whether in Indiana, Iowa or Maryland, the reports of all tally; amount to this: that where prisoners are leased to private contractors the making of profits out of the unfortunate convicts dominates and takes precedence over every avowed object of the prison, or, so-called, reformatory.

The commission that investigated conditions at the Iowa reformatory reported that men, who by their exemplary conduct while in prison, should, under the indeterminate sentence law of that state, have been released on parole, were denied that parole, simply because of their value as slaves to those who received the profits from their unrequited toil.

From that infamy it is only one step farther to railroad helpless, moneyless, innocent men to jail; or to induce venal courts to condemn to long terms in the penitentiary men and boys convicted for slight misdemeanors.

And that is what Governor Donaghey states has been practiced in the state of Arkansas; and, doubtless, he has good grounds for his assertions.

To our certain knowledge this infamous practice was at one time common in the state of Alabama, where the privately owned coal mines were furnished with cheap labor by local justices of the peace, who received commissions for labor so furnished.

And, for that matter, it is only a difference of degree of injury that is perpetrated on helpless men, whether they are sent to prison slavery wrongfully, in the first place, on account of the desire on the part of influential politicians to acquire cheap labor, or, if convicted of an offense they are really guilty of, they are denied any opportunity to reform, any chance to learn some useful trade that might give them a chance to become honest and honorable citizens; are exploited and punished if they fail to turn out the amount of work set by hard taskmasters, themselves driven by the inexorable demand for more and still more profits.

The commercialization of the prisons, the coining of the unpaid labor into money, profits, is the underlying cause of the failure of our prison system, of our so-called reformatories, to return to the world anything but further hardened criminals; criminals who know they have been dealt with unjustly, in the name of Justice; with a hatred in their hearts for organized society that will find expression in darker crimes.

Thus it will be so long as a few favored money grabbers are allowed to profit by the misfortunes of those who fall in our great industrial war.—United Mine Workers Journal.

The General Strike—IV.—Its History in England

(By Robert Hunter. Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

JULES GUESDE, at the Congress of the Socialist Party of France, held at Lille, said, in condemning the general strike: "Before taking a stand on the general strike, it is necessary to know what this term signifies. The general strike is, in fact, originally the weapon of the employer." He then showed that the English employers, by means of the lockout, forced what amounted to the general strike, and by this action impoverished the workers and destroyed the unions.

Guesde is not altogether accurate. It was a general strike that led to the lockout. The lockout was the answer of the employer to what was perhaps the greatest effort in history to paralyze industry by means of "one big union" and a general strike.

The one big union of which we hear so much today existed in England in the early thirties. Several unsuccessful efforts were made to form a "General Union of the Productive Classes" and at last Robert Owen, toward the end of 1833, outlined his great plan.

"It is intended," he said, "that national arrangements shall be formed to include all the working classes in the great organization, and that each department shall become acquainted with what is going on in other departments; that all individual competition is to cease; that all manufactures are to be carried on by national companies. All trades shall first form associations of lodges, to consist of a convenient number for carrying on the business. . . . All individuals of the specific craft shall become members."

"Immediately after this, we find in existence," say Sidney and Beatrice Webb, "a 'Grand National Consolidated Trades Union.'" This organization seems to have actually started in January, 1834. Owen was its chief recruiter and propagandist. During the next few months his activity was incessant, and lodges were affiliated all over the country. Innumerable local trade clubs were absorbed. Early in February, 1834, a special delegate meeting was held at Owen's London institute in Charlotte street, Fitzroy square, at which it was resolved that the new body should take the form of a federation of separate trade lodges, each lodge to be composed usually of members of one trade, but with provision for "miscellaneous lodges" in places where the numbers were small, and even for "female miscellaneous lodges." Each lodge retained its own funds, levies being made throughout the whole order for strike purposes. The conference urged each lodge to provide sick, funeral and superannuation benefits for its own members, and and proposals were adopted to lease land on which to employ "turnouts" and to set up co-operative workshops. . . .

"Nothing in the annals of unionism in this country at all approached the rapidity of the growth which ensued. Within a few weeks the union appears to have been joined by at least half a million members, including tens of thousands of farm laborers and women. This tion or absorption of existing organizations was very easy. Still, the extension of new lodges, in previously unorganized trades and districts must have been in great measure due to the fact that, as no discoverable regular contribution was exacted for central expenses, the affiliawas enormous. . . . A positive mania for trade unionism set in. In In December, 1833, we are told that 'scarcely a branch of trade exists in the West of Scotland that is not now in a state of union.' The Times reports that two delegates who went to Hull enrolled in one evening a thousand men of various trades. . . . Shop assistants on the one hand and journayman chimneysweeps on the other were swept into the vortex. The Cabinet Makers of Belfast insisted on joining 'the Trades Union, or Friendly Society, which had for its object the unity of all Cabinet Makers in the three kingdoms." We hear of 'Ploughmen's Unions' as far as Perthshire and of a 'Shearman's Union' at Dundee. And the then rural character of the metropolitan suburbs is quaintly brought home to us by the announcement of a union of the 'agricultural and other laborers' of Kensington, Walham Green, Fulham and Hammersmith. Nor were the women neglected. The 'Grand Lodge of Operative Bonnet Makers' vies in activity with the miscellaneous 'Grand Lodge of the Women of Great Britain and Ireland'; and the 'Lodge of Female Tailors' asks indignantly whether the 'Tailors' Order is really going to prohibit women from making waistcoats!" (History of Trade Unionism, Webb, pp. 119-122.)

Under Owen's teaching the trade unionist came to believe that it was possible, by a universal non-political organization of wage earners to raise wages and shorten the hours of labor "to an extent which at no very distant time, would give them the whole proceeds of their labor. 'Under the system proposed by Owen the instruments of production were to become the property, not of the whole community, but of the particular set of workers who used them. The trades unions were to be transformed into national companies to carry on all the manufactures. The Agricultural Union was to take possession of the land, the Miners' Union of the Mines, the textile unions of the factories. Each trade was to be carried on by its particular trade union, centralized in one 'Grand Lodge.'" (History of Trade Unionism, Webb, p. 144.)

In the opinion of Owen, the new moral world would be established in six months. The change from the capitalist system to a complete organization of industry, under voluntary associations of producers, was to come suddenly upon society, like a thief in the night. "One year," declared a disciple of Owen, "may disorganize the whole fabric of the old world, and transfer by a sudden spring the whole political government of the country from the master to the servant."

In this early pre-Marxian attempt to form one big industrial union we find every idea of the revolutionary unionist of today. The latter have not contributed a single new thought or doctrine that was not a part of the philosophy of this early Utopian Socialism. Low dues, organization by industry, the gathering together of all workmen in one big general union, the injury of one is the concern of all, the decentralization of power, the general strike, the entire reorganization of the world in the interest of the workers, and the conduct of all industry by industrial unions—every idea of modern syndicalism was embraced in the movement led by Robert Owen.

It spread like a conflagration throughout England. It flared up in a manner that brought terror to the ruling classes; and, after a blinding flash of light, it was smothered out and trampled into the dust by two simple weapons of the employing class—the lockout and the courts.

The employers organized their opposition and every man connected with the new movement was locked out and every leader was blacklisted. Instantly the new union was overwhelmed with the demands for aid from its impoverished members. The general strike was converted into a lockout and the lockout into a complete rout of the enormous masses of utterly helpless and impoverished trade unionists.

The leaders were arrested, tried and convicted. Some of them were sentenced to seven years' transportation. Enormous subscriptions were raised by the general union; stupendous petitions were circulated. Boycotts, strikes and riots were resorted to, but "by the end of the summer," says Sidney and Beatrice Webb, "it was obvious that the ambitious projects of the Grand National Consolidated and other 'trade unions' had ended in invariable and complete failure. In spite of the rising prosperity of trade the strikes for better conditions of labor had been uniformly unsuccessful. In July, 1831, the federal organizations all over the country were breaking up. The great association of half a million members had been completely routed. . . . Of the actual dissolution of the organization we have no contemporary record but the impression which it made on the sober trade unionists may be gathered from the following description which appeared in a working class journal seven years afterwards:

"'We were present,' says the editor of the Trades Journal, 'at many meetings of the Grand National Consolidated Trades Union, and have a distinct recollection of the excitement that prevailed in them—of the apparent determination to carry out its principles in opposition to every obstacle; of the enthusiasm exhibited by some of the speakers; of the noisy approbation of the meeting; the loud cries of "Hear! Hear!" "Bravo!" "Hurrah!" "Union Forever!" etc. It was the opinion of many at that time that little real benefit would be effected by this union, as their proceedings were indicative, not of calm and dispassionate investigation of the causes of existing evils, but of an overexcited state of mind, which would speedily evaporate, and leave them in the same condition as before. The event proved that this opinion was not ill-founded. A little molehill obstructed their onward progress and, rather than commence the labor of removing so puny an obstacle, they chose to turn back, each taking his own path, regardless of the safety or the interests of his neighbor. It was painful to see the deep mortification of the generals and leaders of this quickly-inflated army when left deserted and alone upon the field.'" History of Trade Unionism, Webb, pp. 137-138.)

The General Strike—V.—Is It a Disease of Infancy?

(By Robert Hunter. Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

WILLIAM D. HAYWOOD and other advocates of the general strike invariably call to our attention the effectiveness of this weapon in France, Spain, Italy and Russia. Some have even mentioned China and Japan. They tell us that in these countries there is industrial unionism and that marvelous results have come to the working class through the general strike. Of course they do not mean the general strike. All they mean is that various craft unions or industrial unions declare sympathetic strikes.

Now it is an interesting fact that it is in exactly these countries that labor organization is most backward. Unionism is there in its infancy. Even in France, the most developed industrially of the countries mentioned, the trade union movement is far behind that of Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Austria, Britain, etc.

Legien, the leader of the great German unions, said, at the International Socialist Congress, at Stuttgart: "The French Comrades are accustomed to say, 'We have no organization, but we have a temperament.' It is not with temperament that one fights the employer. As soon as the French have an actual trade union organization they will cease discussing blindly the general strike, direct action and sabotage."

Vliegen, the Dutch leader, declared at the previous congress, at Amsterdam, "It is not the representatives of the strong trade union organizations of England, Germany and Denmark who wish the general strike; it is the representatives of France, Russia and Holland, where the trade union organization is feeble or does not exist."

Chauvin, a French leader, makes the same observation: "Wherever powerful trade unions exist, they do not speak of the general strike; wherever they are unanimous for the general strike, the trade unions are feeble. We, the adversaries of the general strike, are the most active partisans of trade union organization. I have myself organized in Paris one of the strongest of the trade unions. If there were in Paris some strong trade unions that would be the end of the influence of the general strikeists."

Iglesias, the best known Spanish Socialist, declares that the general strike agitation in Spain is conducted solely by the anarchists. "They carry on," he says, "a constant agitation against strike funds. What they want is simply that the workers, made desperate by famine and by refusal of the masters to grant them all they demand, should be driven to violent measures. What have been the results of the attempts at a general strike? Not one success and always immense injury to the workers. Here the dissolution of an organization; there lawsuits and persecutions; some other place many 'militants' dispatched to the cemetery or to prison."

Speaking of the strike at Barcelona, he says: "There was not among these thousands of workers either unity of thought or plan of action. After having thoroughly plagued the population for days and days, the workers had nothing left but to return to work, without having obtained anything for the metallurgists. The only result of this adventure was bloodshed in several encounters between the workmen and the soldiers, leaving many dead and a great number of prisoners."

Greulich, the wonderful veteran of the Swiss labor movement, declares that "all the attempts at general strikes have hurt the workers themselves, destroyed organizations formed with difficulty, and consequently obliged the workers to toil again at building up their movement. Wasting of power. It is easy to demonstrate that there where the general strike is preached the organization of the unions is very much retarded. By the fruits one recognizes the tree. There where the unions have acquired a sure power and a certain vitality, the general strike is considered by the workers as a Utopia.

"The general strike is a childish fancy of poorly-organized workers. The English workers lived in this dream from about 1830-1840, and they made many times remarkable attempts to realize this dream—attempts compared with which the 'general strike' of today is but child's play. They covered entire industrial centers and stopped work in all the factories and mines. The revolutionary energy was not lacking in them where they met with resistance; they besieged factories and set fire to them; they fought valiantly with the police and the military. And if the general strike had been really a decisive power, England would not have had enough soldiers to render herself the master."

A short time ago Gustave Herve, the most daring and brilliant of all the advicates of direct action, wrote of the great German victories: Turning in contrast to France, he said: "We have, by means of our internal dissensions, our sterile discussions of personalities, developed a party on the one hand and a general Federation of Labor on the other, equally stagnant, with equally ridiculous inefficiency, treasuries without money, journals without readers, and have engendered demoralization, skepticism and disgust.

"In truth, I begin to ask myself if with our great phrases of insurrection, direct action, sabotage and 'chasing the foxes,' we are not, after all, from a revolutionary point of view, but little children beside the Socialist voters of Germany?"

Now, these quotations are given because they all emphasize one point—that the general strike is a childish fancy of poorly organized workers. "Are we but little children?" asks Herve. When to the infancy of the French union movement poverty is added, there is reason enough why that movement should be violent. "The fundamental condition which determines the policy of "direct action," says Dr. Louis Levine in his excellent monograph on "The Labor Movement in France," "is the poverty of French syndicalism. Except the Federation du Livre, only a very few federations pay a more or less regular strike benefit; the rest have barely means enough to provide for their administrative and organizing expenses and can not collect any strike funds worth mentioning. In 1908, for instance, there were 1073 strikes; of these 837 were conducted by organized workingmen. Only in forty-six strikes was regular assistance assured for the strikers, and in thirty-six cases only was the assistance given in money. The French workingmen, therefore, are forced to fall back on other means during strikes. Quick action, intimidation, sabotage, are then suggested to them by their very situation and by their desire to win."

The greatest general strike the world has ever known was at the very beginning of the trade union movement in England. The American Railway Union was involved in a tremendous strike almost before it had begun its great work of organization. The history of the Knights of Labor and of every other movement for organizing labor, shows the same thing that we now see in France, Italy, Spain and Russia. Wherever the workers are first organized they resort to mass strikes; and every group that has attempted to organize the workers has had, sooner or later, to adopt rules and regulations to prevent strikes.

This is true, even, of the "revolutionary" Industrial Workers of the World. Trautmann, at the convention of 1906, declared that "the organization underwent so many so-called wild strikes that it is the duty of this convention to adopt such laws as will prevent the calling of strikes by the will or by the determination of two or three men. . . . If any individual may call a strike, or if any organization may be organized and precipitate a struggle we may just as well say "disband!' . . . There must be a regulation.

Of course, what William D. Haywood calls the general strikes of France, Italy, Spain and elsewhere, are not general strikes in any sense whatever. They are little more than wild, unruly and disorganized mobs, who leave their workshops for a time "to descend," as they say in France, "into the street."

They are the product of a mob psychology that seems to be aroused to action whenever and wherever the workers first begin to realize the faintest glimmering of solidarity. The strike of the A. R. U. was a masterpiece of organization compared with most of the strikes in Russia, Spain, Italy or France The recent great strikes in Britain, the Dockers' strike in London in 1899 and the recent Swedish strike are all masterly demonstrations of what really organized men can do. But the strikes which have been called to our attention as examples for the American movement to follow are but diseases of an infantile trade unionism.

For some reason, the recent advocates of such mob uprisings fail to mention that nearly every such strike has been followed by reaction. As the officials of the Industrial Workers of the World were forced to call out for regulation to prevent utter ruin, so have all other actual organizations had to do likewise, after the early spasms of revolt. Every single trade union in England, after the general strikes of the Owen period, pleaded with the workers to forswear strikes forever. ". . . 'Keep from it (striking),' said the Stone Masons of England, 'as you would from a ferocious animal that you know would destroy you. . . . Remember what it was that made us so insignificant in 1842. . . . We implore you, brethren, as you value your own existence, to avoid, in every way possible, those useless strikes. Let us have another year of earnest and attentive organization: and, if that does not perfect us, we must have another: for it is a knowledge of the disorganized state of workingmen generally that stimulates the tyrant and the taskmaster to oppress them.' A few years later the Liverpool lodge invites the support of all the members for the proposition 'that our society no longer recognize strikes.' . . . The Portsmouth lodge caps this proposal by insisting, not only that strikes should cease, but also that the word 'strike' be abolished. The Flint Glass Makers' Magazine between 1850 and 1855, is full of similar denunciations. 'We believe,' writes the editor, 'that strikes have been the bane of trade unions.' "

It is the fear of just such appalling reactions, which invariably arise from a stunned, defeated and exhausted labor movement, that has led every constructive Socialist and trade union leader in this country and in Europe, to deplore the general strike agitation. "The question of the general strike," said Legien, at the International Congress of 1900, "is not at this moment discussable for this very simple reason that when one seeks war it is first necessary to begin by forming the battalion which can fight. So long as the working class do not possess numerous and powerful trades unions, it will be desirable only in the interest of capitalism to declare the general strike, because this general strike can have only one consequence, and that will be to deliver the working class into the hands of the capitalist, who will shoot it down or impoverish it."

Legien ended by advising, "Organize, First"; and, turning to the advicates of the general strike, he added: "You, French and Italians, who wish the general strike—you have only to commence by recruiting your armies."

SEVEN STATES HAVE MOUNTAINS ABOVE 13,000 FEET.

There are three states which can boast of mountain peaks exceeding 14,000 feet in height above sea level, according to the United States Geological Survey. They are California, with Mount Whitney, 14,501 feet—the highest mountain in the United States, exclusive of Alaska—Colorado, with Mount Massive and Mount Elbert, each 14,402 feet; and Washington, with Mount Rainier, 14,363 feet. Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico and Nevada all have mountain peaks exceeding 13,000 feet in height.

CLASSIFICATION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

An Important and interesting effect upon the scientific work of the Geological Survey has resulted from the work in land classification. The constantly increasing demand for both completeness and exactness of information regarding the mineral resources of the public lands under classification have developed methods and scope of view in this economic work that have exerted a marked influence on the geologic work in other areas.

Thus, the training and methods developed in the course of the classification of the coal lands have brought about higher standards of refinement in stratigraphy, as well as in economic work, in other regions of the country. Another very notable illustration of scientific results springing from the study of economic problems is found in the administration of the Weeks act, providing for the purchase by the Federal government of certain forested lands which may affect the flow of navigable streams. The intensive hydrometric experimental studies carried on in order actually to show, in accordance with the terms of the law, the degree of protection afforded by forests to soil and water in certain areas proposed for purchase as national forests have resulted in empirical determinations and demonstrations of high scientific value as well as of tangible economic importance.—From Annual Report, Director United States Geological Survey.

WORK ON ORE DEPOSITS.

Investigations Under Way and Planned by the United States Geological Survey.

One of the largest contributions made by the United States Geological Survey to the world's knowledge has been the store of scientific and practical truths accumulated and presented in its monographic publications descriptive of our great mining districts. The detailed investigation of these more productive localities is being continued; but the present policy of the Survey is to devote more attention than formerly to work of other classes, such as the prompt reconnaissance examination of new districts with the purpose of making available a general knowledge of the local geology in aid of the prospectors at the early stage of their work, and the preparation of reports dealing comprehensively with the geology and ore deposits of different states, such as Professional Paper 68, "Ore Deposits of New Mexico," by Lindgren, Graton and Gordon, issued in 1910. The Survey now has in active preparation summary reports on the geology and ore deposits of Utah and of Idaho, and a similar report on Arizona is planned, but its completion must await some additional reconnaissance surveys in that state.

These two classes of investigation will be of direct help to the practical mining man. Another line of work which, although of no less real benefit to the mining industry, will appeal more especially to the highly trained technical men—the mining geologists and mining engineers—consists of special investigations relating to the problems of ore deposition. A bulletin of this type on the subject of sulphide enrichment, by W. H. Emmons, is already in press.

As evidence of the wide distribution of the mining districts which are being studied may be cited the fact that reports are in various stages of preparation relating to the Randsburg district and Shasta county in California, the Ely district in Nevada, the Ray, Miami and Tombstone districts in Arizona, the San Francisco and Tintic districts in Utah, the Central City, Creede and Leadville districts in Colorado, the Terlingua district in Texas, the Joplin district in Missouri and the Ducktown district in Tennessee. A report on the red iron ores of Tennessee is also being prepared.

THOUGHTS OF AN UNEMPLOYED.

By W. E. G.

The jagged stones of a city's street bruised my feet and made me think.

The works of man seemed cold like unto death; I wished that I were dead, or that I had not been a man; there seemed no place for me, since all the places, high and low, were owned.

I viewed the hideous piles of brick and stone in which men delve and die for husks that they may live.

The whole scheme of exploitation was written therein; the mortar cried of pain, the glass and iron told of cruel want and hate.

I saw the largeness of the tragedy of life in the fear of want, the craven image that gave birth to the system wherein we give each other stones for bread and keep the bread for worms to eat.

Again I stood and shivered when the cobble stones were cold, in a world of men unloved, whose birthright was in pawn before their birth to others fat and clothed and fed—dead selves, whose faces imaged a savage greed.

I watched the great, unloved, unwashed, that passed me by, driven by the fear of want to battle madly for what? For love, for life, for peace and happiness? No, all these will they barter to satisfy a greed that's in us all.

The shadow of a great want was in their faces, the shadow that makes of men a cringing pack of unsatisfied wolves.

They hurried to and fro and knew not that what they wished was BROTHERHOOD, not husks and piles of brick and stone.

But in this madness lives the hope that out of the cruelty and selfishness of today will be born the gentleness and unselfishness of tomorrow.

And then I seemed to see within this coarser mesh of things the soul of man unfold.

SEE THE UNEMPLOYED.

Ellis O. Jones, in Life.

"See the unemployed!"

"I do. What a bedraggled, spiritless, sodden-looking crowd they are, to be sure. Cannot something be done for their relief, O Sage?"

"Most assuredly something can be done for their relief, but as you will know, to do the sensible thing would not be desirable."

"I know nothing of the sort. The sensible thing is to put them at work at reasonable wages, and I think of nothing more desirable than that men who wish to work should be allowed to work."

"I am surprised at your ignorance. The unemployed are absolutely necessary to civilization."

"I am sure you are wrong for once, O Sage."

"Let us see. If all men were employed, then there would be no unemployed. Am I right?"

"Obviously."

"And, if there were no unemployed, there would be no strikebreakers when men went out on strike. Is it not so?"

"It is."

"And, accordingly, when men struck, the employers would either have to concede the demands of the workmen or close their plants."

"Yes."

"And as a small profit is better than no profit at all, employers would not close their shops except as a very last resort."

"Surely."

"And so employés would become as arrogant as employers are now and employers would become as meek as employés are now. Do you follow me?"

"I think I do. That would be a terrible state of affairs, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, for the employers."

OIL AND GAS IN OKLAHOMA.

Report of Investigation Issued by United States Geological Survey.

In the early part of 1912 Robert H. Wood of the United States Geological Survey, made an investigation of the oil and gas developments in north-central Oklahoma, visiting localities where producing wells and test holes had been sunk. His report has just been issued by the Survey as Bulletin 531-B, a copy of which may be obtained on application to the Director of the Survey at Washington, D. C. In addition to collecting well data, Mr. Wood made some observations on the structure and character of the formations exposed at the surface. Nearly all the information concerning the wells was furnished either by oil companies or by local citizens. The region included in the report comprises lands formerly within the Pawnee, Otoe, Ponca, Kaw and Tonkawa Indian reservations. The principal towns within the area are Guthrie, Pawnee, Perry, Ponca, Newkirk and Blackwell.

Oil has been known east of these reservations, in the Cherokee and Creek nations, since the late 80s. Development started in the vicinity of Alluwe, Bartlesville and Muskogee in the early 90s, but little was done until the early part of the last decade. In 1906 the famous Glenn pool, near Sapulpa, was discovered and it has proved to be a phenomenal producer. Encouraged by results obtained in these fields prospectors soon began drilling farther west and in the region embracing the five Indian reservations mentioned. Foreign capitalists have sunk a number of holes in widely separated localities, and many local companies have drilled in an effort to reach oil or gas.

In the opinion of Mr. Wood, this area must be regarded as possibly oil producing, because, in the first place, all the productive sands of the main field to the east dip under the area at a low angle, and the lowest sand at the deepest point in the western part should not be more than 4,200 feet beneath the surface; and in the second place, there are a large number of sands throughout the area, nearly all of which, from the highest at Ponca to the lowest at Cleveland, have been productive in some locality or other, and several sands have been found to be productive in the same well. The fact that a number of dry holes have been reported can not condemn even the immediate region around them, because very few of the wells are deep enough to be thorough tests. Besides, owing to the variability in thickness and porosity of the sand, in developed territory dry holes are common alongside producers, and even near gushers. Therefore the prospects for the development of a number of pools in this area seem to be good. To prevent unnecessary loss of money in fruitless and expensive drilling wells should be located with careful regard to the geologic structure.

A copy of the report may be obtained free on application to the Director of the Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

A CONCISE STATEMENT FROM CRAIG MINERS' UNION.

Owingsville, Kentucky, December 26, 1912.

Ernest Mills:

Dear Sir and Brother—I desire that all fellow-workers shall know the manner in which the mine barons have treated their workers. They work them at a wage of $1.10 a day, charge them $3 for a house, $1 for doctor bill, $4 for coal, and you have to take an order for wages and the order is shaved 10 cents on the dollar. Under such conditions how can a man keep the wolf of hunger and starvation from his door?

In the year 1910 there was a man who had worked for a number of years. The weather got cold and he didn't have any money; he told the company that his wife and child were starving, and freezing with the cold. They told him that they didn't care if the whole bunch died and went to perdition. They would not give him anything, and as a result the child lost its fingers and toes on account of the cold. There was another man who had 75 cents due him and he had a wife and five children that were without food for two days, and he asked the company for the 75 cents he had due him. He was told that no order would be written for him, even though he starved and went to limbo before morning. They gave us water to drink that was taken out of the ponds and creeks. Men who worked by the ton gave two thousand, two hundred and fifty pounds, and if there was discovered one rock in the car, they docked him from five hundred to a thousand pounds. The company here is made up of a gang of robbers.

There was another man who had $25 due him, but when pay day came the company brought him out in debt. Under such circumstances, why should we not fight for our rights? We are going to win this strike. The papers published in this part of the country are filled with falsehoods against the strikers, and those papers that are owned and controlled by the company laud the robbers for their generosity.

Trusting that you will publish this statement, in order that the members of the Western Federation of Miners may know the conditions we are battling against, I remain Yours fraternally, HOLT WARREN, President Craig Miners' Union No. 245.

GOEBEL WANTS TO KNOW.

George H. Goebel of New Jersey has sent the following letter to the editor of the national organ of the Prohibition party:
"Editor Clean Politics, Indianapolis, Indiana:

"Dear Sir—I receive from you from time to time appeals for aid of your paper and the Prohibition cause, which it advocates. I suggest you cut my name off the list to whom you send such appeals, as it will save you postage that brings no return.

"I am a Socialist. I was for many years one of the most active and best-known members of the Prohibition party in this country, delegate to its national conventions, speaker for it in many states, national secretary of the Junior Prohibition Leagues, etc. This being the case, I have always respected and understood the Prohibitionists and been disposed now and then to help them to a hearing, futile as I am convinced is their method of reaching the evils of intemperance.

"It was this that made me originally take your paper, and that letter made me respond to your request to renew for three years. And for so doing I had the pleasure (?) of reading in your paper that the Socialist party was a liquor party, followed by other statements of a worse nature. Then, for good measure, I suppose, you added the cowardly trick, in speaking of the shooting of Roosevelt, of saying that the Associated Press spoke of Schrank as a Socialist, thus avoiding personal responsibility for the statement, but nevertheless allowing your readers to get the thought that a Socialist had done the shooting, and indirectly that the Socialist party stood for murder. Nor have I, in reading your paper, been able to find where later you at any time take the trouble nor show fair play enough to point out that Schrank instead of being a Socialist, was a member of a Republican club and such a good Catholic that he resisted the police, depriving him of the rosary worn around his neck.

"Suppose you some day define why the Socialist party is a liquor party. As a former Prohibitionist I think I know in advance what your reply will be.

"When you have given it I will ask you to explain your relation as a Prohibitionist to capitalism and the manifestations of its workings as now seen in the coal fields of West Virginia, where martial law is declared against starving miners, where mothers are compelled to give birth to their children in the open roadway because of eviction due to their husbands refusing longer to be slaves. I speak of West Virginia in particular because your paper informs me that its editor has all his savings invested in West Virginia coal mine stock.

"If voting the ticket of a party which does not specifically declare war on the liquor traffic makes a member of that party responsible for, and a partner in, the curse of intemperance, then why does not the direct ownership of stock in these West Virginia coal mines entitle every underpaid and slave-driven miner, every harassed mother and every ill-fed, ill-kept and ill-educated child to point the finger at you and say with a thousand times more truth that you are partners in all the growing iniquities of capitalism, with its growing wealth to the few and growing poverty to the many? WHY NOT? Very truly yours, GEORGE H. GOEBEL."

A CLUMP OF WILD IRIS.

By W. E. G.

A man tired of the strife with self and men was on the way to his work, in the midst of the daily tumult of trade, where men wearily delve mid husks for bread.

He was oppressed by the chaos of life through which men work and grope their way, when suddenly he was attracted by a picture, merely a clump of wild iris.

Like a flash it brought to him a keen realization of the emptyness of the sordid struggle men put up for the artificialities of life; he knew, for he was part of that struggle, and like most men, he was not satisfied.

A great restlessness filled his soul, for that picture took him back to a time years before, when a mere guileless, barefoot child he had stood in the early morn, on the edge of a plum-tree thicket that grew here and there in ravines that furrowed the then wild and grassy plains of Kansas, and beheld the wee purple blooms of wild Iris sparkling with dew.

How pure! What wondrous color! He had hardly dared to touch them, and nearby pink brier roses, with sensitive, fragrant blossoms; and the red dish-brown flowers of Gaillardia, which later on as a boy he had fastened to his arrows when playing Indian, and bending double his plum wythe bow, had shot them high into the Kansas blue as signals in an imaginary struggle with phantom foes.

Now, as he surveyed the real foe, himself, a well groomed, well-fed, well-to-do man, and thought of the ineffable splendor and wealth that his pure childish heart had beheld in the wild flowers and the deep blue of the sky, he was shocked by a sudden realization of his extreme poverty of the things worth while.

He was heart hungry for the wealth of those guileless days, when he had beheld diamonds in every dew drop on every blade of grass and nuggets of gold in the wild seed pods; where grasshoppers, tumble bugs, rear horses and fire flies had peopled an enchanted world where worry and selfishness were not even dreamed of.

Just to be able to go back once more to that tranquility and serenity in life. Impossible thought he; it is always forward; around and around, up and ever up, through a chaos of tumult.

Oh, whence and why this lie in life?

Surely life must be good, not part of it, but all of it; the whole of it and that which seemeth evil to us must ultimately work out for good.

He had a vision of having passed day after day and year after year along a dusty road, with aching feet, tired back and weary heart.

Brooks, meadows, trees and flowers beckoned from every side to stop awhile and live.

Often he had been captured by the beauty of some spot along the road, UNUSED, but always OWNED, and so he had gone madly on and on.

At last he came to a gate so great that it seemed all men could pass, for the gate was only an open arch of simple lines, and over the arch was written, "Except Ye Become as a Little Child Ye Cannot Enter In."

He passed through into the soul's own country, freed at last from the demon of possession, and then there stretched before him once more grassy, flower-strewn plains of immeasurable breadth, and winding roadways loosing themselves in the azure depths of an ever-receding horizon, and all that he surveyed was his, not to OWN, but to USE.

The ineffable splendor and freedom of life filled him.

Once again he stood guileless as a child, but plus wisdom, for he had circled round and round through the tumult of experience, unconsciously seeking BROTHERHOOD.

He had finished a cycle of life.

The vision vanished; rudely he was thrust back into the world of greed and exploitation, and in a moment was lost in the hurrying throng.

TEDDY AND ANDY—THEY HAVE A CHANGE OF HEART.

Not so long ago Egotistical Teddy, by bitter denunciation and absolutely false accusations, undertook to strangle to death and destroy international Socialism; to sink it forever into oblivion, as it were. All this he was going to accomplish single-handed. Spurred onward by a monstrous vanity and self-conceit, for which he is noted the world over, and singled out from the rest of common humanity, he firmly believed himself equal to the task to which he set himself. The people of this country, however, have very recently exemplified and given notice that they are ripe—quite ripe—for and must have certain reforms—an exemplification nowhere in evidence just a few years ago, when Terrible Teddy, with eyes a-gleam and wrath all a-flame, his hair standing on end and with froth at the mouth—b-r-r-r—was hard at it hurling his wild and foolish tirades against Socialism.

No matter what any of us might ever be called upon to say, either for or against Roosevelt, one thing certain we must all of us bare our heads in recognition of, the fact that he is a diplomat, or at least a politician more cunning and crafty than the craftiest and slicker than the slickest. Hence, our wise Theodore has his finger on the public pulse always. He feels its throbs; he knows just where "he's at," always.

So forgetful of what was ever said by him against Socialism, our wise, and bold, and very consistent Roosevelt proceeded to build in part his "Progressive" platform with something like twenty-one planks that were "swiped" from the Socialist party, all of which, mark you, he only a little while before criticised, and assailed, and condemned in the most scathing, bitter terms. Our Theodore, it would seem, has had a change of heart. But it would seem genuinely so only to the deplorably, if not disgracefully, shallow and senseless thinkers, mind you.

Now comes a certain kindly, silvery-haired old gentleman who believes in, and advocates, and stoutly supports the notion that ex-Presidents should be pensioned, notwithstanding that any ex-President, while President, receives from the people the munificient salary of $75,000 a year, traveling and nearly all other expenses included. He, at the same time, expresses a thorough willingness to have the pensioning charged to his account.

This same gentleman, smitten, it would appear, by the thought of the means he employed during the process of gathering in his ill-gotten "wad," declares that before he shuffles of the mortal coil and prepares to meet his God and give an account of the way he has lived on earth, he will have gotten rid of virtually all of his wealth—that he will die a poor man. He, too, it would seem, has had a change of heart. But not so fast As is the case with the other fellow above referred to; it is obvious that the change of heart in this particular gentleman would also be recognized as ungenuine and bogus to all excepting perhaps the same superficial thinkers and the deaf, dumb and blind, mind you. This selfsame undefiled old gentleman also has for the past twenty years or so busied himself with the building of libraries all over this blessed country of ours, during which time he has all along been hailed as a benefactor to mankind, and by some is classed even with Christ himself as a deliverer of the race. He has been and still is being ardently eulogized and boosted to lofty, dizzy altitudes reaching to the boundless heavens themselves and noisily proclaimed king of philanthropists; but only by cringing, crawling slaves to the invincible $, mind you, who are destitute of all scruples of conscience when it comes to bartering honor and manhood and the betrayal of their toiling brethren for gold, and who worship and make obeisance at the shrine of Mammon.

At sight of one of these library edifices it seems somehow to always take on the appearance of a massive monument all smeared with the life's blood of the laboring man. I seem to see stretched out the cold, pallid, lifeless forms of men—the murdered bodies of martyred workingmen. I seem to see the drooping, sorrowing forms of women in the throes of sobs and tears and anguish, clustered about them a pitiful group of tender, and ragged, and hungry little children also smothered in sobs and moans and wails—the women whom in life the men called wife and their children.

This same philanthropist; this magnanimous builder of libraries, not so long ago changed the scale with his workingmen and robbed them, and when they said something he hired Pinkerton thugs and cut-throats to shoot them down, and then called upon the great state of Pennsylvania to uphold him in his hellish business.

Andrew Carnegie will have enough to do if he will take care of the men he has robbed and plundered and outraged, and the widows he has made, and the orphans he has made. The irrepairable sins of Andrew Carnegie are innumerable and blacker than hell itself. He has crowded helpless men to the wall and robbed them; trampled the blood of Christ under foot and compelled helpless, overworked and underfed mothers to press hungry babes to empty breasts.

If the truth may be said of Carnegie his superostentatious "philanthropies" and "benevolences" reek with the dirt and filth and scum of hypocrisy. He is, in fact, a cruel, rapacious and red-handed brute—a pitiless, cowardly, inhuman monster, with a conscience, or lack of conscience, that would be a discredit to a savage or a grave-robbing hyena—a heart so hard it must have been petrified while still in the cradle; and a soul so small that 10,000 like it could be impaled on the point of a cambric needle.

The building of libraries and the bestowal of leather medals upon heroes and pensions to ex-Presidents be damned! Pension the widows of the men you have murdered, Andy! Give your slaves a living wage!

Having already reached far beyond life's dreary sunset, the black darkness of death will soon overtake you. Do something worth while in your fast-declining years, Andy!. Make ready to face your God!

CONDITIONS AT BINGHAM, UTAH.

Bingham Cañon, Utah, December 30, 1912.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

From letters and reports received here from the outside, the impression seems to be that the strike here is a thing of the past; that the men have surrendered and gone back to work under the same conditions and for the same wages that prevailed prior to the strike. No doubt this impression is due to the exaggerated reports published by the daily press and accepted by many of the members "as the truth, the whole truth. and nothing but the truth."

That strenuous efforts have been made to break the strike, none will deny. The full strength of corporate wealth, assisted by the officials of Salt Lake county, has been used to brow-beat, intimidate and coerce the strikers to go back to work or force them to commit some act of violence that could be used as a pretext to declare martial law. All sorts of indignities and insults were heaped upon the strikers; the rights accorded to men and women under the law and constitution were ignored and trampled under foot by the gunmen and deputies employed by the Utah Copper Company and on whose manly (?) breast was pinned the "star" of authority by the sheriff of Salt Lake county.

These slimy creatures; these fawning sycophants and corporation lick-spittles, lost to all sense of manhood, have not hesitated to obey the edicts of the vampires of corporation greed.

But in spite of all the persecution heaped upon them; in spite of the threats of law-breaking gunmen and deputies; in spite of bribes and other inducements, the vast majority of the men who went out on strike the morning of the 18th of September, have been true to their obligation. Rather than prostitute their manhood and hand down to posterity a tarnished name they are leaving their homes and families and all they hold dear to seek employment elsewhere. A tremendous sacrifice, but made that humanity might be raised to a higher standard. All honor to such men; may their number increase.

There are, it is true, some who, lost to all sense of honor; lost to all decency; lost to all the attributes of manhood, have gone back to shambles and by so doing have proclaimed to the world that they are content to be the vassals of the Utah Copper Company, et al.

What a libel on manhood they are! Their eyes are closed to the misery of others; their ears are deaf to the cries of the downtrodden and oppressed. No such thing as brotherhood appeals to them; to be the willing slaves of the corporation and to bask as they think in the sunshine of such men as D. C. Jackling, is to them the crowning ambition of their life. Steeped as they are in their own infamy, they do not realize that they are despised by the very men they are serving. Yet with the assistance of these creatures and others of their kind, the mine operators of this district are making a poor showing, notwithstanding their boastful claims.

In the early part of October, with great acclaim, the Utah Copper Company announced resumption of work. So stupendous was the resumption that Jackling's paper, the Herald-Republican, featured it with photographs, one of them showing deputies touching off blasts. Great was the rejoicing of the menials of the company, and how they proclaimed the news far and wide, and chuckled how they were putting organized labor to route. (Ye gods, what manner of men are these that gloat in their brothers' downfall.)

The kept and prostituted press joined in the welling chorus and ever and anon since that glorious (?) day the public has been regaled with editorial and news menu served a la Jackling style.

It has been iterated and reiterated by Jackling and his satellites that everything was normal; that they were getting out an enormous tonnage; that they had all the men they needed; yet in spite of all this verbosity and pomposity, their own official reports belie their statements. It is customary for the Utah Copper to give out a monthly statement of its production, etc. This statement generally appears the fore part or the middle of the following month.

The November report did not appear till the latter part of this month. In it they are forced to admit that they are still suffering from labor troubles and they confess that their output has not been up to their expectations; in fact they are twenty million pounds (20,000,000) of copper short. Now, this certainly ought to bring joy to the stockhloders. The McNeill, Jackling, Penrose et al. methods of fighting organized labor pays (?).

In yesterday's paper Jackling complains of the weather and goes on to say that the mills at Garfield are not in a condition to handle the ore and consequently the ore is freezing in the cars. Is it not strange that we did not hear something of this last winter? The facts of the case are, the mills at Garfield are badly in need of repairs and the company has not competent men to repair them, and it is therefore no wonder that they are unable to handle the ore. Then, too, we are reliably informed that the rock that the company is shipping is half waste. The company is a long ways from being normal, and no one knows it better than they do. They have scoured the country from one end to the other to secure men to work their property and have not been successful. They are endeavoring to man the machines with Japs, put three Japs to the machine. If one of their old men reports for work, the Japs are taken off the machines and put to doing something else. The main bank of the mine is not being worked at this writing, and this, when conditions are normal, teems with activity. Then, too, they have no bank men and these are very essential to keep the banks in a safe and workable condition. Taking everything into consideration, the mining companies here have nothing to crow over; they have met a foeman worthy of their steel, and their attempt to crush organized labor has not as yet resulted in a victory for them. The industrial war is on in Bingham Cañon, Utah, and will continue until the mine operators concede a living wage and better working conditions. Until such a time, all workmen will avoid Bingham Cañon, as they would a pestilence.

E. G. LOCKE.

THE TWO SYSTEMS.

By Plebs.

There are two systems, and only two under which any industry is, or can be, run.

One is private ownership, or capitalism, under which a few individuals called a firm, or a number of stockholders called a corporation, own all the buildings, machinery, tools, etc., which are used in making the product.

These owners, who are known as capitalists, hire other men to do the manual labor necessary and give them a part of the product, which is called wages.

The owners, or capitalists, keep the rest of the product, which is called profit.

The wages of the wage-earners are determined by competition; that is, when an employé is wanted, and ten apply for the job, the man, woman or child who the employer thinks will do the most work for the least pay will get the job. So you see that under private ownership wages constantly tend toward the smallest amount which the worker can work for and keep alive on. The price of the product used to be fixed by competition also, but this is not, as a rule, true today, because the owning class, which is not like the working class, driven to a fierce competition by the fear of starvation, have learned that they can make much larger profits by combining and agreeing on the price of their product than they can by competing, which always lowers prices.

For the past twenty years this country has tried to destroy combinations and restore competition, with the result that the attempt has been a complete failure, for the simple reason that there is no known method under the capitalist system whereby two or twenty men can be prevented from coming together in private and fixing the price of the article which they sell, and selling it at that price.

Let us now look at the industrial system known as collective ownership, or Socialism. This idea is now partly operative in the publicly-owned post-office, the public schools, the public roads and bridges (which were once privately owned), the police system, the public fire department, the public water works and the Panama canal.

The Socialists want the same power to dig the copper and the coal and the oil wells that dug the Culebra cut. They want the highways made of steel rails owned and operated by the public, like the highways made of macadam. They want the mills and factories that make the boots and shoes, and the clothing we must wear, and the brick and lumber we must build our houses of, to be owned and operated by the same power that has shown itself capable of building and operating such a complex machine as the modern battleship.

And we want them democratically operated.

Now, why do Socialists want us to own and operate these industries for our own benefit, instead of allowing a few people to own and operate them for their own profit? Does not the question answer itself? This is the reason: The owning class under private ownership is under a constant temptation to do three things.

First—To increase the price of the product, because that means more profit.

Second—To decrease wages to the lowest possible point, because that means more profit.

Third—To adulterate the goods and cheat on the quantity, because that means more profit.

Under collective ownership no one would have the incentive to do any of these things because the people as a whole would own and control. Can it be doubted that the people would insist on having prices as low as possible, wages as high as possible and goods as good as possible?

The wage worker receives under private ownership less than one-half of what he would get under collective ownership, for the simple reason that under collective ownership there would be no individuals standing between the worker and his earnings to absorb the larger part of them.

Whenever we, the people, shall decide to have our food, our clothing and our shelter provided at cost, instead of paying over one-half profit, we can do so, just as we now have our education at cost, and our postal service practically at cost.

But, you say, I am sure that my employer doesn't get all the profit that you say he does.

No; your employer doesn't get it all, or nearly all. But did you ever stop to think that your employer has to pay a profit on the factory and land he occupies, called rent, a profit on the gas and electric light and coal he burns, a profit on the raw material he buys, a profit on the tools, machinery and every other thing he uses, and that if the collectively owned land and factory supplied gas, electric light and fuel at cost, and supplied tools, machinery and all supplies used at cost—did you ever stop to think that this abolition of profit would mean a reduction of the cost of living to you of more than one-half.

Now, the Socialists cannot accomplish this all at once, but want to commence and carry on as fast as possible the process of transferring the various industries from private to public ownership.

How?

Well, there are three ways:

First—Confiscate them, as we did with the slave property in the Civil War.

Second—Buy them, giving bonds in payment, to be paid gradually just as we have bought our water systems.

Third—Establish government factories to sell at cost, which would put privately-owned industries, which must make a profit, out of existence.

When the people decide to have Socialism they will also have the opportunity to decide which method they prefer to bring it about.

Meanwhile the number of believers in collective ownership grows every year, and the Socialist party, the only party which stands for this principle, invites all who believe in it to support this great movement by the only feasible method, the expression of their opinion by means of the BALLOT.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Tribute Paid to Jean Daniel Debs and Marguerite Bettrich Debs, by Their Son Eugene, on Behalf of the Family, at Their Golden Wedding Anniversary, Terre Haute, Indiana, September 13, 1899.

The celebration of a golden wedding is a rare occurrence in the history of families; only to the favored few is such a blessing vouchsafed. It is an occasion when nuptial vows pledged at Hymen's altar take on inexpressible sacredness. A far distant day is reached when "two souls with but a single thought" and two loving hearts that "beat as one," courageously and confidently entered upon the voyage of matrimonial life. Thomas Moore, inspired by the genius of love, rapturously sang:

"There's a bliss beyond all that the minstrel has told,
When two, that are linked in one heavenly tie,
With heart never changing and brow never cold,
Live on thro' all ills, and love on till they die."

It is not given to us children and grandchildren, who meet today at the old home shrine to lay our offerings, consecrated by our affection, upon the family altar, to know the heart and soul yearnings of our aged parents to find some favored spot, some oasis in the desert, where they could build a home and enjoy the fruitions of peace and contentment amidst a family of bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked and merry-voiced children.

In fancy's eye we see their beautiful and vine-clad native France; we see them in the bloom and strength of youth, standing at the altar and pledging to each other unchanging fidelity in storm and shine, ready to meet the future as the days unfolded their duties, their opportunities, their tasks and trials, sustained by a faith and hope which cheered them on their pilgrimage through all their married days.

Those of us who have reached years of maturity and are here with wives and husbands and children's children, may in fancy's telescopic vision see the youthful pair leaving the old for the new world, whispering to each other with brimful eyes and quivering lips:

"Go where we will, this hand in thine,
Those eyes before me smiling thus,
Through good and ill, through storm and shine,
The world's a world of love for us."

And such has been the world to them. Love has been their guiding star; no cloud ever obscured it; and the darker the day of adversity the brighter shone their love which bathed their home and our home in its mellow, cheering light.

In celebrating this golden wedding anniversary, all the halcyon days of our lives are included and there come to us messages from the past, under the sea and over the land, burdened with the aroma of violets and roses, caught from the flower gardens of memory, planted in youth and blooming in perennial beauty to old age.

I confess to you, my venerable parents, and to you my sisters and brothers, and to those of younger generations, to overmastering emotions of love and gratitude as I survey this family scene, never to be pictured again save upon the canvas of our memories. But I would voice no requiem note. Today our ears are not attuned to the dirge's mournful cadence. This is not the occasion for planting weeping willows, the cypress or the ivy vine—

"Creeping where grim death is seen."

Here the mingled cup of love and gratitude and joy, brimful, is quaffed in honor of an event which to us all is a priceless benediction; but, if from its fountain a tear mingles with the draught to sparkle on the brim of the loving cup, it bears testimony that our hearts are touched by feelings as divine as ever sanctified human affection.

The serenity, the rare loveliness of this scene create emotions which no words, however fitly chosen, can express. I can but say in the name of my sisters and my brothers and those younger in the bonds of family allegiance to our father—the patriarch of these sons and daughters—that we tender him our warmest congratulations upon this rare occasion. When we greet him our hearts are in our hands; when we kiss his time-furrowed cheeks our hearts are on our lips, and when we congratulate him upon this, his golden wedding anniversary, our hearts are in our words.

Freely do we avow the fealty of our love for his devotion to us, his children, for his watchful guardianship over our giddy footsteps on youth's flowery pathways; and this love is blended with profound veneration for his courage, which no vicissitude could dampen; for his masculine virtues which have endeared him to the home circle; for his spotless integrity of character which has given him the confidence of men, whether in poverty's vale or upon the more elevated plane of prosperity, secured by industry and frugality, and above all, for that parental ambition and self-denial to secure for us an education which should equip his children for respectable and honorable positions in life.

This, my beloved and honored sire, is the tribute of affection your children bring to you today. Your tender and unceasing devotion has won the overflowing gratitude of our hearts, and this thankfulness, this abounding sense of obligation, dearest father, we children with the fingers of our love weave today into a crown and place it on your venerable head, and though the years shall continue to whiten your locks, dim the lustre of your eyes and impair the strength of your manly form, the wealth of our affection shall ever increase, nor shall it cease when the silver cord be loosed and at the final goal you lay all your burdens down.

And now our happy family circle, rejoicing in kindred ties, will fill again the sparkling cup with the ambrosia of affection that we may drink to:

"My mother's voice! how often creep
It's accents on my lonely hours.
Like healing sent on wings of sleep,
Or dew to the unconscious flowers.
I can forget her melting prayer
While leaping pulses fly,
But in the still, unbroken air
Her gentle tone comes stealing by—
And years, and sin, and folly flee,
And leave me at my mother's knee."

There are two words in our language forever sacred to memory—Mother and Home! Home, the heaven upon earth, and mother its presiding angel. To us, children, here today, mother and home have realized all the longing, yearning aspirations of our souls, and now, in this blissful presence, we quaff to our mother this cup full and overflowing with the divine nectar of our love. I need not attempt to recite her deeds of devotion. There is not a page of our memory, not a tablet of our hearts, that is not adorned and beautified by acts of her loving care, in which her heart and her hands, her eyes and her soul, in holy alliance, ministered to our happiness.

There was never a time when there was not a song in her heart, sweeter than Aeolian melody, wooing her children from folly to the blessedness, security, peace and contentment of home. Her children were her jewels in home's shining circle, and if by the fiat of death a gem dropped away, the affectionate care it had received added soulful charm to her lullaby songs when at night she dismissed us and sent us to dreamland repose.

Years of duty and trial, anxiety and care have bowed her form, whitened her hair, dimmed her eyes and robbed her cheeks of their maiden bloom; but O our mother is still to us our beautiful mother. Her heart is as young and loving as when in infancy, in youth and in riper years it throbbed responsive to our plaints; her hands are as beautiful in our eyes as when in our childhood they were laid caressingly upon our heads, and her dimpled fingers smoothed our hair or wooed back to order our truant tresses, and her voice, though less resonant than in the years when she called us from play to duty, has the same cadence as when bending over us she sang the cradle song which lulled to sleep and to dreams.

O our mother! beloved more than any wealth of words could express, your children on this anniversary day of your wedding fifty years ago, offer you, aye shower upon you in the name of filial devotion, all the holiest treasures of garnered affection.

"We give thee all, we can no more,
Though poor the offering be;
Our hearts—our love is all the store
And this we bring to thee."

We hear the wedding bells ringing in celebration of the nuptials of our aged parents—our ears are attuned to their merry chimes and our hearts respond with all the joyousness of a wedding march, for peace and happiness and contentment crown the hour. We do not ask what the future has in store, we only know that we have the bride and groom in our presence, and that it is an inexpressible joy to pledge them anew our unfaltering devotion and our eternal love.

A WORD ABOUT THE INVENTOR.

People Who Say He Would Have No Chance Under Socialism Should Note How He Fares Under Capitalism.

We Socialists are often met with the question: What about the inventor under Socialism? Well, what about him? I am sure that under Socialism the majority of inventors would have much greater consideration than can even be imagined under capitalism. A lot of silly people, who couldn't invent a fly-shewer, have got it into the space where their brains should be that inventors are paltry mercenaries like themselves. The greatest incentive to invention is the love of invention itself, monetary reward the after thought. It is noteworthy that inventors, like poets, are not responsible for the genius within them, and that the expression of faculty demonstrated externally owes society a greater debt than society owes to the individual through which it may be expressed. There are thousands of inventions pigeon-holed in the world today, and for which the inventors thereof have not received anything equivalent to the time expended upon them, and when those inventions do leave the pigeon-hole to materialize, the inventor will find himself either in his box or scrap heaped. Capitalism only rewards the inventor when pressure demands it, and steals what it can lay hands on at every opportunity. What do they do with inventors under capitalism? If you want to know, note the following instance, taken from one of the English daily capitalist newspapers. It is a typical case:

"Information reaches us that the inventor of cold storage, Charles Tellier, is living in indigence at Auteuil, France, and that a subscription has been opened on his behalf. It may surely be taken for granted that the mere mention of the veteran inventor's necessities should be sufficient to ensure his well-being for the remainder of his days. Tellier's association with the art and business of refrigeration dates back about fifty-five years, though it was not until 1868 that he made his first attempt at shipping frozen meat from South America to France. It was not a complete success, but better fortune attended later experiments, and in 1877 a cargo of meat from Buenos Ayres was safely landed at Rouen, France. Since then—almost up to the present day—M. Tellier has devoted himself almost unceasingly to the development of refrigeration, and in 1910 he published a most elaborate work on the subject he had made his life's study. The veteran is now 84 years of age, and is surely, of all men, deserving of spending his few remaining days in peace and comfort."

Such is capitalism's modest reward to the inventor of cold storage—charity. Upon the life's labor of M. Tellier, and the life's labor of the workers operating refrigerating plants and risking health thereabout, massive fortunes are building up on which parasites feast and fatten to their full, luxuriate in all the good things of life to their heart's desire, while the inventor and his co-workers drag out their days in indigent circumstances, which, interpreted, means poverty; semi-starvation, privation and untold suffering. That is how capitalism rewards the inventor, the above one of many concrete illustrations of such rewards. We can be assured that Socialism will not add insult to the injury of the inventor by proffering chariyt in lieu of social reward and recognition. And you anti-Socialists, chew this over for a time.—The Vag, in Syndey People.

REMAKING THE MIDDLE CLASS.

By Joseph E. Cohen.

Some of you may know Mr. Thomas Lawson of Boston. Some of you may even have had business transactions with that gentleman. If you have you are the proud possessor of much valuable experience—however high it cost.

Mr. Lawson is one of those very well-meaning gentlemen whose function it is to show people the way to make a fortune—albeit they generally lose their savings in the process of doing so. Just why this happens, almost invariably, it is, of course, difficult to say, with our present inadequate knowledge of the canals on Mars. Some day we may know.

But that many people are not entitled to the wealth they create or acquire is proved by the ease with which they surrender it to others. This has long been a failing of the working class. And while the members of the upper class are not entirely guiltless either, as witness the fancy prices they pay for second-handed dukes, fake paintings and United States senators, the middle class—or what is called the middle class—are altogether too prone to surrender their moneys to purveyors of green goods, gold bricks and capitalists in general.

You may remember Mr. Lawson's great exposure of frenzied finance.

You may recall that Mr. Lawson succeeded in working up many of his readers into a frenzy for adding to their finance. And you may have watched the would-be frenzied financiers enter the Wall Street pens to be plucked clean.

Naturally, Mr. Lawson felt very badly over this unexpected turn in the wheel of fortune, and felt still worse when those who had left their wool in Wall Street's keeping refused to permit their hides to be taken from them, when Mr. Lawson sounded the call for volunteers to help him "apply the remedy."

Mr. Lawson has been spending these many years since the days of his magazine exposures in deep thinking.

And while Mr. Lawson then vouched that the public was nothing but a job lot of thin-blooded shrimps, who were not worthy of being saved—Mr. Lawson has reconsidered his motion and is now willing to let bygones be bygones and save the dear public.

Besides, the dear public may have accumulated some more blood—and wool and money—in the meantime.

So Mr. Lawson is now hoping to break up the stock market. That is the real cause of the high cost of living, anyway. Strange none of us ever had the slightest suspicion of this fact before, especially when Mr. Lawson was the most reckless operator in the market. Fact is so just the same!

Let those who have coins to shed prepare to shed them now. Once more the great corporations and trusts are going to be made to walk the plank. When they are all overboard the people will have to come into their own, copper and gold and wheat and cotton will be selling at cost, and the era of plenty for all will have come—or, at least, there will be an appreciable increase in the number of those who have no visible means of support.

It is a pity, of course, that Mr. Lawson artlessly succeeds in sending members of the middle class into insolvency, just when the capitalist class is doing its best to increase the number of those in the middle class.

For, since Carnegie is squandering his money right and left, even to the extremity of endowing his ex-Presidents of the United States, and Morgan is buying worthless paintings and gew-gaws, and several ladies of fabulous incomes are paying regular dues in the Progressive party—why, the poor cannot help but become richer and the rich poorer, while the middle class is in grave danger of becoming the real ruling class.

It's a merry game while it lasts. And it lasts just long enough each trip to show upon what a flimsy foundation the whole capitalist system is now rocking.

Meanwhile, let the middle class keep on demanding to be eaten up by the capitalist class.—New York Call.

THE COLLECTION.

I passed the plate in church.

There was little silver, but the crisp bank-notes heaped themselves up high before me.

And ever as the pile grew, the plate became warmer and warmer, until it fairly burned my fingers, and a smell of scorching flesh rose from it, and I perceived that some of the notes were beginning to smoulder and curl, half-browned at the edges.

And I saw through the smoke into the very substance of the money, and I beheld what really was.

I saw the stolen earnings of the poor, the wide margins of wages pared down to starvation.

I saw the underpaid factory girl eking out her living on the street, and the over-worked child, and the suicide of the discharged miner.

I saw poisonous gases from great manufactories spreading disease and death.

I saw despair and drudgery filling the dram shop.

I saw rents screwed out of brother men for permission to live on God's land.

I saw men shut out from the bosom of the earth and begging for the poor privilege to work in vain, and becoming tramps and paupers and drunkards and lunatics, and crowding into alms-houses, insane asylums and prisons.

I saw ignorance and crime growing rank and stifling, filthy slums.

I saw usury, springing from usury, itself again born of unjust monopoly and purchased laws and legalized violence.

I saw shoddy cloth and adulterated food and lying goods of all kinds, cheapening men and women and vulgarizing the world.

I saw hideousness extending itself from coal mine and foundry over forest and river and field.

I saw money grabbed from fellow-grabbers, and swindled from fellow-swindlers, and underneath them the workmen forever spinning it out of his vitals.

I saw all the laboring world, thin and pale and bent and careworn and driven, pouring out this tribute from its toil and sweat into the laps of the richly-dressed men and women in the pews, who only glanced at them to shrink from them with disgust.

I saw money worshipped as a god, and given grudgingly from hoards so great that it could not be missed, as a bribe superstition to a dishonest judge in the expectation of escaping hell.

I saw all this, and the plate burned my fingers so that I had to hold it first in one hand and then in the other; and I was glad when the parson, in his white robes, took the smoking pile from me on the chancel steps, and, turning about, lifting it up and lay it on the altar.

It was an old-time altar, indeed, for it bore a burnt offering of flesh and blood—a sweet savor unto the Meloch whom these people worship with their daily round of human sacrifice.

The shambles are in the temple, as of yore, and the tables of money-changers waiting to be overturned.—Earnest Crosby, in "Swords and Ploughshares."

HE HAS THE CASH.

His neck is thick, his ways are crude;
Men say of him that he is shrewd;
His daughter cuts a dash;
He keeps a lawyer just to show
How far it may be safe to go
Without invading jails and—oh!
He has a lot of cash.

He has a long and mighty reach;
He's coarse in looks and coarse of speech;
His proud son makes a splash.
He does not hesitate at all
To cause a fellow-man to fall,
To crush another to the wall—
He has a lot of cash.

If he were poor he would be one
Of those whom cultured people shun;
His wife's fine jewels flash;
She is applauded for the few
Good deeds that she is moved to do.
I flatter him and so do you—
He has a lot of cash.

S. E. Kiser.

In Memoriam.

Silverton, B. C., December 8th, 1912.

To the Officers and Members of Silverton Miners' Union No. 95, W. F. of M.:

Whereas, Death has again visited our ranks and removed from our midst one of our members, John Collison; and

Whereas, Silverton Miners' Union has lost a true and faithful brother, and the community a true and faithful citizen; be it

Resolved, That we, the officers and members of Silverton Miners' Union, extend to the bereaved relatives our sincere sympathy; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the meeting; a copy sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication; also a copy to the relatives of the deceased, and our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

AS A NEW YEAR'S GIFT for the year 1913, the "higher ups" cut the wages of the employés of the city of Chicago 20 per cent. Glorious Prosperity!

THE JOURNALS that are hurling editorial "dynamite" against the men convicted at Indianapolis, had no condemnation for the railroads that murdered more than 10,000 people last year.

Industrial murder is legitimate because profit is at stake.

THE DEMOCRATS have been away from the federal pie-counter for sixteen years. There will be a feast after March 4th.

BABIES are being sold in New York from $3 to $10. Chattel slavery was shot to pieces in the sixties, but it seems that traffic in human flesh is going on in America's greatest city without the use of the auction block.

MORGAN has declared that there is no "money trust." Morgan, the buccaneer of modern finance, is a cheerful liar.

The pirate who bought old obsolete rifles from the government and then juggled and conspired so that these same rifles were sold back to the government at a profit of 500 per cent., lacks even the honesty of thousands of men who are wearing stripes in a penitentiary.

WE ARE TOLD by the wise men who are upholders of the present industrial system that socialism would destroy incentive. Whose incentive? Not the incentive of the slave who only receives one fifth of the value which his labor creates, but Socialism would destroy the incentive of the exploiter who now takes four-fifths of the value created by labor. The incentive to rob would be removed under Socialism, and for that reason every exploiter and parasite, who live on the sweat of others are arrayed against Socialism.

THE STEEL TRUST, in order to nullify any efforts that may be made to organize its slaves, has announced a slight increase in wages and has likewise declared that its slaves would be permitted to become profit-sharing beneficiaries by purchasing common stock for $66 and preferred stock for $109.

The poor, worn-out chattel of the trust whose wages are but little above the hunger line, will remain stockless, and he will continue to deny himself every luxury in life to coin profit for his masters.

VINCENT ASTOR is but little more than 21 years of age, and yet, he is credited with being worth $65,000,000. He never produced by his own labor any wealth, and yet, on the threshold of young manhood, he is a multi-millionaire.

It is no wonder that millions of struggling men and women in this country are not ten days beyond hunger.

It is no wonder that the "redlight" districts are densely populated; that prisons are crowded, and that charity organizations are swamped by appeals for relief.

THERE WILL BE introduced in the legislature of Pennsylvania a Mother's Compensation Bill, but this measure will be fought by all the power of all the charity organizations of every prominent city of America.

The charity organizations are united with headquarters in New York, and no bill is permitted to go through a legislative body without opposition, that interferes with the graft of these chronic parasites who have made charity a profitable business. Statistics show that it requires $3.00 to distribute $1.00 of charity. The professional grafter wearing the mask of charity has become a shameless beggar and puts most of the proceeds where they will not reach the poor and unfortunate.

Charity is but one of the many results that grow out of an economic system that impoverishes the many and enriches the few. Charity is the substitute which capitalism offers for justice, and until the reign of justice is ushered in, the pastures will be green for the saintly-faced sinners who pay themselves corpulent salaries, under the pretext, that their lives are consecrated to the uplifting of distressed humanity.

Charity organizations have become close corporations, and many of the prominent members of such organizations have discovered that it pays to gather ducats for Lazarus.

SENATOR BAILEY of Texas in his farewell speech to the United States Senate branded William R. Hearst as a "moral pervert, political degenerate and physical coward." There are other people less prominent than Bailey, who have even used stronger language than the Texas senator to give their estimate of Hearst, and what is more, they came closer to telling the truth than even the indignant Senator of Texas, whom Hearst has repeatedly assailed through his various publications.

Hearst will scarcely be trusted even among "political degenerates," "physical cowards" or "moral perverts.

Hearst is a pariah.

THE McNAMARAS are in prison as a result of direct "action" and "sabotage." Did their efforts accomplish anything in the interest of the labor movement?

An enormous fund was raised by organized labor to defend them, in the belief, that a conspiracy had been hatched against them in order to destroy the Structural Iron Workers, but when the McNamaras confessed to "direct action" and "sabotage," labor was helpless to save them from the penalties of a court.

If the men sentenced to Leavenworth are guilty of "direct action" and "sabotage," will some defender of such methods in fighting exploiters, tell us what has been accomplished for the working class?

Don't all speak at once.

GOVERNOR GLASSCOCK is a Bull Moose who hailed Teddy as a political Moses.

Glasscock as an apostle proclaiming his faith in the Bull Moose platform, used all the machinery of the state of West Virginia to suppress the striking miners who rebelled against starving while working for the coal barons. Glasscock, the disciple of Bull Mooseism, declared martial law, and under martial law, striking miners were tried by a military court and sent to the penitentiary, and the Supreme Court of the state gave its judicial sanction to the action of a military court sending strikers to prison to aid heartless exploiters in crushing organized labor.

Glasscock heard "his master's voice," and the mine operators can truthfully exclaim: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

A REPORT from Berlin says that Emperor William has admitted privately to friends that the Socialists would poll more than one-half the votes of the nation and be entitled to control the reins of government if he dissolved parliament and called for a general election on the war issue.

For purely selfish reasons, we trust that Emperor William will cling to his job a while longer and not abandon his ruling powers to the Socialists, because if he did German-speaking working people now residing in this country would flock back to the Fatherland by the tens of thousands.

The industrial and political organizations of labor in America can ill afford to lose any considerable number of the serious, clear-thinking, progressive and reliable German workingmen and women, particularly so at the present time, with all sorts of freaks and humbugs coming forward again with quack nostrums to cripple the working class movement just as a long stride forward is being made.

German immigration has nearly ceased during the past few years for the reason that the workers in the old country realize that the day is fast approaching when they will acquire control of their government and use it to escape from the bondage of capitalism.

We wish them success, but at the same time the experience and knowledge possessed by the Germans in America is needed here for some time longer until the labor movement in this country is upon a firm, substantial and safe foundation.—Cleveland Citizen.

IN THE YEAR 1900, which was the second presidential campaign after the first battle was begun, the Democratic party discovered a paramount issue.

Mr. Bryan, who had challenged the gold bugs to do their worst in 1896, which they did, as usual, was entering upon his permanent leadership of the Democratic party.

The opportunity to win—the Democratic Opportunity—was present, as it always appears to be at the beginning of a campaign. Unfortunately for the Democratic party, Mr. Bryan was committed to the heavenly-ordained ratio of 16 to 1. The idea that our industrial life could not endure without the sustaining influence of the free and unlimited coinage of silver dollars had been dissipated by "the advance agent of prosperity."

The Democratic party felt the necessity, then, as usual, of renouncing and obscuring its past.

Grant was a Democrat when he gave utterance to the historic sentiment:

"Let the dead past bury its dead."

Ever since then the Democratic party has been digging holes in the ground.

The question before the national convention was to get rid of free silver without appearing to renounce the cause of mankind or abandon labor to its crown of thorns.

Then it was that the idea of a paramount issue came bobbing up like a plank beneath a drowning man.

Until the issue of imperialism should be settled—until the liberty of the Filipinos should be restored—the American people could consider no other question.

The Democratic party resolved that it would not shave its whiskers or take a bath oftener than once a week until imperialism should be throttled.

The day of diliverance is now at hand.

Mr. Wilson, who with Mr. Bryan's mantle upon his shoulders, is about to enter the promised land, has spoken.

The Philippines should be free—"eight years hence."—Milwaukee Leader.

THE FOLLOWING is a press dispatch from Bingham Canyon, Utah, of last week, should even cause scabs and strike-breakers to hesitate in offering themselves as sacrifices to appease the greed of industrial vultures.

"BINGHAM, Utah, Jan. 7.—Four men were killed and three seriously injured in the copper mines of Bingham today. Three of them killed were crushed to death beneath a pile of rock and earth in a cave-in at the Jordon mine of the United States Mining Company's properties early this morning, and one was killed tonight at the United States mine when he fell down a shaft 75 feet deep and broke his neck. Three Austrian miners were caught beneath a rock slide at the Highland Boy mine. Two received broken legs. One was injured internally but will recover.

The dead: Everett Squires, shift boss; Walter Harwood, machinist; two Greek miners.

The cave-in at the Jordon mine occurred early this morning as Night Foreman James Thomas and Shift Boss Squires, accompanied by two miners were leaving a deserted slope. Thomas escaped injury, but Squires and the two miners were caught behind a wall of rock and earth. The body of one of the miners was recovered today, while Squires and the other miner still remain buried beneath the debris and all hope of rescuing them alive has been abandoned.

"For a while this morning Squires communicated with the rescuing party through a wall of rick. A pipe was inserted through the wall to give the men more air. Immediately the crash of a second cave-in was heard and communication with the entombed men was lost.

"It is believed they were killed by the second fall of rock. A third miner reported missing and believed to have been buried by the cave-in has been accounted for.

"Harwood was killed today a few minutes after starting to work. While making a tour of inspection he stepped into an open shaft and fell 75 feet.

"The rock slide at the Highland Boy mine occurred at almost the same time as the cave-in at the Jordan mine."

The mines at Bingham Canyon, while usually dangerous with competent miners, have become veritable slaughter houses since the mine operators have been recruiting their working forces from the congested districts of the large cities of the country.

Scores of men who never worked in mines have been brought to Utah, and these men, blind to the dangerous conditions of the Bingham mines, have walked into the jaws of death.

No one suffers but the unfortunate victim who has been killed or maimed for life or those dependent on him.

The mine operators in the pursuit of dividends are not held responsible for the slaves whose lives are sacrificed to glut the appetite of greed.

A striker, driven to desperation, who reddens his hands with human blood is generally sentenced to prison and sometimes electrocuted or suspended on a scaffold, until a physician pronounces him dead. But a corporation can kill and the law is blind to the crimes that produce profit at the expense of human life.

Keep away from Bingham Canyon!

Haywood As a Labor General

By M. Baranof, in the Forward.

THE ENGLISH SUFFRAGETTES throw all sorts of filth and garbage into the government mail boxes in London and other cities because they want the franchise. The mail boxes don't demand the vote, but the women do. In olden times such a mode of warfare on behalf of the franchise would be considered insane; in our enlightened times, we call it sabotage.

An English suffragette did not like the sentence that a judge, before whom she was brought by a policeman, passed upon her, so she pulled off her shoe and threw it at the judge. She missed her aim. Again the judge became the target for her other shoe. But again she missed her shot. By this time she was about to take off her stockings or hat, but a prosaic and reactionary policeman held her hands. Do you think that insane? Shame—where do you come from, anyhow? That is sabotage.

Persons who think they know, tell us that sabotage is not an ordinary weapon, but a r-r-r-evolutionary (Bing! Biff! Bang!). Let us see. The English suffragettes practice sabotage. Out of politeness to the ladies we'll grant that they are revolutionists. The McNamara brothers and other prominent members of the American Federation of Labor, up till recently, have practiced sabotage. Are they, too, revolutionists? Wood, president of the wool trust, caused several dynamite bombs to be planted in a striker's home. Is Mr. Wood a revolutionist?

No weapon in itself can be revolutionary or reactionary. It depends who is using it and to what purpose. A dynamite bomb was once looked upon with reverence and considered sacred by all Russian revolutionists. But since the Russian agents-provocateur began to use bombs, they lost all their sacredness.

All means that help bring the social revolution nearer are good, says ex-Comrade Haywood. Correct! and with pleasure do we admit it. With the exception of politics, adds Haywood. And here we cannot give in. Not because we are Socialists, not because our party program recognizes politics. We wouldn't give in even if we were a member of the Salvation Army, even if we believed in Christian Science. Because it only requires a small quantity of healthy human reasoning to perceive that political action is an excellent means for education, agitation and organization.

In times of strikes it is convenient, if not safe, when the administration of the community is in the hands of the Socialists. And if political action is a good weapon then, it should not be excluded from the other means that bring the social revolution nearer. Therefore one must have a head of wood filled with hay, in order to say, "All weapons but politics."

If Haywood were to attack the type of Socialists who hold out political action as the only means, we would completely agree with him. But because my neighbor is a horse on one side of the question, that is no reason why I, to spite him, should be a jackass on the other side of the question.

There is a type of Socialists who may be called "campaign Socialists." During September and October they are engaged in a mad chase for votes. And during the remaining ten months they are busy counting the votes received in the previous election and speculating upon the prospective votes which they expect to capture in the coming elections.

The aforementioned Socialists are the political maniacs. But the first type of maniac is active only during campaign times, while the second type seeks to turn the Socialist party into a crazy-house the year round. The former the party can control, the latter have a strong appetite to capture the party for their control. The first can always be made to go way back and sit down, the latter will be a pest until they are put out, so that they can see the door from the outside.

It is fortunate for the Bulgarian soldiers that William D. Haywood is not their general. He would not stop to take the Tschatalja forts from the Turks. He'd let the Turks hold on to the forts and head his army straight for Constantinople. But maybe the Turks will stop you, General Haywood? Nonsense. Do you mean to say they wouldn't let us pass? You're a politician! That's what you are! But granting that you could pass the Turkish lines undetected (you'll steal through in the dark of night), wouldn't the Turks attack you from the rear and shoot bullets into your backs? How will you march to Constantinople when you are continually being fired upon from the rear? Unless you propose to march like crabs, with your backs forward and your faces in the rear, is this a plan?

Let the capitalist hold on to the political forts (political action), recommends General Haywood, and we proletarians will go on and capture the industries (Constantinople). But they will shoot at you from the rear, Mr. General! Before you reach your destination (the industrial) not one-tenth of your number will remain alive. Is it not wiser to first capture the political forts and fill these with your own guards and then proceed undisturbed for the economic forts?

It does not require the brain of a general, but a plain soldier also understands that this is better. No one thinks that the Tschatalja forts are the bone of contention of the Balkan war. The aim is Constantinople. But you cannot get Constantinople before you capture the Tschatalja fortresses. The best proof that the fortresses have a great value is because the Turks (the capitalists) are doing all in their power to hold on to them. Now, be wise, Mr. General, and capture your outstanding forts first.

How comes it, Mr. Haywood, that during strikes the bosses affected by the strike always hire men to incite the strikers to violence—sabotage? It appears that it pays the bosses to have the strikers commit sabotage. Is it not so? Now, then, every good Socialist knows that what is good for bosses is not good for the workers. If sabotage is profitable to the bosses, how can it be of any benefit to the strikers? If the bosses' spies mingle with the workers and incite them to sabotage, and you, as a labor leader, recommend, advise and advocate the use of sabotage, then wherein is the difference between you and the labor spy? You think of the needs of labor, the spies work for the interests of the bosses, but both you and the spies recommend the same method. And the thing you and the spies recommend benefits the capitalist class and injures the workers. The spies, at least, are being paid for the work they do for the bosses and you render them that service for nothing. The spies hurt the workers for pay; you are doing it without pay from the bosses. But what difference does it make to the working class? And how can you be sure that in case a strike is lost that the defeated workers will not suspect that you are no friend of theirs?

In Europe, a bird like Haywood would be whistled out of the Socialist party in a very short time. But we here have a branch which arranges a monster meeting in order to give Haywood and one of his lieutenants a chance to ridicule the party. The branch, naturally, did not mean any harm by this action. It merely wanted to make a noise that the rest of the local may know that it is not asleep. And maybe it intended to make a few dollars' profit from the meeting. We live in a yellow country. We must also be a bit yellow (sensational). Today we arrange a meeting for Haywood, and tomorrow, in order to help swell the noise, we may invite the general of the Salvation Army. Anything to make a noise in the hive. Anything to create the impression that we are stirring the world.

If the ground in the party were not favorable for such things, no Haywood could have blossomed forth from it. And if we drive out Haywood and leave the ground as it is, new ones and probably worse ones will pop up from it. Ignorance—that is our misfortune. We do very little tilling on our soil: we do not irrigate sufficiently; we do not plant enough good seeds: that is the reason they grow like so many bad weeds of many brands of demagogues among us.—Translated from the Yiddish, by Max Sherover.

A Breeder of Disruption

THE BUTTE SOCIALIST, in glaring headlines, in its issue of January 5th, announces that the president of Butte Miners' Union is guilty of a very brutal assault, and heralds the names of Dennis Murphy, Joseph Penhall and John Hartigan as the assailants who almost killed Thomas Fadden.

The editor of the Miners' Magazine has no desire to become a participant in differences that may arise among the membership of Butte Miners' Union.

We are firmly convinced of the fact that the men who make up the membership of Butte Miners' Union No. 1 are fully equipped with the necessary intelligence and ability to adjust and settle all differences that may arise, and we are likewise cognizant of the fact that when the Butte Socialist uses its columns to cast aspersions upon men who are discharging their official duties as elected representatives of No. 1, that The Socialist has ceased to be an organ to solidify the forces of the working class.

The Butte Socialist, while castigating Murphy, Penhall and Hartigan, has no word of condemnation for Fadden, the man who first used physical force on Penhall, and because Murphy felt it incumbent on him to quiet the belligerency of Fadden by the same force that Fadden used on Penhall, The Butte Socialist uses the most vigorous language in denunciation of Murphy, who met force with force.

The attitude assumed by The Butte Socialist will not meet the approval of laboring men who believe in the working class standing as a solid wall to resist every form of wrong and injustice. For some time the Butte Miners' Union has been afflicted with breeders of disruption and dissension, and no journal that is true and loyal to the best interests of labor can afford to fan the flames of enmity that grow out of acrimonious discussion.

Real, genuine Socialists are using their best efforts to amalgamate the forces of labor on the industrial field and in the political arena, and no journal calling itself a Socialist publication can command the respect and confidence of intelligent workers that appeals to personal animosity to keep alive that spirit of strife that only weakens the power of the labor movement.

The Peerless Ingrate

WILLIAM D. HAYWOOD, who was once secretary-treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners, is now in the west endeavoring to make dates in every mining camp possible in order that he may stir up strife and dissension. Haywood is the traveling representative of the I. W. W., an organization which was repudiated by an overwhelming referendum vote of the Western Federation of Miners.

Haywood's mission to the west is solely for the purpose of sowing the seeds of discord.

When Haywood was acquitted at Boise, Idaho, and took the lecture platform to speak to the working class, he repeatedly declared to his audiences that the only guns which he carried was a card in the Western Federation of Miners and a card in the Socialist party, and to make a hit with his auditors he would draw those cards from his pockets and wave them aloft, as a play to the galleries.

Haywood yearned for applause, and he knew that a display of those cards would bring the hand-clapping and the stamping of feet, which were always coveted by "Big Bill."

But the false alarm who once talked about these cards as his only guns waves them aloft no more, for "Bill" thought so little about his card in the Western Federation of Miners that he has lost it through non-payment of dues, and the Socialist party, in all probability, will relieve the hero of his other gun on account of his advocacy of "sabotage," "direct action" and "hitting the ballot box with an axe."

When "Bill" was in jail, the Western Federation of Miners was a progressive and militant organization, for the membership spared no expense in shattering the conspiracy that had for its object the taking of human life under forms of law. Away down in the miserable heart of this ingrate, there is a consciousness that the Western Federation of Miners, in conjunction with organized labor throughout the country, furnished the sinews of war to defeat the conspiracy of Mine Owners' Associations, aided and supported by the purchased hirelings of detective agencies.

But now, this ingrate who is rapidly becoming a social pariah, would, if he could, not only destroy the Western Federation of Miners, but every other bona fide labor organization that furnished the funds to secure his liberty.

The editor of the Miners' Magazine would prefer to pay a compliment to every man who is, or has been identified with the labor movement, but to pay a tribute to "Bill" Haywood would be like calling the stench of a cesspool the perfume of the rose.

Discharged by the Court

THE FOLLOWING appeared a short time ago in the local columns of the Milwaukee Leader:

"'John Worth, you are charged with vagrancy. Are you guilty or not guilty?'

"For a moment all was silent. The tall, gaunt man stood with bowed head; the judge leaned back in his chair; the clerk laid down his papers, and the spectators leaned forward in their seats.

"There was something attractive, even magnetic, about the man. His broad shoulders were bent as though under some great weight, and his well-formed head, crowned with a mass of silver-gray hairs, gave him the appearance of the 'old philosopher' of fiction.

"He raised his head and fixed his clear blue eyes on the judge. The light from the window in front of him added to the pallor of his care-worn but honest face.

"'Vagrancy?' he said. 'I do not know—but if I am charged with a crime I plead not guilty. For is it a crime for an honest man to be without money? Is it a crime for a man to be without work when he has been searching for it for weeks? Is it a crime for a man to lay down on God's ground to rest his tired body? It can't be, sir.

"'I have been in that condition for many weeks, roaming from place to place, penniless and hungry, in search of work. Nobody, it seems, wants me, because I am too old.

"'Tomorrow is the first of the year, judge, and I hope you will not send me to jail, for that would be giving me a poor start: I would be handicapped. All I need is food, rest and an opportunity to earn my living.'

"'Discharged,' said the court."

The above story to the court in Milwaukee from the lips of an old man, hungry, penniless, jobless and homeless, can be repeated by countless thousands of men in the various cities of this country.

This old man is only one among the thousands to whom the future looks dark and gloomy. The years have silvered his locks and time has weakened his vitality, so that the exploiter who is after profit does not want him.

He is willing to work, but he can find no master.

The silvery hair that crowns his head, the bent form and faltering step, are against him, and profit being more priceless than human life. this old man, under our boasted and glorious civilization, is permitted to slowly starve to death.

He was discharged by the court, but his discharge does not mean that any avenue is opened to him whereby he can earn the means of life.

His discharge means that he must continue the search for employment, with but little prospect of securing the job which means life to this old man.

The industrial system that brands an old man as a vagrant who is willing to work, is infamous, and as soon as the working class can be aroused to the brutal wrongs of economic slavery, that class will end the hellish civilization that bequeaths labor the legacy of poverty.

He Was Faithful to His Master

"JOE" BAILEY has retired from the Senate of the United States and his departure from the select law making body of the nation will not cause the masses of the people to be despondent or to shed any tears, that his voice will not be heard among the members of the "millionaires' club." Bailey has been recognized as a brainy and eloquent man, but his talents were not dedicated to the people.

He prostituted his ability to serve Mammon, and every measure that meant amelioration of the wrongs upon which exploiters fattened. Bailey stood in opposition, and his enmity to human liberty fastened the conviction in the minds of observing men, that the Texas senator was owned body and soul by those great and mightly combinations, whose brutal despotism is slowly but surely awakening the American people from their lethargy and indifference. Bailey raised his voice in protest against the Initiative and Referendum and hurled with indignation his torrid eloquence against the rising sentiment that is demanding that the Recall shall reach our "temples of justice."

Bailey claimed to be a Democrat, but Bailey did not believe in Democracy.

Bailey believed in the supremacy of Standard Oil, and his exit from the United States Senate will be mourned by Hairless John and the aggregation of sharks, who could always depend upon Bailey to "deliver the goods."

But Bailey's absence from the senate will cause no serious or permanent sadness among the exploiters. His place will be filled by another representative of privilege, for the hellish system under which we live, demands that Bailey's successor shall be blind to justice.

The people, however, are getting what they vote for and should file no complaints.

Economic Necessity Populates the Underworld

NOT ONLY NEW YORK, but the country at large, has been somewhat shocked and amazed at the story told on the witness stand by Mrs. Mary Good, a real "Mrs. Warren." who calmly and rationally discussed the tenderloin problem, and gave the New York aldermen advice on how to regulate it.

There is a curiously insistent note that runs through all discussions of the vice problem wherever they crop up. It is always assumed, as a starting point, that you can only regulate vice; that you cannot cure it.

Vice crusaders, reformers, police chiefs, and women of the underworld——all unite in saying that this thing has always existed and always will exist—it must be tolerated, and the best we can do is to "regulate."

Every effect has a cause. That is axiomatic. Therefore, the tremendous "vice problem" has an underlying, fundamental cause. The instinct of sex is the greatest single fact in existence. It dominates and affects every act in life. Nevertheless, it is not true that the sex instinct, in itself, is evil. From it springs the capacity to enjoy and appreciate all that is most beautiful, whether of color, music or form. It is only when the sex nature is diverted from its legitimate function that it becomes evil.

No one who has studied the problem at close range will deny that the great majority of the women of the underworld are not following the terrible life from choice. Subtracting the mental and physical defectives, the proportion who have deliberately chosen such a life is very small indeed. If the motive power which shunted these women into such a life was not choice, it was force, in some form. If we discover and remove the force which drives women into lives of shame, we strike at the heart of the problem.

At bottom, we will find that the real cause of the vice problem is economic.

If we could guarantee to every man in the United States who is willing and able to work, a job at such a wage that he could be sure of earning a competence not only for himself, but for a wife and children, more of our young men would seek out their mates, sure that they could support a wife and family, and uninfluenced by the fear of poverty.

If we could guarantee to every woman in the United States who must work, a job at a decent, living wage, not a bare pittance sufficient to maintain life, but enough to assure the satisfaction of not only the animal needs of existence, but also of some of the "luxuries," we would find very few women who would choose to live in the under world.

Some day we will become sufficiently intelligent to strike at the roots of problems like this one. We will abolish poverty and the fear of poverty, which have no right to exist in a land which produces abundantly for all; and when we have done that, not only the "sex problem," but crime, insanity, suicide, disease and suffering of all kinds will have been so greatly reduced as to astonish mankind at his ignorance for so long permitting them to continue.—Denver Express.

Hiding Their Perfidy

THE LABORER, of Dallas, Texas, under the head of "The Boy Scout Fake," had the following to say editorially:

"Very vigorously that part of the Dallas business element that goes in for such things as Y. M. C. A. and organized charity, is pushing the Boy Scout movement again. There is a seed of good in the scheme, as there is in everything, even slavery or cannibalism. But there is a lot that does not encourage working people to become very anxious about it. For example, Mr. Seton Thompson, the American organizer of the scheme, told us in Dallas last winter at a very private meeting where the public was not supposed to hear all, that the New York headquarters were maintained by annual gifts of $10,000 from each of four 'big business' men in New York. Here in Dallas the head and forefront of the scheme is the Hon. J. E. Farnsworth, the head also of the scab Bell telephone interests in this city. After skinning the city with his telephone system, the Hon. Farnsworth, the daily papers announce, is to assist the Boy Scouts to acquire 'chivalry, honor and a regard for the rights of others.' That is a joyful sight for working people to look upon, even if their boys did not have to go to work as soon as they are big enough to make wages. Nix on the Boy Scouts for working folks."

It is a very noticeable fact that the very men who are the greatest enemies of organized labor, are the most enthusiastic supporters of the Boy Scouts. Strange that men who sneer at human rights and justice, declare that they desire that the youths of our land shall acquire "chivalry, honor and a regard for the rights of others."

Why should men and combinations that trample under foot the so-called legal and constitutional rights of the working class, talk about "chivalry" and "honor," and why do they set forth the declaration that they desire that the boys who are to be the future men of our country shall acquire a regard for the rights of others?

This is the pretense behind which the conspirators hide, in order that the masses of the people may remain blind to their perfidy. If the declarations made by the promoters of the Boy Scouts were based upon truth, we would find these great lovers of the boys raising their voice against the mills, factories and sweatshops where poverty has imprisoned countless thousands of boys who are being slowly murdered through the greed of exploiters.

These promoters of the Boy Scouts, if they were honest in their professed interest in the development of the youths of our land, would protest against boys being denied an education and made slaves to satiate the appetite for dividends.

The promoters of the Boy Scouts yearn to convert the boy into a soldier, so that as a soldier he will have a license to kill those who rebel against the anarchy of capitalism.

Food for Digestion

AS THE TRIALS at Indianapolis have passed into history, and the unfortunate men are behind the walls of a federal prison, it becomes necessary for the members of organized labor to seriously consider all the circumstances and details that have resulted in the conviction of nearly forty men. The conviction of these men has been no benefit to organized labor, nor has their conviction been an injury, only so far as their trials had a tendency to deplete the treasury of the labor movement.

It is true that frothing fanatics in a Manufacturers' Association and yelping coyotes in a Citizens' Alliance, will point to the convictions at Indianapolis as proof that the labor movement is criminal, but if such a verdict rendered by the frenzied enemies of labor is logical, then the conviction of a Democrat or a Republican should be laid at the door of these political parties. If the conviction of these men at Indianapolis is to be charged against the labor movement, then it is just as reasonable to assume that when a Catholic or Protestant is convicted of crime, the responsibility should be saddled upon the religious creed in which they were reared.

It is impossible for the labor movement to control the individual acts of its membership, and it is likewise true that the church is unable to prevent its individual members from violating the law.

Among the men convicted at Indianapolis, some are Catholics while others are Protestants, but will any of these turbulent defamers of the Otis, Parry or Kirby type, charge Catholicism or Protestanism as responsible for any crimes that may have been committed by these unfortunate men?

If not, then on what grounds can the labor movement be censured for crimes which no part of its laws or constitution give recognition or encouragement?

The men who are now behind the walls of a federal prison entertained the erroneous idea that they could conquer the combinations that were fighting the Structural Iron Workers by meeting force with force.

But they seemed to forget that the force of a master class is legalized, while the force of laboring men, driven to desperation, is branded as lawless. Why is the force used by a master class to suppress labor, lawful?

Simply because a master class wields a class-conscious ballot and through political action captures the government, which it uses to convict labor.

The trials at Indianapolis should teach some lessons, and it is to be hoped that labor throughout this country will realize that as long as a master class owns and controls the government, that every function of government will be used to keep labor in chains.

Those who are preaching "direct action," "sabotage" and "hitting the ballot box with an axe," should put their heads to work and give their mouths a vacation.

Labor Knows Its Enemies

A NUMBER of daily journals throughout the United States that have always been arrayed against organized labor, are now giving advice as to what steps the labor movement should take relative to the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers. These journals that have fought the labor movement relentlessly for years, are now suggesting that organized labor can only show that it is not in sympathy with crime by expelling the organization whose members have been convicted in a federal court.

The labor movement of this country will not accept the counsel of its enemies.

Organized labor realizes but too well that the unfortunate men who were convicted were hounded by the most powerful octopus in the nation.

Organized labor firmly believes that the secret service of the government was used in the interest of the Steel trust, and the labor movement of America is not ignorant of the infamous means and methods employed by the Burns Detective Agency to fasten guilt on men who rebel against industrial slavery.

Organized labor knows that the men of millions exercise a far-reaching influence over the courts, and labor further knows that when the giants in the field of commerce and industry issue their ultimatum that someone must be convicted, their dictum is generally obeyed.

The power of wealth dominates every department of government and the judiciary, as well as the executive and legislative departments, is not beyond the reach of this scepter of Privilege.

Organized labor does not approve of crime, but organized labor will neither expel the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers nor desert the men whom the Steel trust has been instrumental in sending to a federal bastile.

When labor accepts the advice and counsel of its enemies, then labor is guilty of treason to itself, and such infamy would be far more unpardonable than the duplicity of the subsidized journals that are in league with economic tyrants to destroy the labor movement of this country.

Labor knows its enemies.

PRODUCTION OF COPPER IN 1912.

Output Largest in the History of the Industry.

Statistics and estimates received by the United States Geological Survey from all plants known to produce blister copper from domestic ores and from all Lake mines, indicate that the copper output of the United States in 1912 exceeds that of any previous year in the history of the industry. Not only is the total output the largest ever recorded, but six of the large copper-producing states—Arizona, Michigan, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico and Alaska—have each exceeded all former records of production, while Montana and Tennessee have nearly equaled their previous rcord productions.

Smelter Production.

The figures showing smelter production from domestic ores, which have been collected by B. S. Butler, of the Geological survey, represent the actual production of most of the companies for eleven months and an estimate of the December output. The November figures for a few companies were not available and these companies furnished estimates for the last two months of the year. According to the statistics and estimates received, the output of blister and Lake copper was 1,249,000,000 pounds in 1912, against 1,097,232,749 pounds in 1911.

At an average price of about 16 cents a pound, the 1912 output has a value of nearly $200,000,000, against $137,154,092 for the 1911 output.

Refined Copper.

Preliminary statistics showing the output of refined copper are not collected by the Geological Survey. Figures published by the Copper Producers' Association show an output of 1,429,147,150 pounds for the first eleven months of 1912 and indicate that the production of marketable copper by the regular refining plants from all sources, domestic and foreign, will amount to about 1,560,000,000 pounds for 1912, against 1,433,875,026 pounds in 1911.

Imports.

According to the Bureau of Statistics imports of pigs, bars, ingots, plates, and old copper for the first eleven months amounted to 276,508,505 pounds, and the copper content of ore, matte, and regulus imported amounted to 94,486,041 pounds. If the imports for December were equal to the average monthly imports for the first eleven months, the amount of copper entering the United States for the year was about 404,721,323 pounds, against 334,607,538 pounds for 1911. Considerable of the copper imported as blister had been previously exported as ore.

Exports.

Estimates based on figures for the first eleven months, published by the Bureau of Statistics and also by the Copper Producers' Association, indicate that the exports of copper for 1912 will not equal those of 1911 but may exceed 750,000,000 pounds.

Stocks.

Stocks of refined copper held in the United States January 1, 1913, are probably about the same as on January 1, 1912. Foreign stocks show a considerable decrease.

Domestic Consumption.

Statistics published by the Copper Producers' Association show the domestic deliveries for the first eleven months of the year as 761,174,225 pounds and indicate a marked increase in domestic consumption, which will probably reach 825,000,000 pounds for the year and may exceed that amount.

Prices.

The average quoted price of electrolytic copper for the year showed a marked increase over that for 1911. The average for 1912 was about 16 cents a pound, as compared with 12.5 cents a pound for 1911. The year opened with copper at about 14 cents a pound, but since June the monthly average has not been below 17 cents.

LEADING COPPER-PRODUCING STATES.

Arizona.

For 1912, Arizona again holds first place among the copper-producing states. The output will show a large increase over the 303,202,000 pounds produced in 1911 and may exceed 350,000,000 pounds. This is not only the largest output ever made by the state, but the largest ever made by any state for one year.

The production of copper from the Bisbee district will show a large increase over the 130,200,000 pounds in 1911 and may exceed 145,000,000 pounds for 1912. A new smelting plant was under construction by the Calumet & Arizona Company during the year.

The output of the Morenci-Metcalf district will show a considerable increase over that of 71,500,000 pounds for 1911 and may reach 80,000,000 pounds for 1912. The building of a new smelting plant by the Arizona Copper Company was in progress during the year.

The Globe-Miami district will show a large increase over the production of 44,600,000 pounds in 1911, this being due to the larger output by the Miami Copper Company. The production for 1912 may reach 55,000,000 pounds. The larger producers were the Old Dominion, United Globe, and Miami companies. During the year the Inspiration Consolidated Copper Company was formed by a merger of the Inspiration Copper Company and the Live Oak Copper Company. Development and blocking out of ore was carried on by this company and plans for a concentrating plant set under way. Development was carried on by other companies.

In the Jerome district the output of the United Verde mine will show little change from the 33,200,000 pounds produced in 1911.

The production of the Mineral Creek or Ray district will show a large increase over 1911, owing to the larger output of the Ray Consolidated Company, the only large producer of the district. The output for the year will be between 30,000,000 and 35,000,000 pounds.

In 1912 the Ray Consolidated Company secured controlling interest in the Ray Central Company, and the properties will be worked together. The smelting plant of the American Smelting & Refining Company at Hayden was placed in operation during the year.

Montana.

The copper output of Montana will show a large increase over the 271,814,491 pounds produced in 1911, owing to the stimulation to production given by the increase in the price of copper. The 1912 output may reach 310,000,000 pounds. The Butte district, as in previous years, was the only large producer. Montana ranked second in copper production in 1912.

Important additions to the ore reserves of the Butte district are reported and improvements have been made in the methods of extracting and treating the ores with a view to decreasing the cost of production.

Michigan.

The production of copper from Michigan, which ranks third among the copper-producing states, will show an increase of nearly 15,000,000 pounds over the output of 218,185,235 pounds in 1911. The output was made largely by the old producers and the increase was due to the stimulation of higher metal prices. Development of new territory has been active during the year.

Utah.

The production of copper in Utah in 1912 will show a considerable increase over the 142,340,215 pounds produced in 1911, the increase being due to the increased output of the Bingham district. As in previous years, the Bingham camp was the main producer, though the Tintic district had a considerable production and the San Francisco and other districts also contributed. The output of the mines at Bingham was stopped for a time in the latter part of the year by labor troubles, thus materially reducing the ore production of the state.

Nevada.

The copper production of Nevada in 1912 will show a large increase over the 65,561,015 pounds produced in 1911. The increase is due largely to the beginning of noteworthy production from the Yerington district. The total state output for 1912 will probably reach 80,000,000 pounds. The Ely and Yerington districts were the only large producers. In the Yerington district the smelter of the Mason Valley Mines Company was blown in early in the year and operated thereafter. The output of the district will probably reach nearly 15,000,000 pounds. The Ely district will show a slight increase over the 64,900,000 pounds produced in 1911, though production was interfered with by labor troubles in the latter part of the year.

California.

The production of copper in California in 1912 will probably show little change from the 35,835,000 pounds produced in 1911. As in previous years, the Shasta county district was the largest producer, but notable contributions were made also by the Foothills district and other districts of the state.

New Mexico.

The ouput of copper from New Mexico in 1912 will show a large increase over that of 1911, owing to the beginning of noteworthy production by the Chino Copper Company, of the Santa Rita district. The total production of the state will reach nearly 30,000,000 pounds, the larger part coming from the Santa Rita district.

Alaska.

Alaska will show a large increase in the production of copper in 1912 over the 22,314,000 pounds produced in 1911, the total having been estimated as 28,940,000 pounds. The output came largely from the Copper river and Prince William sound districts, though southeastern Alaska also contributed.

Tennessee.

Tennessee will show but little change in copper production in 1912 from the 18,965,000 pounds produced in 1911. The output, as in previous years, came from the Ducktown district.

Colorado.

The output of copper from Colorado is largely incidental to the production of other metals and will probably show no great change in 1912 from the 9,791,000 pounds produced in 1911.

Idaho.

Idaho will show a considerable increase in copper output in 1912 over the 4,514,116 pounds produced in 1911.

Outlook for 1913.

There will be no new large producing mines added during 1913. Several of those that began production in 1911 and 1912 will, however, turn out larger quantities than in 1912. At the prices for copper prevailing during the latter part of 1912 the industry is highly profitable, and if the output can be marketed and the price maintained the producers will be in a position to make a still further large increase in 1913.

LEAD AND ZINC INDUSTRY IN 1912.

Large Increase in Zinc Mining and Fair Increase in Lead Mining.

A preliminary statement of the lead and zinc mining industry in 1911 has been compiled by C. E. Siebenthal, of the United States Geological Survey, from the most reliable sources available at this time. It appears probable that the mine production of domestic lead in ore in 1912 made a gain of a little less than 20,000 short tons over the 441,187 tons mined in 1911. This gain, compared with the estimated increase in the smelter production of domestic lead, 6,474 tons, indicates that stocks of domestic lead ore at the smelters were slightly increased during the year.

Zinc mining, stimulated by the high prices for spelter which prevailed during the year, was exceedingly active throughout the country, resulting in a large gain in recoverable zinc in ore, estimated to be approximately 55,000 short tons above the 345,260 tons produced by the mines in 1911. The increase in mine production checks very closely with the 52,104 tons estimated gain in smelter output. When allowance is made for some increase in the production of zinc oxide it will be seen that there has been no increase in stocks of zinc ore at smelters, but rather depletion.

Production by Districts.

In the Edwards district, of St. Lawrence county, New York, operations were continued on the zinc property opened in 1911. A 50-ton mill, finished early in the year, has not completely solved the concentration problem and experiments are in progress which promise a better recovery. The ore body has been developed to a depth of more than 100 feet, with a reported width of four to seven feet of blende and pyrite.

In New Jersey energetic operations at the Franklin Furnace mines of the New Jersey Zinc Company resulted in a considerably larger output of zinc ore than usual, the increase from 1911 being approximately 20 per cent. Willemite concentrates from these mines to the aggregate of 19,953 short tons were exported abroad, the remainder of the production of the mines being made into zinc oxide and spelter.

The output of lead and zinc by Virginia mines in 1912 was about the same as in the year before, but there was considerable activity in prospecting and development work in Louisa county in the latter part of the year. Lead and zinc sulphides have been encountered in the pyrite ore of that district for several years and have been recovered in a small way as by-products of pyrite mining. Recently, it is reported, a new parallel ore body has been developed at the 1,000-foot level which carries lead and zinc sulphides with considerable silver. It is said that a large acreage, in line with the trend of the developed properties, is under option at a high figure to a prominent zinc-smelting company.

In Tennessee the output of zinc ore was not increased in 1912 owing to the fact that the American Zinc Company prosecuted development work only. The Holston shaft has reached a depth of 380 feet and the foundations are completed for a 1,000-ton mill which is under construction. Another shaft will be sunk to a depth of 800 feet. A third zinc-smelting company has become interested in the district and is engaged in prospecting the old Edes, Mixter & Heald property at Jefferson City. It is reported in the mining press that development work in the Tennessee district has demonstrated the existence of the several million tons of workable zinc ore.

In the western Kentucky and southern Illinois district the lead production was practically doubled in 1912, chiefly owing to the operation of the large new mill at Rosiclaire, Ill. The output of zinc was probably not more than in 1911.

The upper Mississippi valley region, including Wisconsin and Illinois, according to the weekly reports of J. E. Kennedy, continued to gain in production of zinc in 1912, bettering the output of the previous year by nearly a third, though the lead production showed a loss of nearly 10 per cent. The shipments of zinc concentrates to smelters approximated 100,000 short tons, and the output of lead concentrates amounted to a little over 4,000 tons. The electrostatic zinc separator at Platteville, Wis., destroyed by fire late in 1911, has not been rebuilt, but the magnetic separating plant at Galena, Ill., burned at the same time, has been reconstructed with increased capacity. The concentration of the mining properties of the district into the hands of fewer interests continued during the year.

In the southeast Missouri disseminated-lead district, the output of lead concentrates in 1912 made a gain of about 2 per cent. over that of the previous year, the lead content being approximately 150,000 short tons, as compared with 147,754 tons in 1911. The Phoenix-Fleming property, formerly worked by the Madison Lead & Land Company, was put into operating condition by the Federal Lead Company and was active during the greater part of the year. The North American Lead Company and the Eastern Lead Company continued idle, but all other companies were steadily active.

The Joplin district, as estimated from the weekly sales reported in the local papers, made a gain of about 32,000 tons in 1912 over the output of 1911 in zinc-blende concentrates, with zinc silicate and lead concentrates about the same as the previous year. The total sales of zinc-blende concentrates approximated 281,000 tons and of zinc silicate ore 19,000 tons, a total of 300,000 tons of zinc ores, exceeded only by the sales of 1909 as reported in the local papers. In total value of output, however, the current year exceeds any previous year by nearly $3,000,000. The total sales of lead concentrates were approximately 45,000 short tons.

It is reported locally that all the productive territory in the Miami camp, Okla., except one tract, has been placed under option to a large zinc-smelting company for $1,500,000.

In northern Arkansas, according to R. W. Willett, the output of zinc concentrates in 1912 was increased 40 per cent. over that of the previous year, and the production of lead concentrates was about the same as usual. The principal features of the year were the development of zinc carbonate mining in the vicinity of Zinc and the construction of a 200-ton mill at the old Morning Star mine, long a producer of carbonate ores.

New Mexico made a small increase in the production of zinc ores in 1912 over the previous year, but in lead output exceeded the production of 1911 by two-thirds.

Colorado mines produced about 25 per cent. more zinc in 1912 than in 1911. This was contained in carbonate ores, practically all from Leadville, and in zinc sulphide ores from Leadville and other districts. The output of carbonate ore at Leadville was about 137,000 tons, averaging 30 per cent. zinc, as compared with a little less than 84,000 tons the previous year. The production of lead showed an increase of about 7 per cent. The mixed sulphide ores from Leadville and elsewhere were reduced to marketable zinc concentrates in roast magnetic separation plants at Breckenridge, Kokomo, Cañon City, Denver and in Eagle county, and also in the electro-static separation plant at Silverton. The magnetic concentration plant near the mouth of the Yak tunnel, at Leadville, remained idle during the year.

The production of lead in Montana in 1912 was slightly larger than that in 1911, thus maintaining the increased output of that year. The zinc production, on the other hand, fell away over 40 per cent. from the large production of the preceding year. This was on account of the idleness of the Elm Orlu mine, which was one of the two largest producers in the state in 1911. The first 500-ton unit of the new 1,000-ton concentrator of the Butte & Superior Company was started up in June, and the second one later in the year. Additions in progress at the close of the year to both the mill and the flotation plant, will considerably increase the capacity in 1912. Previous to the completion of the new mill, the ores from the Butte & Superior mine were treated at the Basin concentrator. Large increases in the zinc output of the Butte district are to be expected.

Idaho made a gain of 2 per cent in lead production in 1912 over that of 1911, which was the largest for several years. This output of lead was made by the mines of Cœur d'Alene region and by two mines in Lemhi county. The lead smelter at Hahn was burned in September and the only smelter operated in the state in 1912 was the old lead stack at Clayton, in Custer county. The zinc production of Idaho gained more than 60 per cent. over the record output of 1911. The Success mine was the largest producer, shipping approximately 1,000 tons of zinc concentrates a month. The Morning mine, at Mullan, was also an important producer and there were shipments from several other districts.

The production of lead in Utah in 1912, which was increased about 2½ per cent. over that of 1911, was derived chiefly from the Park City and Bingham districts, though the Tintic district and Beaver county made the usual output. The production of zinc for the year showed a loss of 20 per cent. from that of the previous year. A considerable production from the Tintic district began to come in late in the year, and that district will figure largely in the output for the coming year. The other principal producers were the Park City and Bingham districts and Beaver county.

The output of lead in Arizona in 1912 fell off over 30 per cent. from that of 1911, though it was still considerably above the average for the last few years. The ore came from the Warren district, of Cochise county, and from Mohave county. The production of zinc in Arizona, which showed a gain of 89 per cent., was derived from Mohave county. The larger part came from the Golconda mine, which in September was shipping at the rate of 1,200 tons of ore and concentrates a month. The ore from the other producing mine was concentrated in the electro-static separator at Needles, Cal.

Nevada produced nearly six times as much lead in 1912 as in 1911, surpassing any production in the last ten years. The increase is due principally to adjustments of litigation and to the completion of the railroad spurs to Bullionville and at Pioche, Lincoln county, in 1912. Regular shipments of lead ore were made through the latter half of the year. Clark county also had a large lead output. The Yellow Pine mill operated the entire year, producing lead as well as zinc concentrates. The zinc production of the state was between three and four times as large as in the preceding year. The Yellow Pine mine was the largest producer, shipping more than 1,000 tons of concentrates a month. The Potosi mine also had a large output.

The production of lead in California in 1912, which was less than half that in 1911, was derived from Inyo, Mono, and San Bernardino counties. The production of zinc made a large increase, being about double that of the previous year. There are but two producers, the Cerro Gordo mine, in Inyo county, and the Uncompahgre, in San Bernardino county. The Cerro Gordo mine, formerly operated as a lead mine, shipped zinc carbonate ore at the rate of 900 tons monthly during the greater part of the year.

The output of lead in Washington in 1912 was only a little over one-half that of the previous year, there being only a few shipments from Stevens county. No zinc ore was marketed. The Tacoma smelter was remodeled to treat copper ores.

UTAH METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increases in Silver, Copper and Lead; Decreases in Gold and Zinc.

The ore production of Utah in 1912 aggregated close to 7,500,000 tons, valued at about $44,000,000 for its gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc content, or an increase of 19 per cent, according to preliminary figures by V. C. Heikes of the United States Geological Survey. The strike of miners at Bingham, during which nearly all the mines there were closed or operating with decreased forces, caused a decrease of about 500,000 tons in the total ore production. The smelters, however, were not seriously affected, as they operated for a time on the stock reserves and at nearly full capacity the entire year. Owing to the higher price paid for the metals, considerable old mine dump material on various properties, the accumulation of many years' operations, was almost entirely disposed of to the smelters, and likewise large dumps of old slags were shipped for re-treatment without sorting. The Bingham camp was credited with an ore output of slightly over 6,000,000 tons in 1912. The Utah Copper property alone yielded approximately 5,520,000 tons, which was an increase of about 15 per cent over the 1911 production. From mines in the Tintic district an increase of 14 per cent in the ore production gave a total output of about 400,000 tons, which was mined from the Centennial-Eureka, Iron Blossom and thirty other mines. The tonnage includes much low-grade dump material and about 8,000 tons of zinc carbonate and silicate ores averaging about 34 per cent of zinc from ten mines which will likely continue to ship during the year 1913. Although it was previously known that zinc ore existed in the Tintic mines, it was a surprise to many operators to find such extensive bodies of the ore in the old lead-ore stopes. At Park City the ore output was about the same as in 1911 and aggregated 296,000 tons, of which 42,589 tons were shipped direct to the smelter and the remainder milled, producing about 43,000 tons of lead and zinc concentrate.

The total gold output was about $4,300,000, a decrease of 8 per cent from the 1911 production, due principally to the greatly diminished output of the Mercur mines and to the smaller shipments of siliceous ores produced from mines in the Tintic district, where plans are under way for a large cyanide plant to treat the ores of several of the properties.

Silver contained in ores produced in 1912 aggregated about 13,000,000 ounces, this production being about 4½ per cent greater than that of 1911. The increase was probably due to increased shipments of lead ores mined in the Tintic district and from lead concentrates produced in the Park City region.

The copper production of 1912, amounting to nearly 150,000,000 pounds was an increase of about 2 per cent over the output of 1911. The increase is credited chiefly to the Bingham district.

The lead output, aggregating about 140,000,000 pounds in 1912, was 2½ per cent greater than the output of 1911. The increase is partly accounted for by the fact that more lead ore was shipped from Tintic and more lead concentrates from Park City than in the previous year.

The production of zinc, figured as spelter, amounted to about 15,500,000 pounds and is about 13 per cent less than the figures reported in 1911. This decrease is due largely to a falling off in shipments of blende concentrates from Park City. The new producers of zinc ore in the Tintic district were the May Day, Uncle Sam, Godiva, Gemini, Lower Mammoth, Yankee, Ridge and Valley, East Tintic Development, and New Bullion.

Dividends amounting to nearly $9,500,000 were paid from Utah mines during 1912.

ARIZONA METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Largely Increased Mine Output of Copper and Zinc. Smaller Increases in Gold and Silver, and a Decreased Output of Lead Estimated.

Arizona experienced in 1912 an exceptionally good year in mining, especially in the mining of copper ore, and the preliminary total value of all metals is estimated at more than $65,000,000, an increase of more than $20,000,000, or 49 per cent above the production for 1911. Of this total value, the copper output represented over $58,000,000, gold $3,500,000, and silver $2,000,000.

The production of gold increased only about 3 per cent, giving an output of over 170,000 ounces. The two main sources were copper ore and ores amalgamated or cyanided. Precious-metal bullion came principally from Mohave County, where great increases were made in output by the operators of the Tom Reed and Gold Road mines, particularly the latter.

Silver came mainly from copper ores and production increased to about 3,300,000 ounces in 1912, or about 2 per cent. Lead ore from Cochise and Mohave counties also contained a considerable percentage of silver. The ore of the new copper producers, Miami and Ray, contains so little gold and silver that it is not a relatively important source for precious metals.

Arizona led all other States in the production of copper. The output has grown from 199,000,000 pounds in 1904 to about 359,000,000 pounds in 1912, an increase of 17 per cent over the 1911 record. The value of the product was increased by over $13,000,000 on account of the price of copper being higher by about 3.75 cents a pound in 1912. The greatest increases were made at the Ray, Miami, and Copper Queen mines, while substantial increases were made by the Arizona Copper, Detroit, Shannon, and Old Dominion companies. In production there was little change at the Calumet and Arizona, where construction was progressing on the new smelting plant equipped with roasters to reduce sulphide ores now found on the property. A new plant was also in course of construction at the Arizona Copper Co.'s property at Clifton and the American Smelting & Refining Co.'s plant at Hayden was completed and working in June on Ray concentrates. The output was much less from the Consolidated Arizona smelter at Humboldt, and the plant at Swansea was active only part of the year. The Pioneer Smelting Co., in Pima county, operated a small matting plant for a time, and the United Verde Copper Co. made arrangements for the building of a large new plant near Jerome. In Santa Cruz county the R. R. R. mine developed into an important producer of copper ore.

The lead output for 1912 was about 7,000,000 pounds, a decrease of 32 per cent from that of 1911. It was, however, much larger than the production of any of the last eight years except 1911, which was unusually high. No lead smelters were operated in the state. Lead ore from the Copper Queen and Shattuck Arizona mines and lead concentrates and ore from Mohave county were shipped to El Paso, Texas, and Needles, Cal.

Spelter production increased about 89 per cent over that of 1911 and was about 8,500,000 pounds in 1912. From the Golconda mine at Union Basin zinc ore and concentrate were shipped continuously, in September at the rate of 1,200 tons a day. Ore from Mohave county was concentrated at Needles and shipped east.

Largest Output of Gold Yet Recorded for This State.

The mine production of gold in South Dakota in 1912, according to preliminary estimates by Charles W. Henderson of the United States Geological Survey, was the largest ever produced in any one year, the output being $150,000 above the previous maximum mine yield of $7,657,376 in 1908, or about $7,807,000 in 1912. The yield of silver showed little change. Both lead and copper were produced in 1912, the output for each metal being close to 20,000 pounds.

The Homestake mine was operated continuously throughout the year, with an increased output. The company's hydroelectric plant, which has been under construction for several years, was completed early in the year. The 75-ton roaster being built by the Golden Reward Co. at the mine on Bald mountain, for the preliminary treatment of the sulphide ores before cyanidation, was to be in operation by the end of 1912.

The Wasp No. 2 Co., mining a low-grade ore by steam shovels, made an increased yield. Because of the burning of the mill in March, the output of the Mogul property decreased considerably. After the burning of the mill, the Mogul ore was treated at the Lundberg, Dorr & Wilson custom plant, which was also operated throughout the year on ore from the Bruxton and Bonanza mines. An increased tonnage was mined at the Trojan property. The New Reliance, Victoria and Deadwood-Standard properties were operated during a part of the year.

Placer production, chiefly in Pennington county and including the yield of the dredge at Mystic, showed a small increase for the year.

TO PREVENT LEAD POISONING IS A PART OF THE LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR 1913 OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR LABOR LEGISLATION.

Following the success of its efforts to have Congress enact a law preventing the manufacture of phossy-jaw matches, the American Association for Labor Legislation in its quarterly review issued today, proposes as a part of its legislative program for 1913 the prevention of lead poisoning in this country. The Review shows the remedy for leading poisoning to be as simple as the evils it will combat are complex, and that there is no need for costly and long experiments, as was the case with phosphorus poisoning. Cleanliness of workrooms and workers, the use of hoods and exhausts to eliminate fume and lead dust, will do here what they have done in England and Europe and what they are doing today in Illinois.

Results of investigations of comparable American and foreign factories are set down in parallel columns. A German white-lead factory shows two cases of plumbism among 150 men; an American white-lead factory shows twenty-five cases among 142 men. An English white and red-lead factory employing ninety men, shows no case of poisoning in five successive years; a similar American factory shows thirty-five men leaded in six months, among a force of eighty-five. Another English firm furnishes no case among 182 men for 1911; an American factory for the same year returns sixty cases among 170 men. Thirteen cases of poisoning among 786 dippers in England, compares with thirteen cases among eighty-five American dippers.

One Day Rest in Seven.

Drawing upon the richer experience of Europe and upon such facts as are available here, a one-day-rest-in-seven law is also proposed. The usual Sunday laws are shown not to be effective in the prohibition of seven-day work in such industries as must be carried on without interruption every day of the week. A rearrangement of shifts under a six-day week is the remedy advocated. Scientists, physicians, economists and employers are quoted to the effect that one day of rest in seven is essential to hygienic living and advantageous from an economic point of view, and an investigation on behalf of the shareholders of an English railroad is cited, showing that the rule of fifty-two days of rest per year in the railroads of Switzerland has helped more than any other cause to reduce accidents, due to fault of employés, by 58 per cent, and to prevent 72 per cent of bodily injuries.

Standard Schedules.

A working population a little less than half that of Lawrence, Massachusetts, is now killed every year in industry, and a population almost half the size of Greater New York is injured. As a step toward removing "this disgrace to American civilization," uniform reporting of industrial accidents and diseases and the adoption of the standard schedule is advocated. Eight states have enacted the disease-reporting law drafted by the association, and the aim now is to extend this law to other states. The influence of long hours and fatigue, the relation of experience in their work to injuries received by operatives, the mechanical cause and the nature of injuries, the duration of disability and the exact occupational origin of particular diseases all require careful study and uniform reporting and tabulation before we can prevent the needless death, injury and disease for which American industry is at present distinguished.

Federal Compensation Act.

The fourth plank in the year's legislative program is a revision of the federal employés' compensation act. The inequalities and omissions of this law are compared with the more liberal provisions of state and foreign laws, and legislator and reformer is provided with material for the persuasion of the country and Congress that the time has come for a more just policy toward government employés and their dependents, now cut off with scant consideration in case of injury and death.

Workmen's Compensation.

The association is initiating legislation and supplying standard bills for the four parts of its program reviewed above. It offers to co-operate with others and supplies the essential facts for securing effective legislation on four other subjects of importance. First of these is the extension of state compensation or insurance laws for industrial injuries. Fifteen states have passed compensation laws of one type or another, and altogether twenty-one commissions are making investigations or have reported. The main provisions of the state laws are tabulated, showing the system provided, the employments covered, the compensation granted. The usual limitation of one-half wages for but 300 weeks in case of death, and for but 500 weeks and less in case of total disability, furnish striking contrast to the law of Germany, Switzerland and England.

Industrial Hygiene and Safety.

Such few facts as are now available, it is urged, point unmistakably to disease, injury and death to an appalling extent among American wage earners. The causes for the unnecessary waste of human life need to be studied, not alone by the states, but by the national government, which should go comprehensively into the conditions of safety and hygiene in American industry.

Protection of Working Women.

A fund of material is collected and tabulated in relation to the protection of women workers. As graphically shown by a map, sixteen states still have no limitation of hours, and in eighteen states the limits are only from sixty to seventy hours. Eight-hour laws have been upheld in the courts both in Washington and California. Colorado, by referendum vote, has established an eight-hour day, and Massachusetts has provided for minimum wage boards. The association aims to co-operate with others to bring about, in connection with an extension of these laws, such reforms in administration that the legal protection granted to women shall not be as illusory as at present because of inadequate enforcement.

Law Enforcement.

Two striking colored and shaded maps of the United States are used to illustrate the fact that inefficient factory inspectors are the rule, and that in the whole country there are but 425 inspectors to take care of 268,491 establishments spread over an area of 3,024,507 square miles and engaging an average of 6,615,046 wage earners. Only in Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Wisconsin are inspectors under Civil Service rules, while no such partial safeguard, or even any previous training, is required in twenty-one states. The association urges united effort this year to improve this situation, and furnishes, by way of comparison, details of the methods in use in many foreign countries for obtaining a highly trained body of technical experts to do the work, here, in large measure, left to those with political pull.

Each of the eight parts of this legislative program forms the subject of a chapter in this last publication of the American Association for Labor Legislation. The whole is a compact legislative handbook, illustrated with colored maps and charts, tables and bibliography, giving concrete information for legislators and their constituents.

CALIFORNIA METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increased Gold Protection—California Retains First Rank.

California shows an increase in output of both gold and silver in 1912 compared with 1911, according to preliminary figures by Charles G. Yale of the United States Geological Survey. The difference is not very marked but is sufficient to show that the precious-metal output of the state is advancing somewhat. California retains first rank in gold output, regained from Colorado in 1911. The mine figures of the Survey for 1911 were gold valued at $19,738,908 and 1,270,445 ounces of silver, while estimates for 1912 indicate an output of gold valued at $19,950,000 and 1,270,000 ounces of silver. Moreover, it is highly probable that when complete detailed returns are available, the 1912 figures will be somewhat enhanced.

The latest available complete statistics show that there are 1,181 producing mines in California, of which 596 are deep mines and 585 placers, including dredge, hydraulic, drift and surface claims. Dredge mining seems to be the only form of placer work which is showing any marked advance, the yield from the other placers being either at a standstill or showing a decline. The reasons for these conditions are that the ordinary surface and shallow claims are gradually being exhausted; the laws are unfavorable to prosecution of large hydraulic mining enterprises, except in a few counties; and abundant capital is necessary for opening drift mines, and this is not readily available where so long a time may elapse before a profitable channel is reached.

Dredge-mining operations require even larger initial investments than hydraulic or drift mining, but the profits are likely to be larger and quicker, while the advance borings in the shallow ground insure reasonable certainty in operations and results. The dredges of the state are now producing over 85 per cent of the placer gold and about 39 per cent of the total gold yield from all sources. A few new dredges were added in 1912 in the larger dredging fields and these are of the heaviest type and largest capacity. Some of the smaller and older dredges ceased operations during the year, either through working out the ground or being unprofitable. By far the largest proportion of the gold yield from this source continues to come from the extensive fields near Oroville, Marysville and Folsom. Several new dredges have recently been in operation in Calaveras county and at other isolated points. Toward the end of the year drifting operations were commenced on some of the very large hydraulic mines near Relief Hill, Nevada county, which have been virtually abandoned for many years. It is now hoped to make the channels pay by the drifting methods where the laws will not permit hydraulicking.

In deep-mining operations between 2,700,000 and 2,800,000 tons of ore is annually produced in California. By far the larger proportion of this ore is derived from the deep gold mines, especially from the extensive operations in the Mother Lode region. The ouput of siliceous ore in the state has increased to some extent and this usually averages in value from $4.65 to $5.25 a ton in gold and silver. So far as can be ascertained at this time, there were only thirteen new stamp mills added in California in 1912, all small ones, having a combined capacity of 163 stamps. There were also a dozen or more new Huntington and Graupner mills and half a dozen cyanide plants No new smelters were erected.

Capitalists interested in some of the larger quartz-mining operations in the Mother Lode counties, encouraged by having found very profitable ore at vertical depths ranging from 2,500 to 3,600 feet, have during 1912 commenced work on a few of the old properties which were abandoned twenty or thirty years ago, when mining conditions were very different and such depths as are now attained were considered impracticable. On at least two of these properties immediate extension of 1,000 feet in depth is being carried on, with the intention of doubling that if thought profitable. If these efforts meet with success still other old mines will be reopened.

A rather discouraging feature of the year in this connection, however, is the fact that injunction proceedings have been commenced by farmers in the Sacramento Valley against all the prominent quartz-mining companies in Amador county, to compel the quartz-mine owners to impound their tailings by any suitable means, in the same manner that the hydraulic miners must impound their débris or tailings. The object is to keep the mountain and foothill streams clear and prevent the tailings from eventually reaching streams and rivers lower down in the valley. The main complaint at present appears to be against the "slaty" material carried in suspension and the accumulation of slimes in the sluggish valley watercourses. This movement has been impending for some years and especially since the operation of very large mills on Mother Lode mines. Over 2,250,000 tons of ore is crushed in the mills of California annually. Of this quantity the Mother Lode counties contribute about 1,400,000 tons. Considerably over 600,000 tons of this is derived from Amador county, which is possibly the reason that this county is the first to be attacked. As the material is generally heavy, most of it settles close to its source and can be readily impounded, but whatever system is adopted entails an expense which the present free disposal of tailings does not require. The movement referred to, therefore, has an important bearing on the profits of the quartz-mining industry of the state, and the injunction suits indicate that the miners must consider additional working costs.

Another important factor in connection with the gold-mining industry of California, and one to be deplored, is the marked cessation of prospecting operations and the resultant decline in discoveries of new mines, mainly in the mountain and foothill regions where extensive national forests have been established.

For several years there has been a gradual decline in the copper output of California owing to the closing down of large smelting plants by litigation over damages by smelter fumes. In 1912, however, an increase in output of copper is apparent over the yield of 1911, notwithstanding the permanent cessation of operations in 1911 of one of the very large plants of the state. This increase is due to the materially enlarged output from mines of two of the large companies owning their own smelting plants, to larger shipments from other mines which were producers in 1911, and to the advent in the producing column of certain new or reopened mines which supplied high-grade ore to the custom smelters. The agitation on the part of farming communities over alleged damage by smelter fumes has by no means ceased, and the operations of three of the most extensive smelting companies of the state are seriously menaced. Experiments continue to be made—notably at the Penn Mining Co.'s plant at Campo Seco—with a view to finding a remedy for present troubles and these, thus far, may be said to be reasonably successful.

Lead mining in California shows little change in 1912, although a lessened output as compared with 1911 is apparent. In 1911 the figures for mine production were 1,398,111 pounds, but the preliminary returns for 1912 indicate only a yield of 1,032,000 pounds. The lead continues to come mainly from Inyo, Mono and San Bernardino counties.

It is only within the last few years that any zinc has been produced in California, but in 1911 two mines, one in Inyo county and the other in San Bernardino county, produced about 2,800,000 pounds. Shipments of about the same quantity have been continued in 1912. There are in California extensive deposits of ores carrying so large a percentage of zinc sulphide as to be rejected by custom smelters and they are therefore unutilized at present. Experiments are now being conducted with these ores with a view of making them commercially profitable. If this could be accomplished the zinc output of the state would be materially increased and an addition be made also to the gold and silver yield.

COLORADO METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Large Increase in Zinc, Lead and Silver Output, But Decreases In Copper and Gold.

The output of Colorado mines for eleven months of 1912 and an estimate for December, according to preliminary figures by Charles W. Henderson of the United States Geological Survey, shows a decrease of $300,000 for gold an increase of 750,000 ounces for silver, a decrease of 1,000,000 pounds for copper, an increase of 5,000,000 pounds for lead and an increase of 27,000,000 pounds for zinc. With increased market prices for silver, copper and zinc, the value of the output in 1912 was over $4,000,000 greater than in 1911 — $3,000,000 in zinc and $1,000,000 in silver, the increased value for lead and copper about balancing the decrease for gold. The output for 1912 is therefore estimated at approximately $18,700,000 in gold, 8,080,000 fine ounces of silver, 7,025,000 pounds of copper, 74,680,000 pounds of lead and 121,600,000 pounds of zinc, valued in all at nearly $36,500,000.

The tonnage treated by the Globe, Leadville, Pueblo, Durango and Salida smelters showed an increase for the year. Ore was also shipped to the Murray, Garfield and Midvale plants in Utah. An increased tonnage of complex zinc ore and concentrates from Colorado and other western states was treated at the United States Zinc Co.'s plant at Pueblo.

The output of Cripple Creek showed an increase of $500,000 in gold Early in 1912 the drainage by the Roosevelt tunnel had lowered the water in many of the large properties (except the Golden Cycle and Vindicator mines), so that an additional 100 feet in depth could be worked, and an increased tonnage was mined during the year.

Despite the closing of the Standard custom chlorination plant at the end of the year 1911, leaving in the custom-milling field at Colorado Springs only the Golden Cycle and Portland mills, the total yield from the gold mills showed an increase for the year. The Portland plant during 1911-12 had been gradually transformed to a cyanide mill; thus cyanidation in 1912 had completely superseded the use of chlorination in the treatment of Cripple Creek ores. The Colorado cyanide plant at Colorado Springs and the Union plant at Florence continued operations on old tailings. The Stratton's Independence cyanide-concentration mill and the Portland cyanide-concentration plant, both at Victor, continued to treat from 10,000 to 11,000 tons a month each of dump and low-grade mine ore. The Ajax cyanide plant, using the Clancy process, was operated part of the year. Several of the smaller cyanide plants in the Cripple Creek district were operated with an increased output from this source. An increased tonnage of the higher-grade ores was shipped direct to smelters.

The tonnage shipped from Lake county (chiefly Leadville) showed an increase, with gains in output of all the metals except copper. The output of zinc was approximately 99,000,000 pounds, representing an increase of 27,000,000 pounds in quantity and $2,600,000 in value. The output of zinc carbonate was 137,000 tons of approximately 30 per cent zinc, against 83,905 tons of 31 per cent zinc in 1911. The zinc sulphide shipped decreased somewhat from the 79,376 tons of 23.3 per cent ore shipped in 1911. However, the Empire Zinc Co.'s magnetic-separation plant (with an increased capacity), at Cañon City, and the United States Zinc Co.'s magnetic-separation plant at Pueblo, operating chiefly on Leadville ores, both treated increased quantities of stock ore. The Western Chemical Co.'s wet-concentration and magnetic-separation plant at Denver treated an increased tonnage of zinc-lead sulphide ore. The buildings of the Rho magnetic-separation plant at Leadville (closed in July, 1911), were purchased late in 1912 by the Sutton, Steele & Steele Co., for the treatment of sulphide and siliceous ores of Leadville.

The San Juan region of Dolores, La Plata, Ouray, San Juan and San Miguel counties, showed a decrease of $1,000,000 in output of gold, but an increase of 500,000 ounces of silver, 3,500,000 pounds of lead and 700,000 pounds of copper. The yield of zinc was 300,000 pounds less than in 1911. The decrease in the yield of gold was caused chiefly by the decline in operations of the Camp Bird mine, which was to be closed July, 1912, but which, owing to the discovery of some new ore bodies, is still being operated.

The decrease in gold production from Ouray county was $800,000 in mill bullion and $120,000 in contents of ore and concentrates shipped, a total of $920,000. San Miguel county's gold output for both bullion and smelting material showed a decrease of $120,000 for the year. San Juan county showed an increase in output of all metals, including one of $175,000 in gold. Ouray county showed an increase for silver but decreases for lead and copper. La Plata county's gold yield fell off $160,000.

San Miguel county showed considerable increases for silver and lead but small decreases for copper and zinc. Dolores county showed notable increases in all the metals, owing to the reopening of mines at Rico.

The yield of gold bullion from Boulder county decreased appreciably, as did the shipments of ore, there being a decrease for all the metals except lead. Clear Creek county's output showed a small decrease for all the metals In Gilpin county not only was there an increase of gold bullion produced, but the contents of all the metals in ore and concentrates showed appreciable gains.

The Pitkin county (Aspen) yield showed an appreciable increase in silver output but a decrease in lead. Several cars of zinc carbonate (the first ore of this class from this camp) and several cars of zinc sulphide concentrates were shipped. The shipment of ore and concentrates from Creede showed a decrease for all the metals except silver, which increased about 200,000 ounces. A larger tonnage of ore was shipped from Hinsdale county. The dredge output of gold in Summit county increased $150,000; the zinc yield from Breckenridge equaled that of 1911, but smaller shipments of zinc concentrates from Kokomo resulted in a decreased yield of zinc for the county. Eagle county's output of zinc showed very little change. Park county's placer output of gold showed a small decrease, but there was a considerable increase in the gold contents of crude ore shipped, while the contents of lead and silver decreased appreciably. The dredge in Costilla county was not operated.

IDAHO METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increased Production of Copper, Lead and Zinc.

In 1912 the metal output of Idaho, according to preliminary estimates by C. N. Gerry of the United States Geological Survey, was valued at nearly $21,000,000, an increase of about 10 per cent over the value for 1911. Increases were made in the production of copper, lead and zinc, while the output of gold and silver slightly decreased. The added value was due partly to the better prices of silver, copper and zinc prevailing in 1912. There was a slight decrease of about 4 per cent in gold production, lowering the output for 1912 to about $1,300,000. This decrease is traceable to lessened production from siliceous ore and partly from copper ore, as gold from placers and lead ore increased. The Lost Packer copper mine, the ore of which contains considerable gold, was unproductive, and less gold came from the siliceous ores of Owyhee and Elmore counties. Placers, particularly those worked by dredges, had a greatly increased gold output. Two boats in Boise county, two in Lemhi and two in Clearwater were active.

The silver output was nearly the same as that of 1911, or approximately 8,196,000 ounces. Silver production is principally from lead ore, but the amount of silver per ton is gradually decreasing in the older mines. Although shipments of lead ore increased, the total silver output slightly decreased. Many of the Coeur d'Alene mines marketed more than the usual amount of silver, but others decreased their output.

An increase of over 46 per cent was noted in the copper production, in spite of the fact that the Lost Packer smelter at Ivers was idle in 1912 The estimated production of about 7,500,000 pounds came principally from the Empire Copper Co., in Custer county, and the Snow Storm mine, in Shoshone county, each property sharing the increase. The 100 ton mill at the Snow Storm concentrated part of the ore the last half of the year.

Lead production increased about 2 per cent, the total for 1912 being about 279,000,000 pounds. From the activity toward the end of the year, the price of the metal and the improved production of some of the large Coeur d'Alene mines, a greater increase was expected, but shipments from several mines at Mace and Wardner were much less than in former years. The Hercules, Hecla, Morning, Stewart and Ontario mines had better results, and the Bunker Hill upheld its great record. Lemhi county was the source of about 18,000,000 pounds of lead, largely from the Latest Out and Pittsburg Idaho mines at Gilmore. The Blaine county production was small near Hailey, but at Arco the Wilbert Mining Co. operated a new concentration plant and produced nearly 1,500,000 pounds. The Ideal smelter at Hahn was burned in September and a lead furnace at Clayton, in Custer county, was the only smelter operated in the state. The lead production of Idaho represented 65 per cent of the value of the total metal output in 1912, or about $12,500,000.

There was an increase of 62 per cent in the shipment of zinc concentrates in 1912, the total spelter output being about 13,500,000 pounds. The Success mine had a most productive year, having shipped over 1,000 tons of concentrates a month. A second set of Macquisten tubes were in operation at the Morning mine, thus doubling the zinc output. The surprise, at Pine Creek, the Black Horse, near Murray, and mines near Ketchum contributed, and the Amazon Manhattan made shipments of zinc ore for the first time.

OREGON METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increased Output of Gold, Silver, Copper and Lead.

For several years there has been a decline in the metallic output of the state of Oregon, more especially in its gold and silver, but preliminary returns for 1912 show that this has now been checked, according to Charles G. Yale of the United States Geological Survey. The mine report of the Survey for 1911 showed an output of gold valued at $633,407 and 45,221 ounces of silver. The preliminary returns for 1912 indicate that the Oregon yield was about $657,000 in gold and 86,951 ounces of silver, a marked advance in the silver output. Moreover, the smelters received about 100,000 pounds of copper, compared with 93,196 pounds in 1911, and 38,000 pounds of lead, whereas there was no yield of lead in 1911. More placers are being worked than formerly in Oregon, mainly by hydraulic methods. The grade of ore in the deep mines has been much lower than formerly, although more of it is treated The lowering of the average tonnage value is due to the large quantities of old tailings handled, their average yield being taken with that of the new ore in making up the totals and average values.

The largest producer of gold in Oregon is Baker county, as has been the case for some years. Following in order of rank are Josephine, Jackson, Grant, Lane and Malheur counties. Eleven counties of the state are now producing gold, Josephine leading in the production of placer gold, and Baker in that from deep mines. In silver yield Baker county holds first rank. Most of the ore in Oregon is milled, very little of it being shipped to smelters for reduction. Neither the southwestern nor the northeastern counties of Oregon are producing as much gold as a few years ago, although the estimated figures for 1912 show that some little advancement is in progress. The state badly needs the advent of capital to open and develop its deep-mining properties, many of which are lying idle for want of means to place them on a productive standing.

NEVADA METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increased Total Value and Large Increases in Output of Copper, Lead and Zinc—Large Decrease in Gold Production, But Continued Increase in Silver.

The total metal yield from ores mined in Nevada during 1912, according to preliminary figures by V. C. Heikes, of the United States Geological Survey, was valued at nearly $36,500,000, which is a little over 7 per cent greater than the value for 1911.

The gold output forms the largest part, or 37½ per cent, of the total value; copper nearly 34½ per cent, silver slightly in excess of 23 per cent. and lead and zinc each over 2 per cent. The Goldfield mines produced more ore but less gold in 1912, and this with decreased output from the National and Seven Troughs district was the principal cause of a decrease in total gold production of about 25 per cent from the yield of $18,193,397 in 1911. The mill at the National mine was burned early in September, and work was delayed at Seven Troughs by damage from a cloudburst in July. The Goldfield Consolidated, according to published reports, was producing about 30,000 tons of ore a month, but the recovery from ore treated decreased from $25.08 a ton in January to $13.13 in September. The Manhattan and Round Mountain districts and mines in the Fairview district increased their gold yield in 1912. The Aurora and Rexal districts and the new district of Rochester, in Humboldt County, are expected to add to the future gold output. The Nevada gold output for 1912 is estimated at about $13,500,000

There has been a steady increase in the annual silver output of Nevada since 1901, when production began at the Tonopah mines. In 1912 the producers of Tonopah increased the yield of ore from about 8,000 tons to nearly 12,000 tons weekly, but the average silver content per ton decreased. The new Tonopah-Belmont mill at the mine began crushing ore in July, and a new 150-ton cyanide plant was erected for the West End mine and operated the last half of the year. A new 10-stamp mill at the McMamara mine had its initial run in January. The estimated 5 per cent increase in the silver output of Nevada, from 13,184,601 ounces in 1911 to about 13,840,000 ounces in 1912 was due to lead ore shipments from Pioche, in Lincoln County. There was much activity in the Comstock district of Storey County. The Yellow Jacket and Mexican mills were operated the entire year, and a new cyanide plant was completed for the Ophir mine and operated in October.

An increase estimated at 17 per cent in the production of copper, from 67,377,518 pounds in 1911, to about 79,000,000 pounds in 1912, is due to the new smelter which started operations early in 1912 at Thompson on copper ores produced chiefly from the Mason Valley and Nevada Douglas properties, in the Yerington district. High-grade copper matte was shipped from this plant to Garfield, Utah, from conversion. It is reported that converters for the production of blister copper will be built in 1913 at Thompson. The Nevada Consolidated mines at Ely produced daily from 10,000 to 14,000 tons of low-grade copper ore, which was concentrated and then smelted at the Steptoe smelter at McGill. One unit of the Nevada Consolidated concentrator was devoted to the daily treatment of about 1,000 tons of Giroux copper ores. The labor strike of 26 days curtailed production to some extent at these mines.

Mines in the Pioche district of Lincoln County and the Yellow Pine district of Clark County furnished the largest part of the lead production, which is estimated to have increased from 3,263,657 pounds in 1911 to nearly 19,000,000 pounds in 1912. The adjustment of litigation of Pioche resulted in increased ore production in that camp, along with the completion of a railroad spur to the Bullionville tailing dump, which furnished from 12 to 15 cars daily. About 300 tons of iron-manganese ore, containing small quantities of lead and silver, was shipped daily from the Prince mines, and 100 tons from the Day-Bristol mines. The mines of the Yellow Pine district produced an increased quantity of lead ore and concentrates, the largest yield in the history of the district.

All records of zinc production in Nevada were broken by the output of the Yellow Pine district in 1912, when nearly 12,000,000 pounds of zinc (figured as spelter) was produced. This is an increase of about 233 per cent over the production of 1911, when only 3,548,032 pounds of spelter was reported. The chief producer was the Yellow Pine mine, which is equipped with the only concentrator in the district. The Potosi and others also contributed.

Nevada mines produced a greater tonnage of gold, silver, copper, lead, and zinc ore in 1912, but it was probably not over 1 per cent greater than the output of 1911, which aggregated 4,132,721 tons.

MONTANA METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Large Increase in Copper Production.

As a result of the increased prices of metals and the greater production of copper particularly, the total value of the metal output of Montana in 1912 was close to $64,000,000, according to preliminary estimates by V. C. Heikes of the United States Geological Survey. This represents an increase of nearly 36 per cent in value over the 1911 output and is the most valuable production since that of 1906. About 79 per cent of this value came from copper alone, about 12 per cent from silver, nearly 6 per cent from gold and nearly 3 per cent from zinc.

An estimated decrease of over 5 per cent in gold production brought the output of 1912 down to about $3,500,000. This was probably due to a diminished yield of mill bullion, especially in the Little Rockies district, formerly in Chouteau county but now in Blaine county. The gold output from placer bullion slightly increased, being sustained by six operating dredges. The four boats at Ruby had a successful season, and the Kansas City plant, in Missoula county, and the Magpie, in Lewis and Clark county, were active.

There was also an increase of about 5 per cent in silver, from nearly 12,000,000 ounces in 1911 to about 12,500,000 ounces in 1912 This was to be credited to Butte copper ore. The increase of 7.5 cents a fine ounce in the average price of silver meant a difference of nearly a million dollars in the value of the production.

Instead of curtailing the output of copper, as in 1911, when nearly 273,000,000 pounds were marketed, the production of 1912 was brought up to about 310,000,000 pounds, or nearly that of the year 1909. This is an increase of about 14 per cent, due partly to the rise in price of the metal, which averaged somewhat over 16 cents a pound, against 12.5 cents in 1911. Although Montana recorded a larger copper output, it retained second place among the states in 1912, as Arizona had a much greater increase. The copper mines at Butte, especially the Anaconda, East Butte and Tuolumne mines, made better showings. The smelting plants at Anaconda and Great Falls were not only more active than in recent years, but plans were made and work started to entirely reconstruct the Great Falls plant. The Anaconda mines were producing at the rate of 26,000,000 pounds of copper a month, and the East Butte at somewhat over 1.000,000 pounds. At the latter plant capacity was increased by lengthening the furnaces. The cost of mining at Butte was lessened by the use of electric power.

There was no important change in lead production in 1912 from the output of nearly $6,500,000 pounds in 1911. The East Helena lead plant was active but worked largely on lead ore from other states.

A decrease of about 41 per cent, to an estimated production of 25,520,000 pounds for 1912, was shown in the spelter output, but interesting work was done in metallurgical treatment and construction. The Elm Orlu mine, the concentrator of which was lost by fire in 1911, produced no zinc, although experiments were made in direct smelting of the ore, both at Butte and in Germany. Improvements were made at the Butte & Superior mine, which somewhat retarded shipments. A new surface plant and a 500-ton unit of a concentration mill were constructed. The latter began operations in June, using an oil flotation process in connection with concentration. Small shipments of zinc concentrates were made from Basin, in Jefferson county, and of zinc ore from Troy, in Lincoln county. Work at Georgetown, in Deer Lodge county, was stimulated by the building of the railroad into the district, and construction was continued on the road to Radersburg, in Broadwater county.

WASHINGTON METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increased Production of Copper and Silver.

Although the output of gold, which is the principal metal produced in Washington, decreased to about $679,000 in 1912, according to preliminary figures by C. N. Gerry of the United States Geological Survey, the total value of all metals produced in the state was greater by nearly 7 per cent than that of 1911. This was due to the increased production and better market price of both silver and copper. There were no shipments of zinc ore, and only a few cars of lead ore were marketed, against a nominal output of zinc and a production of 848,584 pounds of lead in 1911. Interest centered around the new cyanide mills at Republic, in Ferry county, and the copper mines at Chewelah, in Stevens county. The decrease in gold output of about 20 per cent, or nearly $163,000, was the result of fewer shipments from Republic, where much ore was accumulated for the two cyanide plants which were operated during the latter part of the year. After changes made in the crushing department, the North Washington mill was treating 125 tons of ore per day in September. The ore averaged $7.75 a ton and the extraction was said to be 95 per cent. The San Poil mill, also rated at 125 tons, made its first bullion clean-up in September from $12 ore. During the year shipments were continued from the Surprise, Knob Hill, San Poil, Insurgent and Quilp mines at the rate of 3,000 tons a month during the first half of the year, and at a somewhat decreased rate thereafter. Besides that from the Republic plants, bullion was sold from mills operated in Chelah, Kittitas and Okanogan counties.

The estimated increase in silver production of 63 per cent made the total output for the year close to 398,000 ounces. Copper ore produced in Stevens county is to be credited with this increase, as well as with the increase of 295 per cent in the state copper output, which brought the total copper production up to about 1,250,000 pounds in 1912. The United Copper Co shipped five times as much ore as in 1911, and there was much activity in development in the Chewelah district. Lead ore came from mines near Bossburg and Turk. The lead plant at Tacoma was closed in July and improvements were made for copper smelting, including blast furnace, basic converter and electrolytic refinery.

NEW MEXICO METAL PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Increased Mine Output of Gold, Silver, Copper, Lead and Zinc.

The mine production of gold in New Mexico in 1912, according to preliminary estimates by Charles W. Henderson of the United States Geological Survey, showed a small increase over the output of $762,808 in 1911; the output of silver an increase of about 150,000 ounces over the production of 1,354,540 ounces in 1911; lead an increase of about 1,700,000 pounds from the yield of nearly 3,000,000 pounds in 1911; and copper an increase from 4,057,040 pounds in 1911 to about 28,000,000 pounds in 1912. The output of zinc made little change in 1912 from the output of 10,237,176 pounds in 1911. The increase in the value of copper alone adds over $4,000,000 to the value of the output of New Mexico.

The output of gold and silver from the cyanide plants at Mogollon, Socorro county, showed a small increase, and a slightly increased output of the precious metals was also derived from the gold and silver-bearing siliceous and copper ores of the Lordsburg and Central districts, Grant county. The reopened copper mines at San Pedro, Santa Fe county, added to the output of gold and silver.

The increase in the copper output came chiefly from the operations of the Chino Copper Co., which is mining a low-grade copper deposit at Santa Rita by steam shovels. This ore is concentrated at Hurley, where a 5,000-ton plant has been completed in five sections, two sections being in operation at the beginning of the year 1912 and the other three being successively placed in operation during the year, the last being completed in December. The public report of this company for nine months of the year shows an output of 17,902,587 pounds of copper, and the output for the last three months was approximately 11,000,000 pounds. The second copper district in importance was the Lordsburg district, with an increased output for 1912. The Burro Mountain district, where much development work has been done during the last six years, made a small output. The copper mines and smelter at San Pedro, Santa Fe county, were reopened in August and operated throughout the rest of the year.

The lead output of New Mexico comes chiefly from the shipments of lead ore and concentrates from the lead-zinc deposits at Kelly, Socorro county, but there were also increased shipments of lead ore from the Cooks district, Luna county.

Shipments of zinc sulphide ore and concentrates from Kelly were about the same in quantity as in 1911, but those of zinc carbonate decreased. This district yields the greater part of the zinc output of New Mexico. In January, 1912, the zinc deposits at Hanover, Grant county, were reopened, after being idle for a year, and zinc concentrates and ore were shipped from Pinos Altos, Grant county.

HAYWOOD AS A REACTIONIST.

It is rather a pity that with all his opportunities to study and learn, William D. Haywood has been unable to arrive at any real understanding of Socialism or comprehension of the meaning of Socialist political action. At Harlem River Casino he boasted that he had not advocated political action and had not urged workingmen to use their votes. He looked upon such a course as useless because he was engaged in something he considered far more important, the preaching of direct action and sabotage, neither of which employments have engaged him of late.

While he has been carrying on his course in the higher violence, among the highbrows, of which he is in all ways one, the enemies of the working class have been giving some drastically illuminating lessons in the utility of political power. They have shown what political power means to those who possess it, and they have used that power to the detriment of the working class. But Bill Haywood would not think of such a thing as advocating the assumption of that power by the working class. He does not trust the working class—all his phrases show it.

There was a deal of presumption when he said that he would not talk ballots to voteless foreigners. It would not do him any good if he did, for they would not understand him, as he speaks English only. But there are others who do talk ballots to those foreigners who are now voteless, and with good effect. It is for that reason that in the industrial towns and cities of New England, the French Canadians, the Italians and many of the Slavs who are naturalized are drawn into the Republican and Democratic camps, where they help maintain the political power that oppresses them. If Haywood has any interest at all in this most important question, he might profitably spend a few days around the naturalization courts. That he would see Tammany and Republican leaders sedulously putting Italian and other workers through the mill, looking after them carefully and removing all obstacles from the way. He may be wiser than Tammany, but, for the working class, he isn't one-tenth of 1 per cent as effective as Tammany is for the capitalist class, and a thousand broken heads in recent strikes testify to the fact.

When he said he would not talk ballots to women and children, he assumed the superior, merely masculine, tone. Women and children have no votes. But women and children have intelligence, and will soon have votes. While Haywood is silent, in deference to their supposed lack of understanding, others are not, but are doing their level best to line up working women and working children politically against their own class.

But what he does advocate, direct action and sabotage, as a short-cut to the industrial republic, are at once visionary, opportunistic and vicious. Striking on the job frequently does force some concessions. Frequently, also, striking on the job results simply in the victimization of some of the weaker workers. Direct action is something that was publicly disapproved and secretly practiced by some old-line unions. The result was the spread of the spy system in the A. F. of L. If Haywood believes because of open advocacy of such measures the spy system does not exist in the I. W. W., he is gullible as well as futile. It does. The I. W. W. is filled with spies, and he knows it.

His fondness for empty epigrams should, for a while, give way to solid reasoning. The Socialist party is a political organization, not a mere happy hunting ground for the passing of the contribution basket. The Socialist party has never hesitated to take the lead in helping any working class struggle, and it never will hesitate. The Socialist papers have given the widest publicity to every working class struggle, have fought none but the battles of the working class, and will continue to fight no other. The party is not going to go out of existence because Haywood is indifferent or opposed to political action. It showed, at the last election, that it is growing stronger and clearer—and William D. Haywood, though a member of the National Executive Committee, contributed nothing to that result.

He has been a prominent figure in the I. W. W. Prominent figures do not make a revolutionary organization. The force and the utility of an organization are conditioned on the intelligence of the membership. When Haywood ignores political action he casts aside what would be the greatest weapon of the organization. When he preaches sabotage and direct action exclusively, he opens the way to victimization, and the workers will be victimized as long as they lack political power.

We intend to destroy capitalism. Nothing is gained by destroying individual capitalists.

We intend to expropriate the expropriators, but you cannot do it by ruining a machine or a piece of goods now in the hands of the expropriators.

You cannot organize by mouthing phrases and coining epigrams. You must get down to solid work and show the workers how to use their irresistible power, their power to run the industries and their power to reorganize the government so it will be for the benefit of humanity, not a weapon of a class.—New York Call.

A LETTER TO WHITNEY.

Cobalt Ontario, January 1, 1913.

Sir James Whitney, Legislative Assembly, Toronto, Ontario:

Dear Sir—As the time is once more at hand when the province law-making body meet in session for the purpose of enacting legislation that will be beneficial to the people of the province, be they rich or poor, we deem it advisable to once more impress upon our representatives the necessity of enacting an eight-hour law for underground miners. The miners of Ontario have endured quite long enough the unfair nine and ten-hour day in unhealthful and dangerous underground dungeons, and there are indications on every hand that their patience is well nigh exhausted.

One camp is on strike with an eight-hour day as one of the demands of the strikers. The other camps are just as anxious for this piece of justice, but are waiting to see if the Ontario Legislature will ever harken to the needs of the ore-producers. The case in favor of an eight-hour law has been stated so often that it seems a waste of words to reproduce them here. Two Canadian provinces and most of the Western states of the Union have eight-hour laws on the statute books. And here let it be said that there is more need of such a law right here than in the majority of mining camps, for in addition to the ordinary needs for such a law, there is the fact that hydraulic power supplies air which is lacking of the necessary amount of oxygen to properly sustain life and in which candles and other ordinary lights refuse to burn.

Both the government and opposition at last session introduced bills providing for an eight-hour law for underground miners. The opposition adhered to its support of the bill, but some unexplained influence appears to have been brought to bear on the government, causing them to change their opinion on the immediate necessity of an eight-hour day, and they announced that action on the bill was to be postponed, pending an investigation. Nearly a year has since passed by giving oceans of time for an investigation, and we understand that such investigation has taken place, including balloting by the miners in various mines, the majority of whom, despite the fact that most of them were unorganized, voted in favor of an eight-hour day.

With all these facts before us we feel it is high time for the government to recognize the justice and necessity of this law and to pass it without any further delay. Otherwise the government must in a large measure accept the responsibility of industrial troubles which are bound to ensue for the purpose of enforcing an eight-hour day.

Trusting the government will see fit to enact an eight-hour law for the miners without further delay, we remain, Yours sincerely,

FAVORS A DISTRICT UNION.

Cobalt, Ontario, December 26, 1912.

To the Officers and Members of the Western Federation of Miners:

We wish to bring the following suggestions to your attention in order that you may be advised as to our position on this important question, and therefore in a position to discuss the matter with the members of your local in such a manner as will bring some definite results.

It has been suggested that a District Union be formed, embracing all the metalliferous mines in the immediate district and ultimately all such mines, smelters, etc., in the province of Ontario. It is obvious that if we are to maintain our present position as the sole organization of miners in the province that we must use our best efforts not only to keep our present membership intact but to increase that membership whenever and wherever possible. For this purpose a district organization would be invaluable. One local cannot be expected to pay for the organization of unorganized areas, but if all locals are united into one District Union for this purpose it would be much easier.

It has been pointed out that another function of the District Union would be the preparation of a district wage scale. This function is perhaps the most important of all and at the same time the most difficult. The view which we take on this question is that a satisfactory wage scale can only be drawn up after the most exhaustive and detailed inquiry has been made into all the varying phases of this question. We are of the opinion that it would be the task of your district organization to collect and properly tabulate this information and submit the same to each local for consideration. It is of course unnecessary for us to point out that the mere promulgation of a wage scale by your District Union would not ipso facto make such a wage scale operative.

We, therefore, regard the wage scale as an important branch of activity for the District Union to undertake, but the district organization must first be perfected before the wage question could be handled to your satisfaction.

Another important function of the District Council would be the organization of mutual aid and protection in times of strike, with the power to declare a district strike if conditions warranted such action and the membership concurred. Although we are of the opinion that in case of a district strike our demands should be as uniform as possible, yet you will at once see that uniform demands are not absolutely imperative, though certainly advantageous. A district strike could be undertaken with varying demands from the different locals with every chance of success. In all matters which may be classed as political demands, such as the eight-hour day and workmen's compensation, the work of your District Council would be invaluable. Statistical tables regarding accidents, benefits and compensation could be drawn up in such a manner as to put our case succiently before the people through our labor and Socialist press and also before any investigating committee or parliamentary inquiry that may be constituted. For these reasons we are of the opinion that the organization of the District Union should be undertaken as soon as possible without imposing too many restrictions on their activity. The constitution of this District Union should be elastic enough to permit them to undertake without too much red tape such duties as they may, from time to time, find advantageous to the welfare of the district. It is our opinion that the local unions should not wait for the formulation of a specific set of demands or a fixed wage scale. The work to be done now consists of getting together and drawing up a somewhat loosely constituted District Union, leaving to time, circumstances and experience to suggest its ultimate form and power.

AMERINGER DISCUSSES WILSON AND THE TRUSTS.

For half a century the "small man" followed the political party of plutocracy under the childish belief that he, too, belonged to the Morgans and Rockefellers.

Ten years of muckraking have destroyed this illusion. The Lawsons, Tarbells, Russells, Bakers and Steffens, held a mirror before the bulging eye of the small man, in which he beheld himself, a helpless little lamb in the society of bulls, bears and wolves.

Instead of proudly feeding with the royal animals, his humble mission was to furnish the meal.

There can be no question that the small man belongs to the trust magnates. Only in a different way than he imagines. The fact is, the trusts are rapidly reducing the independent middlemen to vassals, campfollowers and parasites.

Numerically the middle class may be still increasing. Potentially its power is melting away like snow in spring.

As an illustration, let us take the industry that made Milwaukee famous.

There was a time when almost every little burg had its own brewery. Many of these are closed down. Others hang on by the skin of their teeth. This in spite of the fact that population and consumers of beer are still increasing.

In place of the little brewery operated by its owner and a few hired men we see a few giant beer-factories. These are owned by stock companies and operated by hired managers.

The principle of five cents apiece and three for a dime also operates in industry. Four men doing the same thing together will produce more than four times as much than one man working by himself. In production two and two do not make four, but five or six. The productivity of each laborer increases with specialization. And the greatest specialization is found where the workers are most numerous.

So, in spite of all that has been said and written, in spite of all anti-trust laws and anti-trust administrations, big business is enlarging its sphere at a tremendous pace.

With the increase of large scale production goes the elimination of the small producer. As the field of operation is steadily narrowing down he becomes distributor, agent or salesman.

The more difficult it becomes for the small producer to compete with the larger one the more he is forced to resort to advertising and traveling salesmen.

Thus it comes about that the consolidation and concentration of industrial plants is followed by a numerical increase of the middle class. But this new middle class bears no relation to the independent small producer of a generation ago. Divorced from the ownership of the means of production, it becomes more and more dependent on large capital.

Thus, to return to the beer industry; we find that while the size of the large plant is increasing and the smaller ones are disappearing, the places in which the beer is sold are not decreasing. On the contrary, where their growth is not hindered by legal restrictions they are positively increasing.

But what kind of an independence does the saloonkeeper enjoy? The building in which the saloon is located belongs not to him but to the brewery. The same is the case with the fixtures, the stock and the license.

Our independent saloonkeeper is but an agent. If he fails to collect the required amount of nickels his place is taken by another man; if his business is prosperous, the larger share of the prosperity is expropriated by the brewery in increased rent. Enumerated in the census as an independent business man he is in reality a vassal of the brewery.

The same phenomena we find in the tobacco industry, where the concentration of plants has been followed by the establishment of many cigar stores by and belonging to the tobacco trust.

Out of this condition arose the Bull Moose movement and the revolt against Taft that landed Wilson in the White House.

As a result of its victory at the polls the middle class will obtain—nothing! Its return to power could only be accomplished through the destruction of the trusts. But every attempt in this direction must necessarily shake the very foundations of modern society. The only result would be a terrific panic and the end of the Democratic party.

But Mr. Wilson will not destroy the trusts. He will not even arrest their development. No man and no set of men can do that. The causes that have produced the trusts are still at work. Consolidation, concentration and the elimination of waste in production will be followed by the same process in distribution. This process will go on and on until every important industry and its distributing organs are trustified and the middle classes forced down into the ranks of labor.

We Socialists know that now—and others soon will know it.

Far from being discouraged, the result of the last campaign will only stimulate us to greater efforts. Out of this blind revolt, this wild stampede of the middle class towards nowhere, that dragged down a great, historic party and saw the birth of a new one, there rises one monumental fact: Eight hundred thousand men voted for Socialism. Eight hundred thousand stood calmly aside and let the stampede pass by.

Neither the sham Progressiveism of a Roosevelt, the threat of hard times by Taft or the promise of immediate benefits by Wilson were able to swerve these men!

No! Socialism was not defeated, as our capitalist press fondly imagines. But the party of plutocracy was defeated; Roosevelt's sham Progressiveness was defeated; and the inevitable defeat of the middle class will only be hastened by capturing a weapon it cannot wield and assuming a mission it can never fulfill.

Like blind Samson, this class stands between the pillars of the temple of industry it cannot destroy without being buried beneath its ruins.—Social Democratic Herald.

BLASTED HOPES.

Our subjects who held a celebration in Manila when they heard that the Democratic party had elected its candidate for President and obtained control of both branches of Congress, are inviting disappointment in giving free rein to their expectations that there will shortly be issued at Washington a declaration acknowledging the independence of the Philipipne islands.

It is true that in 1900 the Democratic party in national convention assembled, declared with all the emphasis at its command, that imperialism, as involved in the conquest and benevolent assimilation of the Philippines, was the "paramount issue" before the American people. Until it should be definitely determined and decided whether the United States should become an imperial republic and go the way of Rome, or return to its pristine purity and remain a beacon light to the world's persecuted and oppressed, all other questions were deemed trivial and inconsequential.

The Democratic party was fixed and unalterable in its resolve that the United States should not remain half republic and half empire. It recalled Lincoln's words of warning that no people can be half slave and half free.

It was never contemplated by the fathers of the Republic that the American people should hold subject races and govern them without their consent. The policy of the Republican party challenged the sacred traditions of the Republic and repudiated the very principles upon which the embattled farmers justified their war against the British crown for the independence of the American colonies.

We recall now that the Democratic party was in possession of an embarrassing issue—the issue of the free coinage of silver at a ratio of sixteen to one without waiting for the intervention or consent of any other nation. There was much anxiety among its leaders lest the issue, like the scent of the rose clinging to the fragments of the broken vase, should attach to the party whatever disclaimers it might make or whatever silence it might impose upon the authors of its declaration of principles and its avowal of purposes.

Mr. Bryan was obdurate. He stubbornly refused to kick over the ladder by which he had climbed to high eminence. He was besieged and urged to forsake his idols of silver and consent to the crucifixion of mankind upon a cross of gold. But he would not listen, even though, as the citizen who struggled with the bear, he desired to let go and abandon the heaven-given ratio.

Then it was that there came to the authors of the platform the inspiration to proclaim the paramount issue without abandoning the lesser issue to which the Democratic party was so closely bound.

Labor was still upon the cross—its cries of agony moved every Democratic politician from Gompers to Tillman, to wail and moan, but liberty was imperiled, the Republic menaced, our glorious institutions were in the balance and labor would have to wait.

When the Filipinos should be freed, when there should be established in the eastern seas a republic fashioned after the work of the fathers, then, and not until then, could labor, writhing in pain, expect that the Democratic party should issue the final command to Mammon to cease pressing upon its brow the crown of thorns.

Twelve years ago imperialism was the paramount issue. Twelve years ago free silver was an embarrassing impediment. Today the heavenly-ordained ratio has gone to that limbo from which no traveler returns.

Other issues have arisen.

The trusts, like giant ogres, have licked their chops. The tariff has come forth from its death chamber when graveyards yawn and has groaned.

The blood has frozen and the dark night of despair has settled over the nation as Democratic alarms have given way to succeeding fears and greater calamities.

The Democratic party still stands pledged to Philippine independence. It still condemns imperialism and proclaims its devotion to the principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence. It still holds, in the abstract, "These truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." In its platform, adopted at Baltimore. it declared:

"We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established."

The Democratic party is devoted to liberty. It hates tyranny. It cannot sleep o' nights or rest in peace so long as a subjugated race is held in bondage to the Republic.

But it may take a long time to prepare the Filipinos for stable government—quite as long as it would take under Republican administration.

The Filipinos are good Christians but they are disposed to be rebellious children. Their spiritual shepherds feel much more secure with an army of occupation to lend substance to their authority than they would were independence to come and liberty be turned to license.

The Filipinos may have to wait, even as did labor when its brow was pressed with thorns and imperialism became an issue which was paramount. —Milwaukee Leader.

NOTHING TO FEAR.

That assurance of President-elect Wilson to the "honest and enlightened business men of the country" that they have nothing to fear from him, may seem at fight sight to smack something of the pedagogue telling the little boys to be good and he won't cane them, but nevertheless it is a statement that is expected from every successful candidate for the presidency.

It is necessary for such a one to believe that he really has such power as is implied in Wilson's statement. The farce that capitalist government is superior to capitalist business must be kept up.

When Roosevelt ascended the throne he made a similar statement, though in more forcible terms. He, too, assured the "honest and enlightened" that they had nothing to fear from him, but that "malefactors of great wealth" had better look out. Taft didn't make any such announcement, but then it was not considered necessary from him.

So far as representatives of "big business" are concerned, whether they are "honest" or not, they are certainly "enlightened" as to the meaning of and need for this performance, and it is fairly certain that Wilson's pedantic assurance was received with a cynical chuckle in many great financial sanctums. The idea of Schoolmaster Wilson playing ducks and drakes with the financial interests of a Morgan, a Rockefeller, a Ryan or a Belmont, no doubt, seems the most hilarious kind of a joke to these gentlemen, and with good reason. Not one of them has the slightest doubt of his ability to "lick the schoolmaster" if he gets too gay and forgets that his position is dependent upon them, and that he holds it only on condition of doing the will of the capitalist class. They tamed bully Roosevelt easily enough, and Wilson is a cinch compared to him.

However, the announcement is orthodox and expected and none of the "honest and enlightened" will publicly resent the admonition. It is in reality not intended for them, and they know it. Its real object is to impress the masses with the belief that government is something more than an instrument of the ruling class; that the politician is the master of the capitalist and not vice versa. And in the inculcation and strengthening of that belief lies the safety of the system of capitalistic exploitation. Hence it is never openly resented by the big capitalists, who are all "enlightened" on this particular point at least.

This particular deception is merely one of many intended for the preservation of the established order of things. The words placed in the mouth of the notorious "Mrs. Warren" in Bernard Shaw's play will apply equally in this case. Mrs. Warren declares to her daughter: "You don't understand. You've been taught wrong on purpose. You think that people are what they pretend to be—that the way you were taught at school and college to think right and proper is the way things really are. But it's not; it's all only a pretense to keep the cowardly, slavish common run of people quiet. The big people, the clever people, the managing people, all know it."

And the "big, clever, managing people" who own America, Wilson included, know all about the nature of the assurance given them by the Princeton Pedagogue. But they will never publicly proclaim it. For as another "enlightened" character in the play above quoted puts it, "there are no secrets better kept than the secrets that everybody knows."—New York Call.

WAR AS SEEN BY THE FINANCIERS.

Is the Highest Paying of All Enterprises in Which Capitalists Invest.

The Australian press has been much perturbed by what it terms the "blaze in the Balkans," and its effect upon Australian finances. Money is becoming short we are told, and most astounding of all, there have been heavy withdrawals of capital from our most sound and tempting mining propositions.

The press has floundered badly in its attempts to explain matters in connection with the doings of the great financiers, either from the fact that it hesitates to lay bare the villainies of the international capaitalists, or it does not know the true state of things, and is hence unable to throw any light upon the matter.

That there is no lack of capital we may see from a statement issued by "The Economist," which states the total issue of fresh British capital for 1911-12 to amount in all to £191,759,400. Of this huge capital Canada received in round numbers £41,000,000, Argentina nearly £17,000,000, Brazil over £19,000,000, the United States about £21,000,000, and Australia £2,332,000. In addition to this, the British Government, representing six powers, brought pressure to bear upon China to make her accept a loan of £$60,000,000. On the authority of Dr. Morrison, we have it that this proposal was regarded as one that would saddle the Republic with a preposterous burden, and Chinese statesmen rejected it, thus showing unmistakably that the action of the British Government was regarded with the utmost suspicion as being that of a capitalistic committee on the lookout for investments for its clientele.

In a recent speech the British Prime Minister said that in the past six years Britain had reduced its national debt by £64,000,000. France £17,000,000, and the United States £14,400,000. On the other hand he said that Germany had increased her national debt by $83,000,000, Austria by £112,000,000 Italy had, up to the time of the war in Tripoli, reduced her national debt £8,000,000, but the war had wiped this out and added £$20,000,000. And Russia, in the six years from 1905 to 1911, increased her national debt by £200,000,000.

The whole of the facts indicate that the nations whose industries and markets are limited are being driven to war by the international capitalists, who must, if they are to continue living upon the workers, find a means of skinning them.

The "Balkan-Blaze" is simply the result of the operations of capitalists. All the nations surrounding that storm center have been piling up their debts and preparing for war, and now that war has commenced, we hear the capitalist financiers chuckling to themselves from the remotest corners of the earth, because war offers the highest reward for the use of capital. When the war is over, and the numberless dead workers are thrown into pits like so much offal, capital will count its gains and look round once more to employ them.

The whole trouble arises from allowing the machinery of production to be owned by the few who have year after year to find increasing investments for their increasing capital. We may expect the trouble to increase, for as industry becomes unable to employ the increasing capital, the financiers will force the governments to employ it first in war preparations, and then in actual war itself. It is a murderous business that the financiers are engaged in. It is a business, which did the world properly understand it, would lead to every money-lord and every war-lord being impeached in all countries as the most dangerous and bloody pirate that the world has ever known.—International Socialist, Australia.

PLAIN TRUTHS

That Will Land the Thinking Man Firmly on His Feet.

The more we know of other nations the less we distrust them.

There is a Golden Age before us, and to that we must continually stretch forward.

The anti-Socialists are beginning to quit saying, "Socialism won't work."

It is working entirely too much to please the masters

Profit-sharing, bonuses, insurances and the like are schemes to blind the worker while they speed him up.

He is still a wage slave, and a tied one at that, for should he at any time rebel his "benefits" vanish.

Emancipation from wage slavery is the great thing to strive for.

All else is froth and bubble.

A fuller, freer, and happier life is assured when people are educated sufficiently to understand.

Socialists have got hold of the glad tidings that will usher in a "heaven upon earth," and should let no opportunity slip to pass the word along.

Light is the cure for most evils. It certainly dissipates ignorance.

Socialism advances a step with every person it enlightens.

Socialism's strength lies in the fact that it is based on truth, on liberty and on justice.

The "powers of darkness" are now understood to be Vested Interests which would keep the people ignorant.

There is no longer a genuine competitive system, except among the non-capitalists and the very small capitalists.

The control of industry is falling more and more into the hands of large combinations of capital, to the detriment of the mass of mankind.

The combination of the people is necessary to save the people.

A powerful Labor and Socialist press is required to dispel ignorance, and teach the people that their salvation depends upon social co-operation.

Poverty and unemployment result from industry being run on individualistic lines, thus preventing social organization.

Millions are out of employment in the world under capitalism.

It is surely time to inaugurate a system that will employ all.

Those who work now keep those who don't; the producers keep the idle rich and the unemployed poor.

A workless world is an impossibility because it is against natural law.

Work, however, should not be a species of servitude, but an expression of a rightly-directed energy.

Under a properly-organized system of industry some kind of work would be found for every man.

In the Socialist Republic by working for all, the individual will have all working for him.

Socialists have no interests separate and apart from the working class as a whole.

Entomologists teach us that a parasite in one locality may become useful if shifted to another locality.

Socialism's cure for the social and industrial parasite is to put him where he will be useful.

Socialism doesn't mean dividing-up; that's why it hates dividends.

Capitalism creates criminals and then punishes them, which suggests a bad workingman angrily smashing his own botches.

Labor's aim is that people should live on useful work, not on rent, interest, and profits, and useless work.

What living costs doesn't trouble the millionaire. What his liver costs is a more thrilling question.

Man wants but little here below, and capital sees that he gets it.

An advantage gained through education is permanent, because the community will allow no legislature to go back on a wide-spread conviction.—New York Daily People.

IN THE TRIAL and conviction of the Structural Iron Workers at Indianapolis, the United States government seems to have been the agent of the Steel Trust.

THE AVERAGE WAGE of the working girl in the United States is $6.15 per week On this princely salary she is supposed to secure food, shelter and clothing.

Furthermore, if she becomes ill, she is presumed to have enough "mazuma" laid away to pay for medicine and the services of a physician, and under all circumstances she must retain her virtue to merit the approval of the "Holier Than Thou."

Denver, Colorado, January 3, 1913.

To the Membership of Organized Labor, and All Who Believe That the Workingman Should Receive a Living Wage:

This is to officially notify you that on September 18, 1912, the Western Federation of Miners, the International Association of Machinists, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, the International Molders' Union of North America, the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Iron Ship Builders and the Associated Union of Steam Shovelmen; in fact, all organizations whose membership were employed in the production of copper at Bingham, Utah, except the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, after having exercised every effort within reason to negotiate a reasonable wage scale, declared a strike against all mining companies in said district. This strike is still on, and you are warned against paying any attention to the reports sent out by these companies and their agents that this strike has been settled.

Any man going to Utah and accepting employment in any of the mines at Bingham or the mills and smelters which treat the product of said mines is filling the position of a strike-breaker and lending his assistance to the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen to defeat the efforts of their fellow wage-workers to establish conditions under which they and their dependent ones may enjoy, at least, some of the absolute necessities of life.

When a settlement is reached you will be officially notified through the United Mine Workers' Journal, The Miners' Magazine and the other official organs of the organization involved.

You will also take notice that the miners at Porcupine, Ontario, Canada, are striking against a reduction in wages.

(SEAL) CHARLES MOYER,
President Western Federation of Miners.

OVER ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND Garment Workers in the City of New York, struggling for a living wage, tells the glowing story of our wonderful prosperity.

CARRIE NATION believed in "direct action" but Carrie is dead and the liquor traffic which she attempted to destroy with a hatchet is more prosperous than ever.

MORALITY is the outcome of the social conditions of man, and it is a mistake to attempt to improve the morals of the people without improving the environments by which their actions are conditioned.

You cannot, for instance, love your neighbor and at the same time compete with him in the labor market, in business or in any other field of human activity where the struggle for existence is fought, and where the victory of one often means the utter ruin of more than one other.

You cannot be really truthful in a world where the consummate liar carries off the prize amid the plaudits of the many, and truthfulness is only too often considered a badge of inefficiency and of lack of capacity for business.

You cannot even be honest, in the strict sense of the word, in speech and action, as long as hypocrisy is called politeness and regarded as an indispensable requisite of any person pretending to good manners, refinement and culture.—Buffalo Socialist.

DURING THE YEAR 1912, more than 10,000 employés were injured while pursuing their various trades and occupations.

The safety of human life commands but little attention from economic masters

THE I. W. W. has practically resolved itself into a lunch ticket for a number of professional skates who lost their usefulness in the real labor movement, and an agency for soup funds for those who are too tired to work.

CALIFORNIA has one Socialist in the Legislature.

In the year 1915 there will be others of his political faith, for such men as Otis and his confederates are making workers do some thinking in the Golden State.

DURING the past year, the courts granted 100,000 divorces, which left 70,000 children without parental supervision. In all probability, the vast majority of these people who resorted to the courts to break the bonds of wedlock will exclaim, "Socialism would destroy the home!"

THE STRIKE in the Porcupine Mining district of Ontario, Canada, still continues, and the strikers feel confident of ultimate victory.

The outrages perpetrated by the gunmen imported by the mine operators have failed to dampen the ardor of men who believe that dauntless determination can conquer the injustice of economic masters.

WILLIAM ROCKEFELLER is a citizen of the United States.

All citizens of the United States are supposed, in fiction, to be equal before the law.

But Mr. William Rockefeller is blithely sailing away for Honduras.

Meanwhile his lawyers have accepted, for him, a summons to appear before the senatorial money trust investigators. His attorneys will appear for him and answer for him!

How lively for William Rockefeller!

During many days and nights United States officers searched for William Rockefeller. He declined to allow service of a summons. He proved that he was superior to ordinary mortals before the majesty of the law.

He proved that old saying about equality to be sheer nonsense!

Had William Rockefeller been just Bill Plainman he would have been yanked out of his shanty and hauled away in a patrol wagon. He would not have been allowed to answer a federal summons through a lawyer, and to appear in the person of a lawyer.

He would not have sailed away to the balmy breezes of Honduras!

Can it be possible that there is any lesson for the workers in this little jaunt of Mr. Rockefeller?—California Social-Democrat.

SUPREME COURT Justice Blackmar of Brooklyn, New York, has upheld the constitutionality of the law limiting the hours of women to fifty-four per week. Judge Blackmar, in rendering his decision, said:

"The development of the industrial life of the nation, the pressure of women and children entering the industrial field in competition with men physically better qualified for the struggle, has compelled them to submit to conditions and terms of service which it cannot be presumed they would freely choose. Their liberty to contract to sell their labor may be but another name for involuntary servitude created by existing industrial conditions.

"A law which restrains the liberty to contract may tend to emancipate them by enabling them to act as they choose and not as competitive conditions compel.

"All these considerations are for the Legislature, and for the Legislature alone. It is only where the statute controls conduct in matters plainly and obviously indifferent to the welfare of the public or any portion thereof, that the courts can pronounce the act violative of civil liberties. Certainly this is not such a case.

"Laws which may be meddlesome interferes with the liberty of the individual in a primitive state may, in a highly organized society, become essential to public welfare, or even to the continuance of civil liberties themselves."

An appeal has been taken to a higher court.

OUT IN CLEVELAND a big tabernacle is being built to accommodate the crowds which are expected to attend "union services" to be held there within the next few weeks. The job is being done by scab labor.

The preaching will not be done by a scab parson. Heavens, no! He will be one of the very highest priced parsons to be had.

Only the portion of the work that should bring food to the working class is being done by scab labor.

Let's see: Jesus, the Nazareth labor agitator, who was crucified by the master class, was a carpenter, wasn't he? Yes. He was a carpenter.

Is it of record that he ever scabbed on the other carpenters? No. He wasn't that kind. He put in his life organizing the workers of his time.

That's why they put him to death, just as other organizers of the subject class have been put to death by the masters from time immemorial.

Well, during the big "union meetings" when all of the bankers and other bloodsuckers in Cleveland are listening to the high-priced singers and sobbing in chorus, when the high-grade spouters are putting on the soft pedal and the weepy crescendoes about meeting mother in the sky, if there is a strike meeting of the union carpenters in Cleveland, which do you think the lowly Jesus, who gave his life for his class, will attend?

Think it over.—Buffalo Socialist.

I SHOULD JUDGE by the utterances of the Old Doc that there are to be hot times in little old Washington after the 4th of March.

In a speech made at Staunton, Va., the other day, he announced in that simple offhand way of his that in his administration there would be no monopolies and no one would be allowed to get rich except by rendering an adequate service to the public.

So I should judge there will be some doings when the Old Doc takes hold. Mr. Rockefeller's income last year was $75,000,000 and his services to the public consisted of batting a golf ball over the course twice a day. So he will have to go. And the Vanderbilts, the Goulds, the heirs of the Huntingtons, Crockers, Hopkinses and the rest of the railroad wreckers drew about a billion for no services whatever. So they will have to go. And Mr. Thomas Fortune Ryan annexed the interest on $500,000,000 and did nothing except finance Harper's Weekly, which isn't a service at all, but an offense before God and man. So he will have to go. And about one hundred thousand other parasites fed upon the labor of other men and rendered no service except to exhibit their upholstered forms for the benefit of the untaught multitude. So they will have to go.

Yes, it's going to be something of a season at the nation's capital. Dr. Wilson doesn't tell us how he is going to make all these fateaters get out, but he has put on record his opinion of the man that makes promises to the country and then does not keep them, so there can be no doubt that monopoly is about to end in America and how nice that will be!—Russell, in Coming Nation.

"WHY, LIKE AS NOT, only the prospect of another prison term." Is this society's measure of the worth of a man? Would it be too "paternal" for the state to pay a man for the work it requires of him while in prison, and thus give him a real start when it adjudges him fit to return to the world? The state restrains the liberty of a man for society's good. It takes profit off the labor of this same man—for whose good?

It is hard enough for the average man, dropped from one place of employment, and without means to get self-sustaining work. How much harder, then, must it be for the man who leaves the doors of a prison, to re-enter the world in which he is to redeem himself, without money and without a job?

They said they were giving that boy his liberty when they released him from the reformatory. But they told one of society's sad, stale lies.

The boy or man who has to hunt for a job is about the most helpless prisoner on the map.

Men are every day selling their manhood for the sake of a job. They bend in unmanly attitude before the jobholder, and they take his slurs—for fear of losing their job.

Girls and women are every day selling their bodies to get or hold a job.

The prison isn't the problem.

It's the uncivilized scheme of society that makes the world one vast prison wherein the honest and industrious are eternally penalized for the profit of the lazy and dishonest.—The Citizen.

JUDGE ROBERT W. ARCHBALD of Scranton, Pennsylvania, has been found guilty by the Senate of the United States. That august body of national lawmakers has brought in its verdict charging Archbald guilty of "crimes and misdemeanors."

There were thirteen charges filed against Archbald and he was found guilty on five.

The Senate declared as follows:

"The Senate therefore do order and decree, and it is hereby adjudged, that the respondent, Robert W. Archbald, Circuit Judge for the United States for the Third Judicial Circuit and designated to serve in the Commerce Court, be and he hereby is removed from office; and that he be and hereby is forever disqualified to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States."

Robert W. Archbald has occupied various judicial positions for a period of twenty-nine years, and his record on the bench has reeked with infamy.

The Senate found that he had used his official position to advance his personal interests.

He has dealt with mining corporations and railroads and never hesitated to enter into shady transactions to enhance the financial standing of himself.

Archbald has been removed from the bench, but the system that made Archbald a corrupt judge has not been molested.

Archbald's successor will be surrounded by the same environments and it is reasonable to presume that he may yield to the same temptations that have smirched the judicial ermine of the deposed jurist, of Pennsylvania.

Removing a judge from the bench will not remove judicial corruption as long as the system remains that debauches official life.

THE DELEGATES (A. F. of L. convention) evidently represented the average opinions of the members of the unions that sent them. The more progressive element cannot go ahead very far until these others become convinced of the necessity of adopting their ideas. To educate them to that point we must stay with them; accept the verdict of the majority while we continue our work of education. We may become impatient, disheartened by the inertia of the mass, but we can not go far ahead of the mass. We can only lead our fellow workers in the light by staying with them. We have the right on our side. Grim necessity will continue to forward our programs. The one fatal mistake we could make would be to sever our relations with those who, in time, will be forced to see the logic of our position. In each convention the minority, representing the real leaders, is becoming more formidable. Let us stick with them until we become the majority.—United Mine Workers' Journal.

The above sentiments expressed by the United Mine Workers' Journal have the right ring and are typical of men who believe in democracy.

If the logic and arguments of the progressive element in the American Federation of Labor are based upon a solid foundation, it is only a question of time until that element will be in the majority. In this day and age when Capital is working ceaselessly to dismember the labor movement, it would be fatal to the interests of the working class for organized labor to split on the question of the policy to be pursued to achieve the best results. The progressive element can convert the conservative element, and the man who calls himself a progressive and who advocates that his particular craft or trade organization shall sever the ties of affiliation, has lost faith either in the efficacy of his arguments to convince, or else he concedes but little intelligence to the rank and file of the labor movement.

A Carrion Feast

WITH THE HOWLING FEROCITY of slavedrivers who have caught a victim in the act of striking back, the capitalist pulpit, press and public forum have fallen upon the manacled "labor leaders" at Indianapolis, and, feeling safe to vent their spite upon them, have taken full advantage of their opportunity. Of the two classes, we do not hesitate to say that, conscience considered, we would rather be with the poor, ignorant, half-baked victims condemned to prison, than to be with the fat, corrupt, overfed lackeys of the rich who are delighting in the feast upon their entrails.

The fact that not a single one of the condemned labor leaders is a Socialist has nothing to do with the case; the fact that many of them, including John T. Butler of Buffalo, had frequently fulminated against the Socialists as being "too radical" has nothing to do with it; the fact that they insisted upon butting their heads against the stone wall and ignoring the convenient gate of political class action, has nothing to do with it.

Two facts stand out bright and clear.

First, that if they were guilty, which is by no means established to the satisfaction of the working class, they had merely done to certain powerful members of the capitalist class what the capitalist class has been doing to them for ages.

Second, if they were innocent, which is not improbable, they merely add a few more to the long list of working class leaders who have fallen a prey to the vengeance of their hereditary enemies.

They say that the Steel Trust is the most implacable of foes, and that years ago, J. P. Morgan vowed that the last labor union should be wiped out of the steel industry. Apparently Morgan is triumphant for the time being; but the battle is by no means over.

For long, the workers have been led by blind leaders whose only resource has been to fight the capitalist with the weapons which the capitalist alone knows how to wield—the weapons of conspiracy, war chests and "starving out" the enemy.

Of late years, the working class in the steel industry, as in other industries, has been educating itself to the use of new weapons. These are the weapons of political solidarity and industrial unionism.

Morgan has gained a triumph in carrying out his threat to wipe out the last of the iron workers' unions. His success for the time being has been due to two causes: First, the control of the political, police and judicial powers; second, the fact that the workers, split into warring craft unions, persisted in helping him to win by alternately fighting one another for the benefit of Morgan.

If the struggling victims caught in the net at Indianapolis fought back, like rats in a trap, as they best know how, poor as their method was, we can but commend the spirit of militancy, even though we may at the same time regret the crack-brained idiocy of fighting a foe on his own ground, with his own weapon—violence.

The "crimes" of the group convicted at Indianapolis, if crimes they were, are trifling compared with the crimes of the capitalist class committed every day in each sweatshop of America, in each child-slave pen, in each mill and mine where the life-blood of the workers' babes is ground and squeezed into dollars to buy diamond collars for pampered poodles, and pimpled princes for the vacant-minded daughters of our toadstool aristocracy.

The lessons learned by the working class are learned in the hard school of experience. In the stress and strife and turmoil of the everlasting battle for a chance to live, the economic and ethical truths born of the class struggle are driven home. But, ultimately, the working class learns its lesson.—Buffalo Socialist.

Denunciation Will Accomplish But Little

SAMUEL GOMPERS delivered a lengthy address recently before the sub-committee on judiciary of the United States Senate, and his address was a vigorous defense of organized labor.

Mr. Gompers was still smarting from the effects of the verdicts rendered in the trials at Indianapolis and the conviction and imprisonment of thirty-three members of the Structural Iron Workers nerved the president of the American Federation of Labor to surpass his previous efforts in denunciation of the war that is being waged against the labor movement.

The following synopsis of Gompers' address was sent out from Washington and appeared in almost all the daily journals:

"If ever the time shall come," said Gompers in the climax of his address, "when government by dynamite shall be attempted (and let us hope and work that it never shall come), it will have as its main cause the theory and policy upon which is based government by injunction—personal government foisted upon our people instead of a government by law."

In closing his statement which included an assault upon employers and the Manufacturers' Association, particularly the United States Steel Corporation and the National Erectors' Association, Gompers declared that organized labor would not repudiate the Structural Iron Workers' Union "and leave them helpless and at the mercy of organized capital and insatiable, uncurbed greed for profits."

"Though all censure those whom men may deem guilty of dynamite conspiracy," the federation leader continued, "none feels the terrible consequences of the Indianapolis trial more keenly than the men of organized labor. There have been added heartache and sorrow to our already heavy burdens. The men accused and sentenced cannot suffer the penalties alone—upon them and all workingmen fall the suffering and penalty.

"But what of the conspiracy of organized capital—the conspiracy to murder the liberty of the toilers, to tear from them the means of protection by which they have bettered their condition, to leave them bare and defenseless in the competitive struggle?"

Judge Anderson, who presided over the trial of the iron workers, was referred to particularly by Gompers, when he declared that 'our whole social organization seems to be on trial."

"Even the judge who tried the case, smugly assured of personal irresponsibility," Gompers said, "fatuously declared that 'the evidence in this case will convince any impartial person that government by injunction is infinitely to be preferred to government by dynamite.'

"The worthy judge had blindly chanced upon one of the causes, but had failed to realize casual relationship. The worth is to him simply the worth of a conventional epigram—he does not know that there is a law of life just as immutable as the law of gravitation."

Gompers defended the American Federation of Labor as a force for betterment of conditions, and resented the attacks made upon it in the beginning of the dynamiters' case.

"We have been investigated," he said, "from the first insinuation that the enemies of our movement made to get the men 'higher up.'

"Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, was summoned to appear before the grand jury. Not a scintilla of evidence or suspicion of wrong-doing could be discovered."

The Federation leader referred to statements made by John Kirby, Jr., president of the National Manufacturers' Association; William J. Burns, the detective; Harrison Grey Otis, editor of the Los Angeles Times, and others whom he characterized as "enemies" of organized labor.

Launching into his attack upon the employers whom he declared persistently had fought the iron workers' union, Gompers said:

"For six years the fight went on. You say that these men resorted to forbidden methods of violence and even sacrificed lives. You condemn their methods. Of any of those who are guilty, the condemnation is true, but I ask you—were the methods used by the employers less deadly to humanity and freedom?? Each will protect his own interests."

The above sentiments expressed by Gompers show conclusively that he realizes the seriousness of the assault that is being made against organized labor, but Mr. Gompers should likewise realize that denun- ciation will not halt or minimize the attack of exploiters who have decreed that the forces of labor shall be shattered, if possible. Gompers may hurl his most forcible condemnation against the means and methods utilized by employers and the combinations to which they belong, but the most vigorous objections that may be raised by Gompers against the combined efforts of organized wealth to render the labor movement helpless, will be of no avail.

The closing sentence of Gompers: "Each will protect his own interests," demonstrates that Mr. Gompers recognizes the fact that "identity of interest" between employer and employé is being exploded by the history that is being written every day concerning the conflicts between Labor and Capital.

The most conservative member of labor is being forced to discard the false philosophy that the interests of employer and employé are identical and forced to the conclusion that their interests are diametrically opposed, and because of this fact, every organization of employers is arrayed against the labor movement.

Mr. Gompers, in declaring that "each will protect his own interests" must admit that there is a class struggle, and that being true, it devolves upon Mr. Gompers to teach a philosophy that will unite labor industrially and politically.

"Rewarding our friends and rebuking our enemies" will not solve the problem, but the industrial and political solidarity of labor will make it possible for the working class to enjoy human rights.

Shut Off the Revenue

A NUMBER of Socialist publications, during the past few months, have contained editorials that reflect seriously on an organization that is known as the Industrial Workers of the World.

These publications have likewise contained many articles written by prominent Socialists, who denounce the doctrines of an organization that has nothing in its armory save weapons of destruction.

Observing Socialists are beginning to realize that the I. W. W. is but a parasite that feeds upon the generosity of those who have been unacquainted with its methods of disruption.

Socialists are beginning to realize that the propaganda of this organization calling itself the Industrial Workers of the World, consists of abuse and slander and that the name and reputation of no man or woman is secure, who repudiates the hoodlum tactics of the professional disseminators of verbal garbage.

For the past few years Socialists, as well as members of organized labor, have been deluded by the loquacious managers of this aggregation, and when receiving circulars in glaring headlines, announcing strikes and free speech fights, have contributed generously, believing that their contributions would advance and promote the interests of the working class.

The orgies at Spokane, San Diego and other places have become a matter of history.

Thousands of dollars poured into Spokane and San Diego, and these funds were raised by Socialists and organized labor, but the recipients of these funds have not even been grateful to the men and women who parted from their hard-earned dollars in response to the heartrending appeals of sweatless vagrants who work the workers and keep no books.

Their appeals for funds did not find space in the columns of the Miners' Magazine, and for this lack of recognition on the part of the editor, he has become a target for the profane maledictions and scurrilous defamation of the beggarly mendicants who glory in singing: "I'm a Bum."

The membership of the Western Federation of Miners repudiated by referendum vote this abortion on unionism, and the Socialist party and every labor body in this country must take the necessary steps to strangle to death the Indolent, Workless Ingrates, whose mitts are continually stretched to receive funds from the very organizations which are calumniated and slandered by its traveling jawsmiths. The Socialist party and organized labor have made it possible for the Hammer Gang to live, and it is about time that men and women who believe in Socialism and Unionism reached the conclusion that the Miscarriage, better known as the "Bummery," should be sentenced to death via the starvation route.

When organized labor and the Socialist party, that are traduced by the professional detractors, shut off the revenue, the obituary of I. W. W.-ism will be written.

District 6, W. F. M., in Convention

Special to the District Ledger.

NELSON, JAN. 9.—District 6, W. F. M., met in annual convention for the fifteenth time yesterday and are continuing their sessions today and until their business is transacted. President Davidson, in his address, made reference to many subjects of import to the organization and dealt at some length with the matters in dispute between themselves and the operators, and for which a board of conciliation has been appointed. Resolutions asking the Dominion government to improve the present system of the savings bank; authorizing the executive to put an organizer in the field; opposing the suggested increase in postage rates on newspapers and other matters of importance is on the agenda.

Reference was made by President Davidson in his annual report to the importance to labor of the victory won by District No. 6 and District No. 18, United Mine Workers of America, in the Kruz case, which, by the decision of the privy council, established the right of foreign dependents to secure damages under the workman's compensation act and in the good work which had been accomplished by the district.

That District No. 6 was in a better condition financially and from the point of view of prestige than at any previous time in its history was shown by the report of Secretary Shilland who presented the statement of receipts and expenditures.

Amendments to the provincial elections act, which were regarded as of the utmost importance to the union men and people as a whole of this province, were suggested in a resolution from Sandon local, which was referred to the British Columbian Federation of Labor.

Nelson, B. C., Jan. 10.—Legislation providing that workers acquiring miners' phthisis and other diseases resulting from employment under unhealthy conditions may secure compensation under the workmen's compensation act; that the eight-hour law be extended to include all men working at smelters, and that the B. C. act will be amended to the standard of the Alberta compensation act, were passed at the closing sessions of annual convention of W. F. of M., No. 6.

Officers elected were: President, Cuthbertson, Trail; vice president, W. Flemming, Kimberly; second vice president, George Castele, Trail; secretary-treasurer, A. Shilland, Sandon; delegates to B. C. F. of L., Percy Johnstone and J. Cuthbertson; District 18, William Davidson; fraternal delegate.

A. J. Carter addressed the convention, also J. W. Bennett and Mr. McNiven, fair wage officer, spoke to the delegates on matters concerning labor which was received with enthusiasm. Matters pertaining to the conciliation board now sitting in Nelson were extensively discussed and some misunderstanding relative to the action of some of the locals was cleared. Convention closed by interesting remarks from retiring President Davidson on the work of the organization during his term of office.

The Situation at Bingham Canyon, Utah

Bingham, Utah, January 12, 1913.

Report to the Executive Board, Western Federation of Miners.

WHILE IN COMPANY with several others viewing the mining district of Bingham, in as far as the Utah Copper aperations are concerned, we discovered that there are six steam shovels on the ore body, of which only three are in operation loading ore on the railroad cars. Near the top of the mountain there are also two shovels, one removing capping on the south side, the other one is on the north side standing idle.

Further investigation disclosed the fact that as far as ore shipments for the previous week are concerned, approximately forty cars of ore on each road (B. & G. and D. R. & G.) daily.

This great falling off in tonnage is due to the dilapidated condition of the mills and smelters in Garfield, as a result of insufficient help in the various mechanical departments.

We were also informed that during the latter part of December, on or about the first of the New Year, there would be a marked decrease in the number of deputies employed, ahd as a result of our investigation discovered that at various points along the route twenty-five or more of the most desperate looking Cossacks that ever graced God's footstool were still on duty. This looks as though their number was not decreasing very fast, judging from personal observation, as well as other reliable sources, that the number of men employed in and around the Utah Copper, inclusive of deputies, to be not over 750.

The Utah Construction Company has two steam shovels also in operation removing capping for the Utah Copper Company with a force of about seventy-five men employed.

We have learned but little in regard to operations in the United States mining district, as it is practically unsafe for other than a strikebreaker to try to penetrate the Cossack stronghold. But we were informed by some of the men employed there at the time of the recent cave-in, in which four strikebreakers lost their lives, that there would be an exodus of at least 100 men in the near future as a result of the unsafe condition of the underground workings caused through lack of experienced employés.

There is practically no change as far as the smaller companies are concerned; they all seem to be dragging along in the same old haphazard way.

We also understand that the proposed increase in wages in as far as some of the common labor is concerned, did not materialize.

Relief Committee: P. J. McKENNON, Chairman.

Condemned by Their Brotherhood

Rocky Mountain Lodge No. 77, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Denver, Colorado, January 10, 1913.

THE FOLLOWING RESOLUTION was unanimously adopted by Rocky Mountain Lodge No. 77, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, at our regular meeting held January 9th, 1913:

WHEREAS, It has come to our knowledge that certain demands for increased wages made by certain employés of The Utah Copper Company, located at Bingham Canyon, Utah, and that said increase did not even reach the amount paid other employés for similar services, and the refusal of said increase resulted in a strike of the said employés of the said company; and

WHEREAS, As we have learned that all other employés of the said company, located at or about the mines of Bingham Canyon, including the machinists, blacksmiths, carpenters, shovelmen and all others, have ceased to work for said company, during said strike, except the men who are engaged in the operation of the locomotives employed in taking the ore from the steam shovels; and,

WHEREAS, As we understand it, the men employed on said engines are all, or nearly all, members of this brotherhood and mainly constitute the membership of Lodge No. 690; and,

WHEREAS, No contract of any kind exists between said company and said brotherhood, or the members of said lodge, or any of them, directly or indirectly; and,

WHEREAS, The said Utah Copper Company absolutely refuses and did refuse to at any time receive any of the officers of this brotherhood, as such, having business in connection with said enginemen, or to in any manner acknowledge the existence of this brotherhood or of any other labor organization; and,

WHEREAS, These members have been and are now running and firing the engines hauling the ore from the shovels, and, as we are reliably informed are the only class of organized workmen who are working under these circumstances with strikebreakers, protected by gunmen; and while it may be true that said members can continue in said employment under such circumstances and conditions without losing their membership in this brotherhood; and,

WHEREAS, It is notoriously and well known that said, The Utah Copper Company, is amassing colossal fortunes in paid dividends every month, showing their full ability to meet with such slight increase of wages; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deplore and condemn the actions of any class of labor, and particularly of this class, who will work under the facts and circumstances, as we understand them to exist, to be degrading in the extreme and worthy of the condemnation of all brotherhood men. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the members of Lodge No. 690, and to the men who are out on that strike.

J. F. McNAMARA, President No. 77

JOHN A. RYMER, Secretary No. 77.

A Dangerous Enemy to Labor

THE DESERET NEWS of Salt Lake, under the head of "Enemies of Labor," had the following editorial:

"The agitators who tell the people that there is one law for the rich and one for the poor are not telling the truth. In this country all are equal before the law. Or, in other words, the law applies equally to all, and the same law is for the millionaire in the palace and the miner in his cabin. It is true that the man who has money can buy costly lawyers and obtain advantages beyond the reach of the poor, but that is not because of the law, or the government. There is nothing serious the matter with either. Those who contend to the contrary are simply telling the people a falsehood. They are dangerous. They are revolutionists who would delight in seeing the flames of civil war sweeping the country from one end to another. That is why they are raving against the law and the government. That is why they are defending the destruction of property by dynamite and wholesale massacre of independent workingmen.

"There is no war by the government on labor or laborers. The real conflict is between laboring men themselves. Some of the workingmen have taken the view that organized labor has a monopoly of all the work there is to be done, and that independent workingmen have no right to earn a living for themselves and families. And this discussion has advanced far beyond the academic stage. Men have been murdered for daring to work, and that is why the government has interfered—not against laborers, but to put a stop to murder.

"We have not a word to say against unionism, or organized labor. Workingmen have a right to organize for their own benefit. But when agitators who never do an honest day's work but live on agitation succeed in using the unions for criminal purposes, it is the duty of friends of the laborers to warn them against the consequences, and it is the duty of society to protect them against their enemies, who come to them in sheep's clothes, though they are wolves."

No one who is acquainted with the editorial policy of The Deseret News will accuse that journal of being an advocate of the principles of organized labor. The most dangerous enemies of labor are those journals that profess friendship for unionism, and at the same time hold up the agitator as a criminal.

Every step in the progress of humanity has been brought about by the agitator, who is flailed by journals whose editorials must meet the approval of industrial pirates and commercial buccaneers. A rushing river is far more preferable to gaze upon than a stagnant pool. A human being who is mentally dead and voiceless, will never leave any "footprints on the sands of time."

Christ was an agitator, and because the doctrines which He preached were at variance with the ethics of the money changers whom He castigated in the temple, he was branded as a criminal, crowned with thorns and finally condemned to die upon a cross on Calvary.

The men of '76 who signed the Declaration of Independence were stigmatized as agitators and rebels, but from their missionary work as agitators, grew the deathless sentiment that crucified regal imperialism on the soil of a New World and laid the foundations upon which was built the structure of a Republic.

Brown, Phillips and Garrison were agitators, hounded, persecuted, maligned and mobbed by the pretended worshippers of the law, and yet these agitators who were spurned and loathed with contempt by our respectable citizenship who were credited with reverence for the majesty of the law, kindled that flame of fraternal sympathy in the human heart that resulted in snatching the black man from the auction block and putting chattel slavery in its eternal grave.

The agitators in every age have stood in the van of progress, and since Christ was crucified for his work in the uplifting of humanity, and Brown was murdered because his eloquence was consecrated to the liberation of an enslaved race, it is not to be wondered at that The Deseret News, the organ of Privilege, should raise a protest against the man who speaks for the victims of economic masters.

The Deseret News, with unblushing effrontery, repeats the old, chronic lie that we are "all equal before the law," when even the most verdant "Rube" that ever escaped from an alfalfa reservation, knows that our courts are reeking with corruption.

The victim of poverty who is forced to steal, is furnished with a cell in a prison, but a "frenzied financier" who loots the vaults of a bank, can take a trip to the Old World, carrying in his pocket a pardon from the President of the United States.

A pauper, stealing to save himself from starvation, is imprisoned, but a Morse can feign ill health and be restored to citizenship, to again pursue the vocation of a shark on Wall Street.

The News refers to the independent workingman, and by independent means the man who has not brains enough to seek shelter in a labor organization. If to remain outside the realms of a labor organization means independence for the workingman, then why does the manufacturer, the mine operator and other employers of labor band themselves together in their respective organizations? Does the employer lose his independence when he joins an Employers' Association, and if not, then how does it follow that the worker ceases to be independent when he joins hands with his fellowmen in a labor organization? The employer, when he becomes a member of an Employers' Association, puts his individual interests behind the bulwarks of the organization of which he becomes a member, because he knows that his individual interests in such an organization will receive protection. The workingman with brains, joins a labor organization because he knows that standing alone as an individual, he can wrest nothing from the clenched grip of Greed.

The workingman who stays outside the labor organization in order to be independent, reads journals of the same character as The Deseret News, and is more to be pitied than blamed for his mental malady that makes him believe that he is independent. The News is coarse in its work.

When members of the working class, driven to desperation through the despotism of industrial tyrants, use weapons of violence to redress wrong, and in the use of such weapons take human life, the government becomes the agent of giant trusts and corporations to put the lawbreakers in prison or send them to the scaffold. But when a mine owner, through greed for profit, is culpable of an explosion that kills hundreds of his slaves, there is no federal investigation and no indictments of a grand jury to bring the murderer to the bar of justice.

The editorial flummery in The Deseret News should be consigned to the garbage can.

The General Strike

VI. THE MEANING OF SABOTAGE.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

DIRECT ACTION, as understood in the Latin countries, has three main ways of expressing itself. It can take the form of strikes, of boycotts, and of sabotage. The first two methods of industrial warfare are well enough known in this country not to require definition. But, what is sabotage?

"I am not going to take time tonight," said William D. Haywood, in a famous address at Cooper Union, New York city, "to describe to you the conditions in France, though I would like to do so, because I again want to justify direct action and sabotage. You have plenty of it over there. I don't know anything that can be applied that will bring as much satisfaction to you, as much anguish to the boss, as a little sabotage in the right place, at the proper time. Find out what it means. It won't hurt you, and it will cripple the boss."

Well, now, what does it mean; what is sabotage? Pouget, the French trade union leader, declares that sabotage was first intended to mean, for bad pay, bad work. As the English workers say, "Go Canny! Don't hurry." Give as little in return to the employer as possible. The employer considers labor a commodity—well, if he insists on buying it cheap, let him get an inferior article. This was the original idea; but the term came gradually to include any action on the part of dissatisfied workmen to break the machines, spoil the product of the machines, and render the conduct of industry unprofitable, if not actually impossible. Finally sabotage ranged all the way from machine obstruction or destruction to dynamiting, train wrecking, and arson. It is not advised that a dissatisfied baker worker should put ground glass in the dough, or that a pharmacist put poison in a medicine; but it is advised that an electrical worker should tangle wires or cut them; that a railroad employé should smash his engine, and that a machinist should drop a bolt in the turbines. These, or indeed any effort, criminal or otherwise, to ruin a machine or to spoil its product, would be classed as sabotage. To be sure, many of the advocates of sabotage disclaim any intention of personal injury. They seek only the injury of property. The McNamaras declared that they had no intention of destroying human life, but the fact remains that in the attempt to practice the methods of sabotage, the McNamaras were led deeper and deeper in the ways of crime and violence.

While sabotage is a new term, it describes a method of warfare that has been practiced by the oppressed in all ages. Slaves were forced to practice sabotage in some manner or other, as that was their only means of retaliation for any brutality of the master. In those countries where men are not allowed to strike against oppression, sabotage is used as a method of warfare. Where workingmen are denied all open and peaceable means of righting their wrongs, when their strikes are doomed to failure by the use of the courts and the armies, when their protests are of no avail, and all their honorable efforts fail to bring relief, sabotage will inevitably be resorted to as the one most effective weapon left to rebellious spirits. As assassination is almost the only weapon men have in countries without the freedom to speak, to write, to assemble, or to vote, so sabotage is the only weapon that workingmen have in a country that denies them the right to organize, to strike, and to picket. Like insurrection—it is the last resort. It is a right that cannot be denied. And if it is not generally used by men today, it is solely because of their desire to abide by open, humane, and legal methods of warfare so long as those methods are allowed them.

Sabotage is a product of despair. It is an acknowledgment that working class organization, both political and economic, is a failure. Turning then from organized and co-operative effort, the advocates of sabotage believe that a minority of desperate and determined men can do by violence what the open efforts of democracy have failed to accomplish. Sabotage is a return to the individual methods of the anarchists. Eugene V. Debs has well said: "If I regarded the class struggle as guerrilla warfare, I would join the anarchists and practice as well as preach such tactics. * * * I am opposed to sabotage and to 'direct action.' * * * The very nature of these tactics adapts them to guerrilla warfare, to the bomb planter, the midnight assassin. * * * Such tactics appeal to stealth and suspicion, and cannot make for solidarity. The very teaching of sneaking and surreptitious practices has a demoralizing effect and a tendency to place those who engage in them in the category of 'Black Hand' agents, dynamiters, safe blowers, hold-up men, burglars, thieves, and pickpockets.

"If sabotage and 'direct action,' as I interpret them, were incorporated in the tactics of the Socialist party, it would at once be the signal for all the agents provovateurs and police spies in the country to join the party and get busy. Every solitary one of them would be a rabid 'direct actionist,' and every one would safely make his 'get-away' and secure his reward, a la McPartland, when anything was 'pulled off' by their dupes, leaving them with their necks in the nooses.

"With the sanctioning of sabotage and similar practices, the Socialist party would stand responsible for the deed of every spy or madman, the seeds of strife would be subtly sown in the ranks, mutual suspicion would be aroused, and the party would soon be torn into warring factions, to the despair of the betrayed workers and the delight of their triumphant masters"

I quote the above denunciation of sabotage and similar tactics not merely as the opinion of Debs, but as the position of the entire International Socialist and Trade Union movement. There are only a handful of men, outside of France, who sanction such methods, and many of these have been excluded from the Socialist movement. Indeed, since Debs wrote the above, the Socialist party of this country has adopted the following article as a part of its constitution:

> Section 6. Any member of the party who opposes political action or advocates crime, sabotage, or other methods of violence as a weapon of the working class to aid in its emancipation, shall be expelled from membership in the party.

Fortunately, even the French workers, who at first put their faith in direct action, are now beginning to denounce some of its most dangerous forms. Especially are they awakening to the folly of sabotage. Sorel, who has been the ablest theorist of revolutionary unionism, declares: "Sabotage is a method of past ages, and it does not at all tend to lead the workers toward their emancipation. There is, in the mind of the masses, a great number of grievous survivances which it is the mission of Socialism to dissipate." Some anarchists are also growing sick of such barbarous and degrading tactics. "Sabotage," says Jean Grave, "is the crafty procedure of the feeble or the slave, who, not daring to rebel, gives a kick to the dog of his master. In order to have the right to argue with one's employer, one must not place one's self in a condition of inferiority, where he may treat you as a thief and a liar."

"La Grave Perlee" is a method of warfare similar to sabotage. This is a strike of men who remain at work, and who, with apparent zeal to carry out all instructions, conspire together to do everything wrong. Goods are labeled to the wrong address. The engineer, who is instructed to see that every nut and bolt is tight, loses endless time at every station in the most minute inspection. Dispatches are sent to the wrong place, with the result that trains stand without orders, and the whole system breaks down. The latter method is less vicious than sabotage, but the two in practice usually end the same way—in a series of criminal acts.

There is somethihg pathetic in the fact that at this late day the workers should have to spend any time discussing sabotage, and that the great and magnificent movement of the working class, which is in many ways the most inspiring thing the world has known, should have anywhere today to fight to free itself from a policy that offers a cloak for the work of "black-hand agents, dynamiters, safe blowers, hold-up men, burglars, thieves, and pickpockets." Must we admit that the working class is yet so weak that its methods must be criminal or so childlike that it can only kick the dog of its master? The tactics of sabotage were practiced thousands of years before the working class knew the power of organization. They were practiced in England in the '30s and '40s of last century. It was the spirit of sabotage that led to the bomb at the Haymarket in Chicago. Up to the present the method of sabotage has only led the working class to riot without purpose, to violence without aim, into a helpless misery which it has seemed would never end.

Fortunately, there is no need to fear that sabotage will ever get a hold on the workers of America. As soon as the American workers understand the meaning of sabotage, they will have little use for it. Criminal methods may attract to the unions bums and hoodlums, but they only repel the working class. And the simple fact is that the American movement is too far advanced, politically and industrially, to listen long to the propagandists of sabotage. Wherever it is preached and practiced, labor organization is weak. It is a sign of infancy and mobs. It can never dwell in harmony with the intelligent and constructive organization of labor. As John R. McMahon has said:

"A gorilla might be taught to throw a brick. * * * It is easy to teach a man to throw a brick or cripple a machine. It is hard to teach him Socialism. What use is the man who has been taught to throw a brick? Give him a full stomach and he will fight on the other side. What is direct action, sabotage, after all? It seems to be our old friend, anarchism, in a new, though slightly bedraggled grab. The mission of Socialism is to teach the workers the futility of sabotage and to show them that stupid fury will gain them nothing."

Sabotage has, of course, no inherent connection with the general strike. It has, however, an association. Both are the theories of those who fight political action; both are examples of "direct action," and both may be merely the outbursts of a blind fury that can lead a working class, too ignorant to think and too inert to organize, into the streets to be shot.

Some have lamented the loss to the working class of the marvelous and masterful oratory of Briand, the self-styled father of direct action. Well, I don't know what services he may render capitalism, now that he works openly in its pay; but, God knows, his work in the French labor movement has been worth millions to his present masters. It is not without sorrow that one thinks of Herve, who has spent so many years in prison, because he was sincere enough to practice what he preached, now forced to confess that since Briand turned the French workers from trade union methods and political action to anarchistic methods and direct action—the French workers have developed a party and a trade union movement "equally stagnant, with equally ridiculous inefficiency, treasuries without money, journals without readers, and have engendered demoralization, skepticism, and disgust."

Some Truth Revealed

THE FOLLOWING is extracted from the Salt Lake Deseret News:

"From the east, however, comes a report of the effect of the strike upon the Utah Copper's reduction.

"Utah Copper is still suffering from the effects of its recent labor troubles, according to George L. Walker. It is estimated that the strikes in Bingham and Ely will result first and last in a production loss of 35,000,000 pounds of copper for the two districts; that they will add more than half a cent per pound to the cost of the company's copper for the year 1912, and that its net earnings will be lower by $1.50 a share than they would have been had operations continued uninterruptedly throughout the year.

"When production wsa resumed after the strike ore had to be mined at those points where it could be gotten at quickly and conveniently. The reduced labor forces naturally delayed a resumption of stripping operations. As a result, the average grade of ore treated during December was very low and with it was mixed more or less waste and capping. The grade of the ore that went through the concentrators in December was around 1.20 per cent. and the recovery probably did not exceed sixteen to seventeen pounds of copper per ton. As a result, Utah Copper's production for the month was somewhere around 6,000,000 pounds, which is only half the amount that was being produced monthly before the strike occurred.

"This, however, is only a temporary condition. The company has not yet secured quite as many men as it needs and of course it will take some time to organize thoroughly the new working forces. It probably will not take more than sixty to ninety days, however, to get the volume of production up to the maximum of 12,000,000 pounds monthly.

"The management of the Utah Copper Company now anticipates that the work of stripping the capping from that very large portion of its ore deposit that lies on the south side of the gulch and extends up to and just beyond the top of the mountain, on which its work is now centered, will be completed within three years. Meanwhile operations will continue on their present gigantic scale, 15,000 to 20,000 tons of ore and 30,000 to 35,000 tons of capping being excavated every day. After the stripping is completed it is confidently believed that the company's copper will be produced year in and year out at an average cost of less than seven cents a pound.

"During the year just closed, Utah Copper is estimated to have produced 97,000,000 pounds of copper. This year its output should exceed 120,000,000 pounds and its cost should be as low if not lower than in any previous year in its history. Every dollar of profit that comes from the Utah Copper Company's property in the future will be 'velvet.' From the beginning the company has had approximately $14,000,000 to spend on property purchases, stripping, construction, etc., and net earnings so far have equalled this amount. With the help of its $5,000,000 income from its Nevada Consolidated investment the company has paid over $16,000,000 in dividends and in addition has built up very large cash reserves for working capital. Some time this year it will increase its dividend rates. The stock is being bought on all reactions by strong investment interests."

In the above is revealed considerable truth as to the loss sustained by the mine barons of Bingham, Utah.

The Utah Copper Company, with all their agents scattered in different parts of the country recruiting strikebreakers to fill places of the strikers, have ingloriously failed to make the mines productive as of yore, and the shrinkage of dividends must be a heartrending blow to the sharks who hunger for the usual profits.

In the western journals it has been made to appear that the mines were being operated almost to their full capacity, and some of the mine operators, particularly the officials of the Utah Copper Company, have been using extensively the columns of western journals to impress upon the public mind that the production at the mines had almost reached a normal condition.

But the article taken from an eastern publication and reproduced in The Deseret News of Salt Lake, tells another story.

The Utah Copper Company is paying an awful price in its attempt to crush organized labor in Bingham Canyon. The arbitrary attitude assumed by the mine barons, that organized labor must not be recognized, has been costly, and the losses will continue regardless of the millions that have been accumulated by mine owners, who look upon their employés as abject slaves, unworthy of the recognition of haughty masters, who desire to hold labor in the chains of servitude.

A Sad Reminder

CARLYLE SAYS the Old Guard didn't make a heroic reply to the allies when on Waterloo field the devastating hosts of the allies demanded surrender. But they should have said it. Here is a little letter, published and credited to a child in Bingham:

Bingham Canyon, Utah, December 7, 1912.

Dear Mr. Postmaster: If you see Sainta Clas will you tell that we want soom things from him this Christmas. Papa has been out of work for 2 months. The strike put us so we wont have no Christmas this year. Gladys Collins wants a doll, story book and ribbons. I want a doll, story book and handchifts and ribbons. My sister Ethel, a doll, a story book and ribbons. And my brother, Roy Collins, wants a gun, story book and pair of gloves. I wish you would tell him. I give thank to you.

Bingham, Utah, Fremen Gulch. Yours truly,

MISS LUCILE COLLINS.

I am going on the theory that the letter is genuine. It ought to be. And if it were made in the office, it deserves almost as much credit as if the author were a little child again—which is about the acme of compliment for composition.

Really, the letter never should have been published. It should have been referred to Mr. Moyer, and his capable fellow troublemaker, Mr. Wilde.

Bingham was headed pretty comfortably into the winter when that precious pair landed in Utah and began their labors for the destruction of the industries of Utah, or the mining industry was by no means the limit of their field, if they had succeeded there. And every man with a job, and every man with a business to advance, is under deep and lasting obligations to the Utah Copper for standing firm against the rising tide of Moyer's making, and successfully defeating the efforts of that enemy of men.

The men in the great camp were all at work. Thousands of them were living with their families, getting a fair pay for every day, and getting it in money. They were bringing up their children. They were buying property. They were taking their places, if of foreign birth, in the building of a greater state. Their boys were fitting themselves in Utah schools for the battle of life. Their girls were growing into the excellence of Utah women. They themselves were faring comfortably down the aisles of life toward that day when they should be too old to work, but not too poor to support themselves.

And, on a sudden, they were commanded to cease working. That meant to cease earning. That meant less and less food from day to day. It meant flight for those who had given no hostages to fortune—or who lacked the manhood to stand by their families in the day of the distressful Moyer visitation. It meant an autumn of conflict, a time of strife, a period of lawlessness or of suspicion—and a winter the darkness of which no man but an idle laborer can know.

The pathetic feature of the Tribune's letter is not evident inability of "papa" to provide the things reasonably expected in the heart of a child. It is the survival in that child of the family cohesion; the view which includes brother and sister. There is the heart-gripping strain of the published letter. In the face of disaster, in the face of distress, of hunger, of trouble that cannot be understood, of worry that dims the eyes of mother and makes of father a different man—the little girls asks for the presents which, as sure as there is a God in heaven, she had a right to expect. And they are exactly the presents she would have asked for—and received—if Mr. Moyer had not needed coal and food and drink for the winter—and come to Utah to provide it.

In the light of the letter of the little girl, one wonders if the food of the trouble-maker is not embittered, even in spite of the luxury abounding in the home and crowding the life of Moyer. One wonders if the dreg in his drink doesn't taste of the tears of children—of desolate Christmas children—even in the hours of his maddest revelry.

He laid the palsy of his order on thousands of men. He stripped them at the entering in of winter of their inability to work. He laid shame on them if they sold their honest labor to honest men. He took of their periled and diminishing substance—and then he went away. The men may get into the winter, and out of it, as best they may. It is small matter to Moyer. And the children who looked for Santa and feel only the claws, sum up the total of the Moyer strike at Bingham. —Goodwin's Weekly.

It is not strange or surprising that a truckling lickspittle of capitalism should resort to brazen falsehood to satisfy the combinations that make it possible for him to keep his slanderous sheet afloat. At the very time when this letter alleged to have been written by Miss Lucille Collins on, December 7th, 1912, her father was an Eliot "hero" and gloried in being a scab.

If his daughters—Lucille, Gladys and Ethel—were deprived of dolls, ribbons and story books, it was because the mine owners for whom their father was working as a scab, did not pay a sufficient wage to enable a strike-breaking parent to purchase a few petty luxuries for his children.

We are told in this letter of Lucille, that her brother, Roy Collins, wanted a gun. It is not surprising that the progeny of a scab should want a gun. Scabs and guns go together.

It is probable that the paroled convicts and deputized thugs, armed and paid by the mine operators, planted the murder spirit in the breast of the boy who yearned for a weapon of blood on that anniversary, when pulpits proclaimed: "Peace on earth, good will to men."

We will agree with Goodwin's Weekly that this letter should not have been published, but we do not agree that it should have been referred to Moyer; but it would have been far better had it been thrown in a garbage barrel or a sewer, as the letter is a coarse piece of work to poison public sentiment against a man who used all honorable means to avert a strike.

If the disappointment feigned by Lucille shook Goodwin's Weekly with sympathetic spasms, what convulsions would have seized the measly rag of Salt Lake if only the editor had permitted his vision to scan a continent, to behold the millions of children who were denied on Christmas day the luxuries of dolls, ribbons and story books?

Was Moyer responsible for the countless thousands of children in the congested districts of the large cities of this country, where they were not only denied dolls, ribbons and story books, but were fortunate if opportunity favored them with a meal from a table of charity?

How many tears did Goodwin's Weekly shed for these countless thousands, or was the pathetic flood reserved for Lucille, Gladys, Ethel and Roy, the offspring of a sire who became a "hero" when he flung his manhood to the winds and scabbed under the guns of the hired thugs of the mine operators?

The Weekly has become so weakly that it is liable to have hysteria should another daughter of a scab write a letter and deplore the loss of such luxuries as dolls, ribbons and story books.

Now, what are the facts relative to the Bingham strike?

The editor of the Miners' Magazine will deposit $500.00 in any bank in the city of Denver and challenges Goodwin's Weekly to cover the same, and the editor will prove that Moyer did not call the strike. We will prove that the miners of Bingham, by an overwhelming referendum vote, declared a strike, and that Moyer did not go to Utah until after the referendum vote was taken.

We will prove that after the referendum vote, Moyer left for Bingham, Utah, and called a mass meeting at which it was estimated 1,800 miners were present.

We will prove that Moyer appealed to that mass meeting to postpone the strike until he used every effort to bring about an honorable settlement.

We will prove that Moyer used all honorable means to have a conference with the mine operators, but that he was ignored by the industrial czars, who absolutely refused to give organized labor any recognition.

To be brief, we will forfeit $500.00 if we fail to prove Goodwin's Weekly a liar.

IN THE LAND WHERE WAR IS HELL.

By Henry M. Tichenor, the Rip-Saw Poet.

It hung above the postoffice door, and this is what it said: "Wanted—Young men to go to war"—that's how the poster read. "Peace on earth, goodwill toward men" is nothing for us to heed, for we are the wolves of the jungle den and ours is the god of greed; and the wild war whoop will never cease where the wolf whelps buy and sell—so CURSE "good will" and the way of "Peace," for ours is the way of hell! And the splatter of blood and crunch of bones and the screams of the tortured ones, and the sweethearts' sobs and the mothers' moans are hushed by the belching guns! And the vultures swoop where the carrion lies, and the demons dance and yell, and laugh at the sight of the weeping eyes in the land where war is hell!

INSTALLATION AND BANQUET.

Eureka, Utah, January 15, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

Please have the following published in your next issue of The Miners' Magazine: The Ladies' Auxiliary No. 4, W. F. of M., Tintic District, held their regular meeting January 10th and installed new officers for the coming term. A large number of the Miners' Union attended the installation, which was highly successful. Mrs. Mary Edgeworth was the installing officer and Mrs. Robert Adamson put on the drill work, which was highly appreciated by all present. A delicious banquet was served at the conclusion of the work.

Following is a list of the new officers: President, Mrs. Hannah Mitchell; vice president, Mrs. Francis Simpson; recording secretary Mrs. Sadie Babcock; financial secretary, Mrs. Ida Wheeler; conductor, Mrs. Hilda Wilson; warden, Mrs. Florence Allen; trustees, Miss Annabel Mooney, Mrs. Berdeen Berry and Mrs. Thersa Virtel. Yours fraternally,

MRS. IDA WHEELER,
(Seal.) Financial Secretary Auxiliary No. 4, W. F. M.

IN BEHALF OF PRESTON.

San Francisco, California, January 9, 1913.

To the Members of Organized Labor:

Brothers—I have tried to bring before you a matter that ought to concern all of us. Some have responded to the call, but a great many of us have not. Of course if we do not think it a worthy cause, why, we should not assist it, but if we do think so, it is our duty to help it with all our might.

It is true that many of our fellows who have had the wrath of the masters upon them have had more publicity than our dear brother and martyr, Brother Preston, but there is not one deserving of more consideration than he. I have stated before that he has loved ones depending on him for support. "Hot air" will not help them. They need the good things of life, and while our brother is not able to help them, it surely is our place.

We cannot ask his masters to assist. If it is only a two-bit piece it will help. Just put yourself in his place. The awful crime he is guilty of is being true to his class, brothers! Wake up! Let us jump in and give him a lift. I do not intend to make an eloquent speech. I could not if I so wished, but I am appealing to you as union men who have the cause of the working class at heart to get in and see that our persecuted brother's loved ones are cared for: I believe that everything is being done by the W. F. of M. to get justice and freedom for him; but in the meantime his family has got to eat.

Don't waste time worrying about the misery he is going through while in a prison cell. He would die there for a principle. His heart is free, if his body is not, for he has done no wrong. So I ask you from the bottom of my heart to get together and show our brother that he is not alone in the fight. He will thank you; so will his loved ones. Yours for freedom in our time,

JOSEPH W. SMITH.

TEMPLES OF LABOR.

By Agnes Thecla Fair.

The name "Labor Temple" over the door of a Mormon church at Salt Lake is a misnomer.

The board of trustees, whom the workers are supporting, have some Sunday laws not unlike those made by the Puritans at Plymouth Rock.

One in particular which prevents workers from using electricity on Sunday without permission of the board of trustees. That one was busy writing a series of articles for labor's press makes no difference; the janitor is authorized to turn off the electricity and does his master's bidding.

Expenses must be kept down, even though rents for desk room go up and the workers who pay the bills are not to be considered.

Upon what meat are these trustees feeding that they have grown so great? "Woman's place is in her home on Sunday evening," said the janitor. "We do not want women around here at all. They ought to be at home taking care of their children." "But I have no children, I protested." "Then you should get married and have some, and not use up all of 'our' electricity on a Sunday."

That the Western Federation of Miners was paying rent for the desk I was using as well as paying for the electricity made no difference to this hard-shell Baptist janitor.

This Temple of Labor is a sacred place on Sunday and women should keep holy the Lord's day.

From those who style themselves labor's leaders, who are in reality labor's bleeders, O Lord, deliver us.

GAVE THANKS TO THE CAPTAIN OF THE COSSACKS OF NEVADA.

To Captain McGaffin and Men:

As an evidence of our appreciation and grateful feelings we the undersigned, employés of the Steptoe Valley Smelting & Mining Co., desire to express to you and your men our sincere thanks for the kindly aid and protection you have extended to us in the peaceful and lawful pursuit of our duties as employés of the said company during the present labor trouble in our camp.

While we regret with you the seriousness to which matters finally came before cessation of armed demonstrations by the parties who were active in causing the lamentable disturbance, we feel certain that the protection of your company has been the means of saving some of our lives. 10-19-12.

MY COMRADES.

By Agnes Thecla Fair.

In the kindergarten class in economics there are fifty-seven varieties of comrades, ranging from a cross between a Progressive and a Prohibitionist to those of the "Eat 'Em, Pete" variety.

Each one feeling that he is following the fellow who first mixed wine and water at a big feed, about the time concrete was first introduced and carpenters were put on the list of track walkers without pay, the Lowly Nazarene having foresight picked up another trade and joined the bartenders' union, my comrades having read two ten-cent pamphlets cannot see that each and everyone must live his or her life as best they know how until they learn from experience a better way.

They would impose their slave ethics and capitalistic views on everyone they came in contact with if they would allow them. Also they wish you to accept their exclusive cut-and-dried plan of how to run the co-operative commonwealth, when they might be busy on themselves with a mental housecleaning. It is a mortal sin to disagree with them and a crime to say so in public.

They insist that you shall tell them what kind of money we shall use in the co-operative commonwealth and if you reply, "Anything live and useful," their thoughts turn to lice, and they go away greatly offended, resolving to put you out of the movement, even though they must lie and vilify one to do so, not knowing that any sincere man or woman not afflicted with "jobitus" is with the common herd until they own the common things of life, including brains.

You must wave the red flag twice in awhile, wear a red button in your coat lapel, have a red card instead of a scapular around your neck or you are not really a comrade, according to those who give nothing to the movement themselves but abuse.

You should, if you are a speaker, have a brass band to advertise you en route; also posters contalning a photo of yourself when you were sweet sixteen; also you must charge at least $10 a lecture, or $20 shows you have ability and they may be able in time to get in with the chautauqua. The Choctaw tribe is wise and will have none of this type of book punchers.

To get out of one's "private car" unannounced is nothing short of treason. One dare not climb on a truck in a factory or shop, or soap box without the permission of this new kind of constables, as this will "hurt" the movement. This way of doing things is womanly but not lady-like and we must go back to the days of Parasitic Lazies by all means.

The literature you peddle must be passed upon by each local board of censorship and if your books do not say that the cow is the most important animal of all to us rough necks who desire to operate the commonwealth, then one should write some more books that do say so.

One should not say that a society shell has not brains enough to give her a headache; you should say the system is responsible for cornering all the brains, so when the society shell was born there was none left to put in her head.

As all organizations, political and industrial, are only so strong as the members possess initiative, imagination, intelligence and self-reliance, is it not time we started to develop these qualities in our comrades, rather than attempt to destroy them in those who are so fortunate as to possess these precious gifts the gods bestow on so few?

HAIR-CUT REFORMER.

It was a bloody war by which England opened the Oriental door for the prosperous opium trade. A new grafter class soon after grew up around the harbors whereby opium was imported to Holy China. The graft was successful because their customers were very ignorant of the value of opium and the grafters soon raised up from poor peddlers to burghers, later becoming modern class of capitalistic merchants.

Of course, all the mandarines used opium as much as possible and exchanged their treasures of gold, precious stones, silks, etc., for opium. It became the fashion among the aristocratic class, or, commonly speaking, the "high-toned" class, and consequently the opium dealers became a very powerful class in China; they almost got the whole administration under their control. The imperial throne strongly favored them, and why not? They were so rich and opium so miraculous, and so so.

But, mind you, the opium trade reached a limit at last, because the common people were too poor to buy their stuff, as they had nothing to sell to get even the price of opium. Now that was the condition of times when the hero of this story rose into greatness as a reformer. He was born a cheap coolie and sold to a wealthy French diplomat to serve his family in Peking. While there he learned that "pale-face-men" paid well for loose hair. He soon made his escape and began selling loose hair to Europeans. His business became prosperous; loose hair didn't cost much; it could be obtained by cutting the cue from the skull of dead poor chinamen, and the clipper could be paid with a few drops of opium.

Later, when the loose hair trade grew into a great wholesale exporting business, they would often rob in the shade of the suburbs, and ofttimes they made the mistake of cutting off the head from coolies who opposed the "unlawful" hair-cutting.

Oh, well, coolies are nobody anyhow, and the wise policemen understand that by keeping the coolies peaceful, a live business is left "untouched." To be sure, the police judge must punish every one of the coolies who dare appear in public without the lawful long hair.

So now you understand that such extensive exporting of loose hair must surely reach a limit at last. Then this clever merchant begins to agitate a new reform, why not the Chinese wear short hair as well as Europeans? When he himself went to meet the common people he showed them that he had short hair and told them it was to be the latest style, adopted by the highest class.

Of course when he was to meet a high mandarine or when he had an audience with the secretary of the administration he would need to have a long cue, but that was easy; he well knew how to wear a wig of long false hair. After this continued agitation—thanks for the progressive administration—came forth the imperial manifesto giving the people liberty to wear short hair, which style spread over the country quickly from one city to another, thus the wholesale exporter had a "good" year.

But after all the coolies' hair was exported, another great crisis arose in the wholesale hair business.

But the common people throughout the country had long hair and were willing it should remain so, as country people the world over rather cling to the old fashions.

The short-hair agitation could not turn their minds as quickly as it should be, and so the pernicious manifesto did not affect these soon enough; consequently our brave, active hair wholesale man and short-haired reformer hired a mob of short-haired coolies, armed them and sent them through the country to civilize the people by cutting their hair. The same tactics were used before, when they robbed the hair in the shade of the suburbs while they often missed and cut off the head instead of the hair.

Note.—The short-hair story is written as an example of how every capitalist is a reformer, and the tactics they use all the world over, not only in China, but in every country.—Adolph Salmi.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—Financial rottenness such as could exist in no other city of the United States, but flourishing in the shadow of the Capitol and protected by the lax regulations which influence with Congress has been able to secure for the District of Columbia, is being mercilessly shown up by the House investigating committee, of which Victor L. Berger, the Wisconsin Socialist, is a member.

As a result of the investigation, so far as it has proceeded, capitalists of Washington are running around in frightened circles and members of Congress are begging the committee to let up. The committee is threatening to go into a general investigation of financial and real estate affairs in the District of Columbia.

The financial twists and turns by which a number of slick gentlemen in Washington have been able to turn an original investment of $1,000 into a tissue-paper appearance of $2,000,000 of prosperity would be amusing except for the fact that thousands of innocent investors all over the country stand to lose lose heavily in the operations of the wily promoters under fire, whereas the rascals probably will get off scot free with the booty. Representative Berger's mail is heavy with letters from victims—widows among them—who have invested their entire savings in the stock of the Central Fire Insurance Company and the First National Fire Insurance Company—the two concerns being investigated.

The shady transactions involving some of the best known capitalists in Washington, including a couple of federal judges, would probably never have become public except for the fact that two schools of sharks in Washington began fighting each other. For years, protected by influence in the House and Senate, the sharks had been getting a fat living off the swarms of suckers which are always swimming around in the sharks' feeding grounds.

But a new school of sharks recently invaded an old school section of the bay; one of the new school began to fight for a juicy mullet in the guise of the chairmanship of the Wilson inaugural committee; and then the two schools began fighting each other! Observing the blood on the surface of the water, some inquisitive congressmen demanded to know what was going on underneath, and the investigation followed.

Some months ago four Washington men with itching palms but small resources paid $250 into a pool and secured an option on a corner property in the heart of Washington's business district. Unable to swing the deal with this small capital, they found two others with more means, and the pool was raised to $10,000. With this sum they were able to put across a deal, buying the corner for $18 per square foot—or a total of $400,000—and selling it later for $23, or $510,000—a neat little profit of $110,000 for a few weeks' work. The buyer was the Southern Commercial Congress, supposed for many months to be a sort of Chamber of Commerce for Dixie Land—but now shown up to be another aggregation of promoters out for the money. In buying this property from the original option holders the Commercial Congress put in only $50,000 cash to secure the title.

Then there was organized the Southern Building Association, which took the corner from the Commercial Congress, borrowed $800,000 and put up a fireproof office building, known as the Southern building. The building was opened in 1911.

But the building company was unable to hang onto the building for want of funds to swing the proposition, and it decided to sell.

Meanwhile three insurance promoters, who had fled from New York state rather than face an investigation by the state insurance commissioner, came to washington, bought an old fire insurance company, known as the Commercial, and proceeded to enlarge it as a money-making proposition according to the best methods of wildcat promoting.

This they were able to do because of the lax regulations in the District of Columbia, and the sucker-feeding proving so good, they proceeded to organize another company of the same character known as the First National to catch what suckers the Commercial stock missed. De luxe promotion literature of the best Roycroft composition and deckle edge was put out, showing the fabulous profits to be made by investing in fire insurance stock. In loud type this literature set forth that the leading fire insurance companies paid forty-one per cent. dividends, being careful, however, to refrain from promising this profit to prospective investors and thus avoid running foul of the postoffice, but allowing that impression to sink into the mind of a careless reader. As a matter of fact, legitimate fire insurance in the last ten years has been a losing game because of the great San Francisco and Boltimore fires—but the literature failed to mention this trivial fact.

The bait took, and the sharks began gathering in suckers by the thousand. In a short time they had sold two million dollars in stock—all by mail.

Nevertheless, because of extravagance in management, the companies began to lose money. As a starter the three promoters took $75,000 as their commission. But while this $75,000 was a dead loss to the companies, nevertheless they declared a twelve per cent. dividend to keep up the price of stock. The dividends were paid out of the moneys received from stock sales.

The companies, however, needing a method for covering up this loss, and the Southern Building Company also needing financial assistance, met almost providentially, and at once saw that they could be mutually profitable to each other. So the insurance companies, using stock as a great part of the purchase price, bought the equity in the building, which went into the sale at a valuation of $1,540,000. This was on October 29th last. Two days later the insurance companies listed this building in their assets at a valuation of $2,000,000, and, although they actually owned but an equity in the company, they listed the entire sum of $460,000, which they had added to the purchase price, as an actual increase in their assets. due to the increase in value of the real estate ownd by them! This paper profit the companies divided fifty-fifty, each adding $230,000 to its book assets, thereby covering up its losses. Then both companies announced a rise in the price of stock.

The transactions assume importance because prominent men have loaned their names to the companies. On the promotion literature of the First National appears the names of Justice G. W. Atkinson of the United States Court of Claims; Justice Ashley M. Gould of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; Robert N. Harper, bank president and the first man convicted under the pure food law; E. E. Jordan, a banker; Henry C Shober, a prominent official in the Interior Department; Robert J. Wynne, former postmaster-general.

Jordan, in December, was a strong candidate for the Wilson inaugural chairmanship. To injure him, a member of the opposing school of sharks, the Real Estate Ring of Washington, complained about the insurance companies' transactions. Jordan was not nominated inaugural chairman.

THE DINKEY SKINNERS AND THE BINGHAM STRIKE.

For some time previous to and until this strike was called in the Bingham district (September 18, 1912) there had been a great deal of agitation going on amongst the various bodies of labor operating in and around the mines affected. The reason for all this agitation, however, needs no explanation. as every workingman employed by Big Business in this or any other civilized country knows is due directly to economic conditions. The labor movement generally understand that there is something radically wrong with their pay envelope, as compared to the high cost of living.

They also realize that the necessaries of life—food, clothing and shelter—are gradually getting beyond their reach, and that the master is continually getting richer, while the slave gets much poorer.

As a result of such manifest and intolerable conditions a mass meeting of all the workers involved was called to devise ways and means as to the action necessary to be taken in the matter, when it was finally decided that the various craft and other organizations would take charge of whatever branch generally affecting their department. Also to appoint committees who would present their ultimatum to a joint committee, which was later appointed, and also scheduled to convene on a future date.

This joint committee assembled on the day regularly set apart for the meeting (7:30 p. m.) and to the great surprise of that body, a bona fide grievance outlining the changes in working conditions generally as well as the various other improvements necessary was handed in from all the committees involved, with the exception of the Brotherhood of Engineers and Firemen, the Brakemen having already turned the whole proposition down cold, their wages having been raised in the meantime as a direct result of strike.

The Brotherhood of Engineers and Firemen, or more familiarly known as dinkey skinners, who are running most of the engines employed in hauling ore from the steam shovels to the various assembly yards for further transportation to mills at Garfield, were in a somewhat different position than were their brothers in the train service who had already "double crossed" the movement.

This aristocratic body of dinkey skinners, however, were among the various organizations who took a referendum of their local membership to determine whether they were going to become involved in the movement or not, and as a result of the ballot cast, which was sixty-two votes, it developed that fifty-seven to five in favor of affiliation was placed on record. It further developed that a committee from that body was also present at the joint committee meeting heretofore mentioned, their grievance having been regularly drawn up and officially signed, with positive instructions to present same; but when asked to do so they absolutely refused, giving as their reason that unless they were assured of the support of the Steam Shovelmen, they did not care to take further action; but also stated that if the Shovelmen did support the movement that they would be only too glad to co-operate.

The committee next proceeded to positively assure this bunch of icebergs that they were supported by the Shovelmen and went as far as to place in evidence a bona fide grievance from the officials of that organization, assuring them of their support and willingness to fight to the finish. In reply to this assurance they simply stated that they did not think they would go on strike at all, as they had discovered their mistake and expressed a desire to rid themselves of the entire proceeding (thanks for the mess of pottage). The question was then submitted as to whether they would return to work under guard. The reply was that under no circumstances would they return to work under guard of any kind. The strike being called in the meantime, and at 8 a. m. on the morning of September 18, 1912, the hills that had been covered with a mass of human and mechanical energy the day previous were now covered into a veritable Necropolus.

For about three weeks following the walkout there had been no attempt on the part of any of the companies involved to resume operations. By this time the idle men were beginning to look for pastures new, and a great many were already leaving camp, the Utah Copper Company realizing that this exodus would soon leave them in a bad position in case they wished to resume operations in the near future.

They immediately proceeded to notify the dinkey skinners that they would be retained in service, and that all that was necessary for them to do was to report at the company's office every morning and that their pay would be regularly forthcoming, with this proviso, however, that they were to respond to the call to resume operations whenever requested to do so.

In the meantime the mining cops were shipping in a number of deputies and in a short time there were assembled in the strike zone between 300 and 400 of these capitalistic menials. After this bunch of industrial Pariahs had been stationed at their various posts of duty it was evident that a starting of the mines was soon to be made. And on the morning of October 10th the dinkey skinners that had, until this time, been merely reporting for their pay, were now requested to earn it, and on the following morning were called into service. To this mandate they quickly responded, and at 8 a. m. were again on their hinky dinks with hand on the throttle and eye on the rail, fast asleep, patiently waiting for that long-lost signal from that venerable knight of the pick-handle and under the watchful eye and protection of a well-instructed and heavily-armed Cossack.

Operation now being resumed, a general appeal was immediately sent forth to all the former employés that any of them who wished to return to work could do so, and that they would also be insured protection against union interference. The dinkey skinners were out in full force by this time, running their engines up and down the tracks, craning their necks in search of high balls, broken rails, open switches and so forth; also whistling warnings to the deputies who were not otherwise protected with torpedoes, red lights, nitro glycerine, revolvers, cigarettes, armor plate, Marconi wireless and a number of other modern safety appliances.

The steam shovels up to this time having shown no signs of life, it was evident that something must be done immediately towards starting these slumbering giants. Another call for volunteers was soon forthcoming, and in response there appeared on the scene four of the most depraved and dilapidated specimens of humanity that ever disgraced God's footstool or planted a miserable soul under the iron heel of oppression; namely, John, Evan, Dave and Ed Stubbs, four brothers—all dubbs. These Stubbs were the first dubbs to take the places of the striking shovelmen, and at the same time make it possible for the Utah Copper Co. to begin effective operation.

But with twenty-one shovels
And only four Stubbs
The Utah Copper must call
For a few more dubbs;
And on sending their appeal
To a dead sure winner
They were perfectly safe
On the dinkey skinner.

This appeal finally resulted in a change, some of the members of the B. of L. E. and F. being found later in the unfair ranks of the steam shovel operatives. While this change was entirely unsatisfactory to the B. of L. E. and F., and while it is definitely known that these deserters were officially dropped from their ranks as strikebreakers, they never for one instant refused to handle the cars loaded by these industrial degenerates.

Just before the close of the year it was again decided to appeal finally to this venerable craft for redress, but they still remained obdurate and absolutely refused to co-operate further with the movement, claiming that the strike had been called by the W. F. of M. and if that body thought for one minute that the B. of L. E. and F., Local Bingham, was going to do anything for them at this time they were badly mistaken. It will also be remembered that this invertebrate bunch of hinkey dinks not only worked under guard, but many of their members having also made use of revolvers furnished them free of charge by their company as a means of further protection against the union men on strike.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Bingham Canyon, Utah, January 17, 1913.

LARGEST OUTPUT OF SILVER IN PAST 20 YEARS.

Preliminary estimates of the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of the Mint indicate a domestic silver production in 1912 of 62,369,974 fine ounces, valued at $37,982,414, the greatest output (though not greatest value) since 1892, when the production was estimated at 63,500,000 ounces, and not since then until 1911, when the production was 60,399,400 ounces, has the figure been above 60,000,000. Final figures may show an even greater output for 1912, as early estimates from the mines made by the western offices of the Geological Survey indicate a total silver production of approximately 64,000,000 ounces, or the largest output in the history of the country.

This increase in production may be attributed chiefly to the notable increase in the output of copper ores, especially those of Butte, Mont., which contain considerable silver, and of argentiferous lead ores. notably of the Tintic and Park City districts, Utah; the Pioche district, Nevada; and the San Juan region and the Leadville and Aspen districts, Colorado. There was apparently a small decrease in silver produced from the great Cœur d'Alene lead mines of Idaho, whose ores have a lower average silver content than formerly.

High prices generally for silver, copper and lead in 1912 materially added to the profits of production. The average New York price for silver in January, 1912, was 56.3 cents a fine ounce; by May it had risen with various fluctuations to 60.9 cents, by October to 63.5 cents, and the December average price was about 63.6 cents. The average price for the year may be taken at 60.9 cents a fine ounce, against 53 cents in 1911 and 1908, 54 cents in 1910, and 52 cents in 1909. It was the highest therefore since 1907, when the average price was 66 cents. The year 1912 was one of general business prosperity and buying was liberal in all metals. For shipment to the far East, especially to India, large purchases of silver were recorded.

According to estimates made by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the imports of silver in 1912 were valued at $47,800,000. The exports of silver during the same year were valued at $70,272,000, or 22,472,000 in excess of the value of the imports. In 1911 the value of the excess of exports over imports of silver was $21,918,075.

The imports of silver in 1911 were ,as usual, chiefly in ore and bullion and came mainly from Mexico and Canada. The exports were almost wholly in refined bullion and coin, and went, as usual, chiefly to the United Kingdom, although large amounts were also sent to France and Hongkong and smaller shipments to China and British India.

A TRAITOR UNCOVERED.

M. T. GLEASON.

The above is his picture, and every workingman should take a look at his face so they will know him. He is at present occupied in hiring strike-breakers for Porcupine, Ontario. He gave his name as M. T. Gleason. I think he is also a detective. He came to Iron Mountain the 3rd of January and stayed here seven days. Then he went to Iron Wood a few days and came back to this vicinity again. While in Iron Mountain, Michigan, he co-operated with a local employment agent by the name of Carbis, who, like most all other private employment agents, has degenerated so low and lost all honor and self-respect that they will do any kind of dirty work against their fellowmen for a few paltry dollars. They do not care for anything else but the dollars they are making on their deal; business is business.

What do they care for long hours and starvation wages? What do they care if the strikers' wives and children are without bread? They have no hearts for the downtrodden and oppressed worker.

Judas sold his master for a few pieces of silver, but he had so much conscience that when he saw the results of his dirty work he went and hung himself; but those parasites that are called employment agents keep on, year after year, selling their fellowmen to greedy and blood-thirsty mine operators to be used as scabs against their fellow workers who dare to demand a living wage and better working conditions. Indeed, it is about time that we should get rid of the private employment agencies. There should be at least one State Free Employment Bureau in each one of the mining ranges in Michigan. There are now five free employment bureaus in the southern part of the state. At the last regular session of the Legislature, 1911, the commissioner of labor was authorized to establish five more free employment bureaus, all in the southern part of the state, but the establishment and operation of such additional bureaus was not entered upon.

In the annual reports of the Michigan Bureau of Labor the private employment offices are referred to as "sharks," "those which prey upon the unfortunate in their time of need," "employment agencies which run on a Shylock basis," "the unemployed suffer grievously through the mismanagement of some of these places of business;" and the one in Iron Mountain is no exception.

A few days ago I went to the employment office and asked the manager, Mr. Carbis, politely, if he still hired men for Timmens, Ontario, but when he saw me he got so wild and angry that he lost his human (?) voice for a while, and when he was able to speak he gave me the information that "agitators are the cause of all evils." Of course he had a reason to dislike agitators. It was only a day ago since he lost some of his prey. He had hired men to go to Timmens, Ontario, telling them there was no strike there, but when they found out the truth from the "agitators" they did not go.

Yes, the agitators are the cause of what is evil to parasites, liars and oppressors. Maybe the agitator Meses was the cause to what happened to the Egyptian army in the Red Sea. Elijah was an agitator and the cause of the evil that happened to the prophets of Baal. David was agitating and was regarded as a fool when he went out with his little sling to fight the giant; but I suppose he was the cause that Goliath became a head shorter, and surely agitation was the cause that King George lost his colonies and the Southern slave-owner his black slaves. It started the public schools and is the cause of everything that is good in our civilization today. And, although they are regarded as "fools," "cranks" and "undesirable citizens" and laughed at by the capitalists' hirelings and lickspits, their number increases every day, and I hope to God the day is not far away when every workingman in Michgan; yes, the whole world, will be an agitator against the present tyrannical capitalistic system. Never was there a time in the world's history when agitators were so needed as they are now, and only from the working class can the proper agitator be developed.

The fight of the working class is not a sham battle or a picnic, but a fight to a finish, and we are many and they are few, and when the workers make up their minds to get organized on the industrial and the political field this miserable system will come to an end.

The workers in Ontario, Utah, Michigan or any other place have a right to organize themselves, and they have a right to strike for better conditions. The mine operators organize to get bigger profit. Mine workers organize to get what the Republicans call a "full dinnerpail," and more besides. There are no scab lawyers, scab doctors, very few scab business men. The Steel Trust is organized, the Oil Trust, the Harvester Trust, the Meat Trust; in fact, everything except labor is well organized. They all want to have something to say about the price of what they have to sell. The worker lets the buyer of his labor power put the price himself.

Workingmen out of employment, how long are you going to continue to listen to and believe the lies told you by the employment agents and the hirelings of the heartless mine-owners? When you read on the blackboard inside or outside the employment office: "Miners wanted—$3.50 a day," you can be sure it is a scab job, because any mining company that pays that much need not go to an employment agent for his men if there is not a strike.

Don't be a strike-breaker and a traitor to your class, but join the Western Federation of Miners and help to get better working conditions, shorter hours and higher wages for yourself and all workers.

AXEL FREDRICKSON.

LABOR PARAGRAPHS.

Plain Truths Revealing the Inner Workings of the Capitalist System.

Socialism means brotherhood; capitalism means fratricide.

Capitalism has slain millions in war, mine, mill and factory. It would have slain more had the social spirit not imposed some sort of check.

Morality is a code which society has established to save itself from extinction. That Capitalism is immoral is shown from the fact that, in the form of trusts, it is now defying society.

This will not last long, for the social spirit will abolish the private ownership of the trust, and thereby Capitalism, which will be followed by Socialism.

The capitalist as an individual isn't to blame for the faults of the capitalist system. He isn't, in some cases, even to blame for blocking the way to better things. That's merely ignorance.

No amount of opposition will prevent the produeers getting the full social value of their product, as soon as they know the goal is attainable, and decide on co-operative action to get there.

Doing away with wage-slavery does not mean abolishing wages. The fault with wages nowadays is that the individuals who pay them pay short, while numbers of workers don't get any wages at all.

A healthy competition is impossible under the profit system. Competition may keep down prices, but the capitalists then look for profits in sweatings and in selling shoddy.

Anyhow, competition is gradually being swept away by trade combinations, and honorable understandings, but the sweating and adulteration remain.

While competition in THINGS is being abolished, it still continues in HUMANITY. Men still have to compete for work to keep themselves and their wives and children. That is the central brutal fact of a brutalizing profit system.

The poor will also be with us so long as the few are permitted to rob the many. Crime will remain so long as poverty, misery and unemployment last.

Under the capitalistic system human labor-power is classed as a commodity just like bricks or pig iron. That's why it is a brutalizing system.

The extremes of great wealth and great poverty, which are becoming more marked in Europe and America, are due to the gradual disappearance of the middle class, owing to the concentration of economic power in the hands of a small capitalistic class.

Industry keeps the world going. Under Feudalism, landed interests governed; under Capitalism money interests are paramount; under Socialism, the government will be industrial.

Greed is the mainspring of action under Capitalism. Under Socialism social service will bring the world along. The foundation of this service is seen in industrial unionism.

By "producer" is meant any individual who, by his own labor adds to the social value of any product. The pastoralist, drover, slaughterman, tanner, bootmaker and shopman each assists to provide the community with boots.

In passing from the land to the consumer a product may also have its social value increased by the labor of clerks, railwaymen, sailors, lumpers, etc. Each of these, then takes his place in the army of producers.

No reason exists why the workers should not act as unitedly on the industrial field as on the political. Industrial unity is required for two reasons: First, to fight, if necessary; second, to prepare for the industrial commonwealth.

Among the primary producers are such workers as miners, farmers, writers, brickmakers, inventors, etc. Each has to depend on the labor of others to enable him to produce, and each has to look to others to give his product SOCIAL value. No worker, unaided, would be of any use to the community.

Capital is wealth that is used for the production of more wealth with a view to the realization of profit through its exchange. Capital is therefore a SOCIAL RELATION expressed through the medium of things.

When, therefore, labor declares itself opposed to capital it means that it is opposed to the social relationship existing between the capitalist and the worker. The capitalist uses labor power to produce more wealth; labor declares that the worker should use his power to produce wealth for himself.

One system does not suddenly end and another straightway begin. Thus traces of feudalism still survive, although capitalism rules.

Education and organization (political and industrial) are the watchwords of labor. The education must be economic, and the organization chiefly industrial, in order to bring it on a level with political organization.

Invention and machinery are multiplying the wealth of capitalists at such a rate that they have to provide freak entertainments and freak pastimes to get rid of their surplus wealth.—Daily People.

PRODUCTION OF TUNGSTEN ORE IN 1912.

The quantity of tungsten ore mined and marketed in the United States during 1912, according to preliminary figures collected by Frank L. Hess, of the United States Geological Survey, was equivalent to about 1,290 tons carrying 60 per cent of tungsten trioxide and was valued at $492,000 besides which a smaller quantity was mined but not marketed. This is an increase over the output of 1911, which was equivalent to 1,139 tons of 60 per cent ore and valued at $407,985. The average price paid per unit (the unit is 1 per cent of a short ton, or 20 pounds, of tungsten trioxide) was about $6.35 in 1912, compared with $4.89 in 1911, but the extreme variation seems to have been less in 1912 than in the previous year. Although higher than in 1911, the price paid was unsatisfactory to the miner. It ranged from $5.80 to $7.25 per unit for ore running 60 per cent or more of tungsten trioxide, and $8 was being quoted at the close of the year. Probably more concentrates were sold at $6 than at any other figure.

The price seems rather anomalous, for ordinarily the price of tungsten ores varies with the fluctuations of the steel trade, rising and falling as the demand for steel increases or decreases. During 1912 the steel trade has been remarkably brisk and the trade in tool steel seems to have been especially good, following a reported large sale for automobiles and other articles in which much tool steel is used, but the price for tungsten has not risen as much as might have been expected. There do not seem to have been sufficient new discoveries or developments of old deposits to have over supplied the market, but it is known that a considerable quantity of concentrates has been stored and it is possible that the use of this stored stock may have prevented an otherwise natural rise. The present outlook is for higher prices during 1913.

As usual, the largest production from any single district was made from the unique ferberite deposits of Boulder County, Colorado. About 1,200 tons of ore of various grades were shipped out, equivalent to 775 tons of 60 per cent ore. The Primos Mining & Milling Co. and the Wolf Tongue Mining Co. are the largest producers in the district. The Wolf Tongue Mining Co., which works its properties by a leasing system, introduced an important new feature during the year by furnishing electric hoists free to its lessees and the company also pays a portion of the cost for sinking each shaft. The lessee pays for the cost of electric current used. It seems probable that this innovation will lead to an increase in production from the properties during 1912, unless the price should drop seriously.

In California the Atolia Mining Co., which controls the Atolia field, at the north edge of San Bernardino county, increased the production of its remarkably pure scheelite over that of 1911 and was the largest individual producer in the United States. A small quantity of scheelite was also taken out in the Stringer district, a few miles north and west of Atolia. A discovery of scheelite was reported from the west side of the Rand Mountains, but no ore was sold. A few tons of mixed wolframite and scheelite were shipped from the vicinity of Nipton, in the east end of San Bernardino county.

In Arizona a few tons of hübnerite concentrates were shipped from the dry placers and some ore from the veins near Dragoon; hübnerite ore was shipped from Arivaca to Denver, for concentration; and some scheelite concentrates were shipped from Oracle, where scheelite is associated with gold and silver ores. Small shipments of hübnerite were made from Osceola and Round Mountain, Nev., and Patterson Creek, Idaho. A small quantity of hübnerite was concentrated at Loon Lake, Wash., but none was shipped. One small shipment of wolframite was made from Lordsburg, N. Mex.

Largest Output in Past Six Years.

Preliminary figures collected by H. D. McCaskey, of the United States Geological Survey, from the individual producers show that the domestic production of quicksilver in 1912 was 25,147 flasks of 75 pounds each, valued at the average San Francisco domestic price for the year, $42.04, at $1,057,180. A Comparison of these figures with the final published Survey figures for 1911 and 1910 shows a gain over the output of 1911 of 3,891 flasks and over that of 1910 of 4,546 flasks. Twenty mines were reported as producing in 1912, of which 16 were in California, against 22 producers in 1911, of which 19 were in California.

The production for 1912 showed a larger increase than was generally expected, but it is not thought that a correspondingly large increase can be looked for in 1913. Indeed, the reported gradual decline in output from some of the larger ore bodies and possible unfavorable market conditions and prospects may result in a decreased output for 1913.

Increased Production in California.

The production of quicksilver in California in 1912 was 20,613 flasks, valued at $866,571, against an output of 18,860 flasks, valued at $867,749, in 1911. It was the largest production since that of 24,635 flasks in 1905. The increase was due mainly to the yield of the New Guadalupe mine, in Santa Clara county, but also to increased output from sveral other mines. In San Benito county the New Idria mines yielded slightly less than in 1911 but remained the largest producers in America and are to be credited with nearly half the entire output of California.

Production in Other States.

No production of quicksilver was reported from Arizona, Oregon, Utah, or Washington in either 1912 or 1911. In Nevada there was a largely increased output from the Mercury mines, near the old Ione district, in Nye county, where a modern Scott furnace has been in operation and a small production was reported from the Telluride prospect, near Beatty. Considerable prospecting and development of quicksilver deposits have been reported from Bare Mountain and other localities near Beatty, and in other districts in Nevada, and the production from this state may further increase in 1913. The Shoshone mines, near Ione, were not producers in 1912. In Texas the Chisos mine at Terlingua, Brewster county, continued to make a considerable production. The combined output of quicksilver in Nevada and Texas for 1912 was 4,534 flasks, valued at $190,609, againtt 2,396 flasks, valued at $110,240, in 1911.

Market and Prices.

The market was fairly good for quicksilver in 1912. The imports were again in considerable excess over the exports and the demand was generally strong and apparently somewhat larger than the domestic supply. Prices began the year at $42.50 a flask for San Francisco domestic as the January average, rose to $44.40 for the March average, and thereafter gradually declined to the December average of $40.50—the average San Francisco domestic price for the year being taken at $42.04. The corresponding price in 1911 was $46.01.

Imports and Exports.

Exports of quicksilver from the United States in 1912 are estimated, from the records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce and Labor, at 24,000 pounds, valued at $14,000. In 1911 the exports were 21,841 pounds, valued at $13,995. According to figures of the bureau the imports for the first six months of 1912 were 82,616 pounds, valued at $39,884, while for the first six months of 1911 they were 361,149 pounds, valued at $190,999. For the full calendar year 1911 the imports amounted to 471,944 pounds, valued at $381,000 in 1910.

PRODUCTION OF IRON ORE IN 1912.

Preliminary estimates of iron ore mined in 1912, based on the quantity mined during the first eleven months of the year plus estimates for the month of December, were received by the United States Geological Survey from 26 of the largest iron-mining companies in the United States at the close of the year. As the combined output of these 26 companies represents more than 80 per cent of the iron ore mined in the United States, it is considered that the condition of the industry is fairly well guaged by their production, especially as both the Lake Superior and the Birmingham districts are well represented.

The average increase in production of iron ore by these representative companies was 26.6 per cent. Certain companies showed a decided decrease in production and others reported as much as 80 per cent increase, but the outputs of such companies are reported abnormal production are not sufficiently great to largely affect the grand totals.

From the returns received it is estimated by E. F. Burchard, of the Geological Survey, that the total quantity of iron ore mined in the United States in 1912 was between 54,500,000 and 57,500,000 long tons. This quantity represents an increase of between 25 and 32 per cent compared with the production in 1911, which aggregated 43,550,633 tons. It is therefore possible that the high record of iron-ore output attained in 1910, viz, 56,889,734 long tons may be slightly exceeded, although the returns received thus far, which are only approximate figures, are not quite sufficient to justify a definite comparison for 1910. Red and specular hematite constituted about 90 per cent of the output, most of the remaining 10 per cent being divided about equally between limonite, or brown ore, and magnetite, with a very small quantity of siderite, or spathic ore.

In the Lake Superior district the production of iron ore apparently increased in slightly greater proportion than the average for the country at large, the total shipments having increased from 32,783,163 long tons in 1911 to nearly 48,750,000 tons in 1912, but there were very large stocks of ore, amounting to more than 11,000,000 tons, at the mines in the district at the close of 1911 and these stocks may have been depleted in making the record shipments of 1912.

Production in the Birmingham district, Alabama, was largely increased in 1912, especially through the large output of the Red Mountain group of Clinton hematite mines operated by the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. The production in Tennessee, North Carolina and Virginia apparently has not greatly increased, if at all, above that of 1911, probably because some of the blast furnaces in these states dependent on local ores were not in operation during the early part of 1912, and in the South the inactivity of blast furnaces is quickly reflected in the operations of the iron mines.

Compared with the production of pig iron in the United States in 1912, which probably approximates 29,300,000 tons and exceeds the record production of 1910 of 27,303,567 tons by nearly 2,000,000 tons, a larger production of iron ore might appear to be indicated than has been estimated above, but here again must be considered the large mine stocks of ore in the Lake district and also the fact that more than 2,000,000 tons of foreign iron ore were imported for the manufacture of pig iron in 1912.

AREAS BELOW SEA LEVEL.

All the continents, with the possible exception of South America, contain areas of dry land which are below sea level.

In North America, according to the United States Geological Survey, the lowest point is in Death Valley, California, 276 feet below sea level; but this is a slight depression compared to the basin of the Dead Sea, in Palestine, Asia, where the lowest dry-land point is 1,290 feet below sea level. In Africa the lowest point is in the Desert of Sahara, about 150 feet below sea level, but the Saharah as a whole is not below sea level, although until recently the greater part of it was supposed to be. In Europe the lowest point at present known is on the shores of the Caspian Sea, 86 feet below sea level. In Australia the lowest point is at Lake Torrens, about 25 feet below sea level.

In Memoriam.

Leadville, Colorado, January 8, 1913.

To the Officers and Members of Cloud City Miners' Union, W. F. of M.:

Brothers, we your committee on resolutions of condolence on the death of Brother Duncan J. McLean, beg to submit the following:

Whereas, The unseen hand of death has again invaded our ranks and suddenly grasped one of our devoted and loyal brothers; and,

Whereas, In the death of Brother Duncan J. McLean this local has lost a trusted member, the wife a devoted husband and the sons and daughters a loving father and the community a respected and valued citizen; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we extend to the relatives and friends of the deceased our heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of bereavement, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased brother, a copy sent to The Miners' Magazine for publication and that our charter, in memory of our deceased brother, be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

JOHN MAHONEY,
GUS LARSON,
PETER CUNNINGHAM,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Stewart, British Columbia, January 8, 1913.

To the Officers and Members of Portland Canal Miners' Union No. 181, W. F. M.:

Whereas, Death has again invaded our ranks and removed from us our brother, Frank Bowman, Stewart Miners' Union has lost a loyal member and the labor movement an earnest champion; be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Portland Canal Miners' Union extend to the bereaved mother and relatives our deepest sympathy; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the meeting, a copy be sent to The Miners' Magazine for publication; also a copy be sent to our departed brother's mother, and our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

WHARTON MINERS' UNION No. 268, W. F. M., of Dover, New Jersey, was organized January 23rd, by Edward Crough.

HUGHESVILLE MINERS' UNION No 52. W. F. M., of Hughesville, Montana, was organized by A D. Beaton, January 16th.

SANDOVAL SMELTERMEN'S UNION No. 185, W. F. M., of Sandoval, Illinois, was organized by Mrs. Emma F. Langdon, December 3rd.

THE MEMBERS of Wharton Miners' Union, of Wharton, New Jersey, have declared a strike on refusal of the mine operators to grant an increase of wages.

THE AVERAGE WAGE of virtue in the United States is $6.15 per week.

Let us all exclaim: "Socialism would destroy the home.

The wage of virtue should be referred to Peter Collins, late windbag of capitalism, and ex-salary grabber of a faction of the Electrical Workers.

THIRTY "LABOR LEADERS" waited upon Professor Wilson last week for the purpose of securing a federal job for one Cosgrove, a "labor leader," but the professor gracefully turned down the "labor leaders" by refusing to place the "labor leader" in office

"Rewarding our friends and rebuking our enemies" seem to produce results.

JUDGE POLLOCK of the Federal Court of Kansas, is now slated for a congressional investigation. Pollock is the gentleman before whose court the Appeal to Reason has been dragged, with the object in view of crushing it.

Pollock is charged with being too intimate with the Kansas National Gas Company.

THE UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA now boast of a membership of 386,965.

The United Mine Workers do not believe in "direct action," "sabotage" or "hitting the ballot box with an ax," but still this organization is growing at such a rapid rate, that mine barons are realizing its power, and "direct actionists" are searching for more malignant invectives to give expression to their fanaticism.

THE FEDERAL MINERS' UNION of Minesville, New Jersey, has declared a strike, on the grounds that the mine operators were discharging men on account of their activity as union men. The union demanded an eight-hour day and the mine operators granted eight hours for all men working underground and nine hours for those on the surface, which terms were accepted by the union. But the mine operators afterwards discharged some of the most active men of the union, hence the strike.

GOMPERS AND MORRISON had an interview with Professor Wilson, President-elect, and Wilson assured the president and secretary of the American Federation of Labor, that any way he could, with propriety, assist in the passage of labor laws, he would do so.

That word propriety has an awful significance.

When the Wilson administration takes the reins of government, Gompers and Morrison will have a clearer conception of the meaning of the word propriety.

"Rewarding our friends and rebuking our enemies," lack the potency to advance the welfare of the workers.

"GENTLEMEN," said the politicial candidate, "I have been accused of being an egotist. So was Lincoln. They say that I desire to become a usurper. The same charge was hurled at Washington. They tell you that I am eager to raise myself above all men. Napoleon and Cæsar heard the same charge hurled at them by the weaker ones who opposed them. They are trying to make you believe that I desire to run the world. God has been accused of the same purpose. I admit that all the things I stand for are the right things and that everything which I oppose is wrong, but how can they justly accuse me of egotism?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE WEEKLY CALL, published at Hancock, Michigan, had the following editorial comment as to its attitude toward the I. W. W.

We have been asked how we feel towards the I. W. W. We stand towards them as we do towards every other labor organization. We want to stand by them at the ballot box. If only three-quarters of the men who toil with their hands in this country will go to the polls with us and vote the Socialist ticket just onee, they will see more done for labor in that one day than has been done striking and kieking in the last 100 years. A lot of workingmen who don't know enough to vote the Socialist ticket will be slaves and we begin to think they ought to be. Men who don't know enough to vote the socialist tieket must expeet the courts to oppress them and the trusts to rob them. No force except the ballot is required in America. The ballot falls as quiet as a snow flake. It is the gentleman's weapon. It is the clever man's weapon. It is the wise man's weapon. It is the suceessful man's weapon. It is the most powerful weapon, the most perfeet weapon, the most lasting weapon, and the only eonstitutional weapon. The man who advocates any other is an enemy to the labor movement and to himself."

JUDGE ROBERT W. ARCHBALD of the Commerce Court is now in the "Down and Out Club" with Judge Hanford of Washington.

Arehbald and Hanford were both gentlemen until they were found out.

There are a vast number of others disgraeing the judieiary, but as the people are becoming aware that the eourts need fumigation, there will be others who will hit the toboggan slide to private life.

The dog-eateher and seavenger would seorn to be guilty of some of the infamies perpetrated by the robed diseiples of Blaekstone.

BEGGING is considered disreputable and a misdemeanor if engaged in by individuals for their own private benefit, however great may be their naeessities, but when earried on by organizations it is presumed to be respectable and praiseworthy, being always done in the name af charity, though no one, save a eertain few eonneeted with these organized begging institutions ever knows what is really done with all that is eollected in this manner.

During the holidays droves of these organized beggars are to be found on every populous thoroughfare throughout the land, gathering in the shekels from the suseeptible, and as these oecasions do not come sufficiently frequent, various other expedients are resorted to, such as tag days, as an excuse to get money without rendering an equivalent or an aeeounting.

Perhaps one of the reasons these polite beggars are looked upon favorably by so many, is that we have become so aeeustomed to the idea of it being honorable to get something for nothing, that anything short of highway robbery or sneak thievery is eonsidered respeetable in playing the game, and if done in the name of eharity, the doer of the aet is regarded as a public benefaetor.

Is it not possible that sueh organizations as the Salvation Army, the Volunteers and other begging institutions are not called upon to give an aeeounting of their self-imposed stewardship, beeause to do so would expose the humbug and absurdity involved in this petty form of parasitism, whieh is simply the lowest in the seale of the whole scheme of exploitation now tolerated, beeause the plunderers are supposed to put a portion of their ill-gotten gains to some good soeial purpose?

Begging and philanthropy are but the reflex of soeial injustice and will disappear when a greater self-respeet animates and governs us in our industrial and soeial relations.—Seattle Herald.

IN A LUXURIOUS New York hotel a waiter stumbled and spilled on a patron's shirt front a bit of sauee. In a rage, the patron arose, felled the apologetie servitor with a blow, and then kicked him in the groin.

To the eredit of human nature, this brutality brought from other diners the ery of "Coward!" and the bully was ejeeted.

Had the patron simply sworn and demanded the waiter's discharge, no one would have eommented; perhaps the other diners would have felt like applauding.

A waiter must not make mistakes or answer baek. A waiter, though human, must show no feeling. He does useful serviee, but he is seldom fairly paid unless, as a mendicant, he gets his pay in tips. Our system of subservience to money tries to make of him a denatured man.

And this in a democraey where, men are presumed to have equal rights!

Can we have a demoeratie spirit in government unless we have it in industry as well? Must the workers who wait on the rieh and powerful always train to imitate the status of a slave?—Madison Journal.

The Madison Journal need not be indignant beeause a waiter in a fashionable hotel in New York was assaulted by a wealthy patron.

It is customary for labor to be treated by that element in our upper strata of soeiety, whose dignity and pride would be lowered should respect or eourtesy be shown by them to a worker who is looked upon by aristoeracy as a menial.

The exploiting and parasitie class, not only insult the working elass who make it possible for them to live in indolenee, but when the working elass rebel against outrageous eonditions, the elass that can afford to dine at fashionable hotels hire professional murderers and use state militia and federal troops to awe and intimidate labor with weapons of violence.

Labor is insulted, reviled and subjeeted to brutal treatment, simply beeause labor has not yet learned to stand together as an army against the wrongs of economic tyrants.

When labor is united, labor will not be kicked in a hotel nor murdered on the industrial field.

THE FOLLOWING CLIPPING from an Eastern journal has been ent us by Mother Jones, who for several months, has been in the strike zone of West Virginia demanding a living wage and humane eonditions for the slaves of the mines.

"The legality of martial law and the validity of the penitentiary sentenees imposed by the military eommission appointed by Governor Glasseoek will eome up in eertain eivil suits that are to be instituted this week. The attorneys for the miners had prepared a petition to the supreme eourt of the United States, asking for a writ of habeas eorpus, and were on their way to Washington when news eame that all the prisoners had been pardoned by the governor. This virtually leaves the legality of the aets of the military commission undeeided. The reeent deeision of the supreme eourt of West Virigina did not pass upon the question of whether the prisoners eould be kept in custody after the end of martial law, but left that question untouehed.

H. W. Houston and A. M. Beleher, attorneys for the miners, are preparing to institute damage suits against the governor, General Elliott, M. L. Brown, warden of the penitentiary, and all the members of the reeent military commission. It is understood that these suits will be filed during the present week.

"These aetions will call into question the validity of martial law, and the aets of the military commission. It is understood that the cases will be taken as rapidly as possible through the various eourts to the Supreme Court of the United States."

The above statement in an eastern journal shows that the United Mine Workers, as an organization, is going to find out if men ean be brought before a military tribunal and senteneed to prison from one to seven years while the eivil authorities are in operation and discharging their duties. There was no neeessity for a deelaration of martial law, save to establish a military eourt to mete out vengeanee to men who refused to surrender to the mandates of the eoal barons of West Virginia.

The courts were open and there was no insurrection, but the governor, the offieial agent of the mine operators, issued a proclamation plaeing the strike zone under martial law for no other purpose save to make the dictum of a military commander supreme.

"Mother" Jones went to Washington and brought the matter before the attention of a number of eongressmen, and when Glasscoek, the truekling tool of the coal barons, realized that his aets were liable to be subjeeted to the scrutiny of Congress, he suddenly opens the doors of a penitentiary and liberates the men who were railroaded to prison by the order of a military court.

Labor has been subjeeted to every insult and outrage, but as labor beeomes more solidified industrially and politically, the master elass that has imprisoned and murdered labor under forms of law will hesitate to continue in the infamies that may at any time preeipitate a conflict that may never end until justice has triumphed over the wrongs of the eenturies.

Hear the Mutterings of Rebellion

PRESIDENT TAFT a short time ago attended a banquet at the Waldorf Astoria, where the guests paid the trifling sum of $20.00 per plate. President Taft delivered a speech to the feasters, and in the course of his speech he said: "Let us buckle on our armor again for the battle for humanity that must be fought."

At the banquet board of the most fashionable and aristoeratie hotel in America where only Privilege ean feast, it sounds like a burlesque for a defeated eandidate for the Presideney of the United States to call upon the wealthy gluttons to "buekle on their armor again for battle for humanity that must be fought."

President Taft, during his official life, had an opportunity to give battle for humanity, but this ponderous gentleman who preseribed injunctions for labor on strike, was always found in the army of exploiters, giving battle to that humanity that was and is strnggling to throw off the yoke of industrial slavery.

The man who ealls upon his brethren at the feast in the Waldorf, was asked upon the Bowery some two years ago, what eould a "hungry, penniless man do out of a job," and the great statesman who shouts "buekle on the armor," replied: "God knows."

Taft, in calling on his eolleagues at a banquet to "buekle on the armor," meant that plutoeraey should stand as a stonewall against that humanity whieh he has frequently in his speeehes designated as the "mob."

Taft and his brother gluttons at the Waldorf have heard the mutterings of rebellion and they know that storm elouds are visible that presage the downfall of Privilege and the freedom of that humanity that is now held in the ehains of eeonomie slavery.

Taft, in his speeeh at the Waldorf, was appealing to that exploiting and parasitie element of humanity to "buekle on their armor" against the eoming battle of Labor, whose soldiers are demanding that industrial tyranny shall die and that liberty shall live.

Wasting Their Time

CONGRESSMEN have been holding a conference relative to a bill that provides for a restriction of immigration. The bill provides that the man or woman from a foreign shore who seeks shelter beneath the Stars and Stripes must be able to read, otherwise such man or woman is not deemed eligible for admission to the United States.

The object of the bill is to restrain the "undesirable" from becoming a resident of America.

In other words some of our statesmen entertain the opinion that men and women who are illiterate, must belong to the criminal class, these statesmen have not investigated the criminal history of our country or they would discover that illiteracy has little to do with crime. As a general rule, the most desperate criminals are made up of men and women whose mental development has reached a high standard.

But organized labor is strongly in favor of a bill which restricts immigration, on the grounds, that the army of the unemployed is continually increasing in this country.

While a law restricting immigration may relieve temporarily the congestion of the labor market, yet, such a law will give no permanent relief to the working class of this continent. Capitalism is international and capital seeks the cheapest labor market. If a bill should be enacted into law closing the gates of this country to the people of the old world, then our American multimillionaires will transfer their plants to those countries where labor is cheap, for under the present industrial system, the only matter at stake with the exploiter, is profit. Our statesmen should not quibble on the question of the illiteracy of the foreigners who seek the shores of this country, for the statistics of the United States show that we have 6,000,000 illiterates in America, and that one in seven of all children between 10 and 14 years of age, are not in school according to the Child Labor Bulletin.

Our statesmen are wasting their time on measures that mean nothing to the great mass of the American people.

Labor is in the chains of wage slavery, fought by all the combinations of wealth, and unless our national lawmakers give some serious attention to the conditions that are making men desperate, there will be a conflict in this country, that will be more disastrous than the bloody struggle that shook this country in '61.

The People Have Spoken

THE TIME is close at hand when President Taft will retire to private life. During the past few weeks there has appeared in the public press statements to the effect that President Taft aspired to a seat in the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is further claimed that it is the ambition of the retiring incumbent of the White House to wear the robes of the royal judiciary at Washington. The daily press has likewise declared that President-elect Wilson was anxious to satisfy the ambitions of "Injunction Bill" and that if the opportunity presented itself he would clothe Taft with the judicial ermine of the Supreme Court of the United States.

President Taft has been repudiated at the polls by the citizenship of this country.

No man, who ever occupied the presidential chair in the history of this country, has shriveled to such political insignificance as the heir of Roosevelt.

Regardless of this fact, Professor Wilson, the Princeton Pedagogue, threatens to place on the Supreme Court the defeated candidate of a shattered Republican party, who only received eight electoral votes.

President Taft was true to plutocracy and loyal to Big Business.

The mighty bankers, powerful railway magnates and commercial princes looked upon him as "safe and sane," and his appointment by Wilson as a member of the Supreme Court would meet the unanimous approval of the giant highwaymen who use courts to legalize their robbery.

But the Princeton Professor, who has threatened Predatory Wealth with a gibbet, should hesitate ere he appoints a man as a member of a court, whose dictum makes a gibbet look like a toy and whose official record on the bench and as President of the United States clearly prove that he is a stand-pat advocate and upholder of a system of government that enriches the few at the expense of the many.

The people of the United States have spoken at the polls and relegated Taft to the scrap-heap, and if Wilson believes in Democracy he will gracefully yield to the expressed will of that vast majority of voters, whose ballots have decreed that Taft shall lead the "simple life."

The Russianizing of Northern Ontario

THE COSSACKS of the Czar would feel perfectly at home these days if they could but be imported to do police duty in the mining camps of the Porcupine district. In fact, it is probable that the Ontario guards could run off a few tricks that would make them green with envy.

The word has gone forth that the miners' strike must be crushed. no matter what the methods employed, so long as the object aimed at is ultimately accomplished.

Never before in the history of any province in Canada has there been such an utter disregard of the constitutional rights of the people.

Flagrant outrages have been perpetrated by the so-called guardians of law and order.

Peaceable and inoffensive strikers have been summarily arrested, convicted, and heavily sentenced for no apparent breach of the law whatever.

The provincial police have shown themselves to be just as brutal and lawless as the notorious Thiel gunmen, whose atrocities so aroused public sentiment that the provincial authorities were forced to take action.

In fact, so pronounced and infamous have these breaches of constitutional law become that it is now imperatively necessary that an emphatic and united protest shall be forwarded to the attorney general of Ontario, by the organized labor movement of the province, demanding an immediate investigation, and that the rights of the striking miners must be safeguarded and respected

To show to what an extent the Russianization of the mining districts of Ontario has been carried on, it is only necessary to review a trial that occurred in the Porcupine district on January 1, when four prisoners were summarily convicted and sentenced by Magistrate Torrance. Following is an outline of these notorious cases:

The four prisoners—Ivan Trochyn, Milo Jakszic, Heyhori Propir and Adolph Louisberg—were arrested December 20, on arrival of train 47, from Toronto.

Milo Jakszic, a Crotian, was at the station to meet a friend, who had telegraphed from North Bay that he would be on the train. Not seeing him, he was in the act of entering a car to look for him, when he was stopped and thrown from the steps of a car by a provincial policeman and placed under arrest.

This evidence was thoroughly corroborated by reputable witnesses. Ivan Trockyn, a Russian, was imported from Sudbury through gross misrepresentation on December 15, but, upon learning of the labor conditions in the camp, refused to go to work.

On the evening in question, he proposed going to Timmins on train 47, for the purpose of getting his baggage, which was being withheld by the Hollinger Mining Company until he paid them his fare from Sudbury. He purchased his ticket at the office and walked to the train.

On approaching the steps of the car, Jakszic was thrown violently against him by the constables, and he threw out his hands in an endeavor to keep from falling. He was violently seized, beaten, and arrested.

When asked by the crown prosecutor why he had not gone to work at the Hollinger mine, he replied that it was as well to be held a prisoner by the police as to be forcibly detained in the mine and held in practical peonage or enforced servitude.

Hoyhori Propir, also a Russian, came on the station just as the train was about to move out. Being surprised to see his fellow countryman being held by the police, he approached, placed his hand on his arm and asked him: "Where are the police taking you and why?"

Propir was also placed under arrest and clubbed by Inspector Calbick and another constable and dragged to the police sleigh.

It was clearly evident from the evidence that he was innocent of any intent to interfere, and could not understand why he was clubbed and arrested.

Adolph Lundberg, a big, innocent, good-natured Swede, was a stranger in camp, and had few acquaintances. On the night in question he walked to the station, after supper, to see the train arrive, as this is quite an event in camp.

He saw that there was some kind of a mix-up as the train was moving out, but took no part in it, and started for home to avoid trouble. On passing the police sleigh, which was standing in the road, somebody in the crowd pushed him; he slipped in the snow, and to save himself from falling, threw out his hands, grabbing the horse's head, to steady himself.

A policeman rushed at him and, thoroughly frightened, he started to run for home, and was fired at by Constable Smith, of South Porcupine. He fell in the snow, was roughly handled and taken to prison. All these facts were fully corroborated by impartial witnesses. The police failed to establish a case of concerted action by the people at the station, and tried hard to bring out an admission that somebody connected with the union had instructed the men to obstruct the police, but lamentably failed.

The counsel for the defense forced from them the reluctant admission that the people were as orderly as on several previous occasions when they had been at the station upon the arrival of trains; that several times the crowd was as large, and no occasion occurred to cause arrests.

It was admitted the men were within their rights in boarding the cars, with or without tickets. The police also admitted they had never before attempted to prevent the free entrance of the public to said cars.

In summing up the case for the defense, counsel asked that the prisoners be discharged, and that the provincial police be censured by the court for their unwarranted and unprecedented action in preventing peaceable people going about their ordinary pursuits, thus causing any disturbance there was at the time.

The crown attorney did not make a strong plea for punishment for the prisoners, but apparently wanted the action of the police to be upheld, but expressed a desire to see the so-called leaders in the toils of the law, probably with the idea that it might help to break the strike.

It was also apparent that the court was anxious to grab the men who were active in the interests of the union; but, according to his own statement, the magistrate proposed to deal leniently with the misguided prisoners, and showed his keen sympathy by handing each a six months' sentence in the central prison at Toronto.

On the opening of the proceedings, December 31, the opposing counsel had a verbal set-to over the question of whether the men should have a preliminary or summary trial. The counsel for the defense had just come into town, and it was his understanding of the cases that the prisoners had the privilege of going before a judge and jury, if they so elected, and three of the prisoners did wish to do so. The crown attorney opposed this method of dealing with the cases, and the magistrate decided that the cases would have to go to a summary trial, the defense entering an objection in the records.

The defense also asked for a change of venue on the grounds that the magistrate had stated on a previous occasion, in a case of unlawful assembly, that he would give the next person coming before him on a similar charge the full limit allowed by law; also on the ground that the offense, if any, had occurred in another township, and it would be proper to transfer the case to the magistrate for that township. However, some legal clause was found somewhere that would allow him to try cases occurring within 500 yards of the township line, and as this case was within that limit, he insisted on trying it.

No need to comment on this. You can see the way things were framed up.—The Banner.

State Workmen's Compensation Legislation

Immediate Legislative Program: Aid in the enactment of additional state laws providing just systems of compensation or insurance against industrial injuries.

The history of workmen's compensation legislation in the United States has been short and uneven, but with a decided trend toward stability. Only ten years ago, in 1902, Maryland enacted the first compensation law in the country, a law relating only to accidents in coal mines. It was promptly declared unconstitutional.

Nothing more was done for seven years. Then in 1909 Montana enacted another coal mine act. This survived for two years, and in November, 1911, went the way of its Maryland predecessor. But in 1909, commissions on workmen's compensation had been appointed in Minnesota, New York and Wisconsin. In the two last named states the investigations bore fruit in compensation laws. In New York the compulsory act of 1910 was declared unconstitutional on the first case tried under it, in March, 1911. An elective compensation law, passed in New York in 1910, is still on the books, but is a dead letter, only one employer having elected to come under it. In Wisconsin an elective law was enacted in 1911.

Despite the rather unsatisfactory outlook at the beginning of 1910, the compensation idea had so far grown in favor that the year saw no fewer than eight more state commissions studying the problem. In Maryland a second coal mine act was passed. As a result of studies by the commissions, bills were introduced in all eight states, as well as in four where there were no commissions. The results were gratifying. Elective state insurance laws were enacted in 1911 in Ohio and Massachusetts; a compulsory state insurance law in Washington; elective compensation laws in California, Illinois, Kansas, New Hampshire and New Jersey; and a compulsory compensation law in Nevada. In Missouri and Montana the commissions' bills were not enacted into law. The year 1911 thus closed with twelve state accident insurance or compensation laws either in force or enacted and about to go into effect.

While the Legislatures of 1911 were occupied with this mass of legislation, a new set of state commissions, ten in number, were put to work. The Michigan commission made its report, and the law was enacted in 1912. In the same year a law was secured in Maryland, where the commission measure had previously failed to carry, and Arizona and Rhode Island enacted laws without having had any commission. The 1911 commissions in Iowa and Pennsylvania have published their reports and the texts of proposed laws. In the other seven states having commissions in that year—namely, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Nebraska, North Dakota, Texas and West Virginia—no reports have as yet been published.

Of the forty-eight states in the union, fifteen now have compensation acts of one type or another, of which four—those of Ohio, Massachusetts, Washington and Wisconsin—have withstood the attacks of opponents of this legislation and have been declared constitutional. In twenty-one states commissions have already been appointed to study the problem. In six states laws have been secured without preliminary study by commissions. There remain twenty-one states in which no official action, either in the enactment of laws or the appointment of commissions, has yet been taken toward displacing the outgrown and thoroughly discredited system of employers' liability.

The adoption of some uniform compensation measure, and its extension to all states, including those which have so far taken no action, is urgently needed. Upon this matter the committee on compensation for industrial accidents and their prevention, of the American Bar Association, reported to the association's annual meeting in Milwaukee last August as follows:

The consensus of opinion is that uniform laws for compensation for industrial accidents should be enacted by all the states and by the United States within its jurisdiction. Such a law should, in the opinion of your committee, be based on the following principles:

1. It should be compulsory and exclusive of other remedies for injuries sustained in course of industrial employment.
2. It should apply to all industrial operations or at least to all industrial organizations above a certain limit of size.
3. It should apply to all accidents occurring in the course of industrial operations regardless of the fault of anyone, self-inflicted injuries not being counted as accidents.
4. The compensation should be adjudicated by a prompt, simple and inexpensive procedure.
5. The compensation should be paid in regular installment continuing during the disability, or in case of death during dependent period of beneficiaries.
6. The compensation should be properly proportioned to the wages received before injury.
7. The compensation should be paid with as near absolute certainty as possible, in the most convenient manner, and there should be adequate security for deferred payments.

Your committee, however, is of the opinion that a very important branch of the subject referred to is the prevention of industrial accidents and that every effort should be made to procure the adoption of uniform laws for proper safeguarding of industrial employés from accident, and that this element should always be considered in connection with any scheme for industrial accidents.

Denver, Colorado, January 23, 1913.

To the Officers and Members of Local Unions of the Western Federation of Miners:

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

In conformity with the call issued by President Moyer, your Executive Board convened on January 7th, 1913, for the purpose of auditing the books and accounts of the Organization and transacting such other business as might properly come before them.

Auditing of Books.

We have audited the books and accounts of Secretary-Treasurer Mills from July 1st, 1912, up to and including December 31st, 1912, checking all entries, receipts and disbursements; examined all checks, vouchers and receipts, and find the same correct in every detail. We have also verified the statements from banks and certify to the correctness of the amounts deposited in same, and highly commend your Secretary-Treasurer for the efficient manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office.

Strike at Bingham.

The strike at Bingham, Utah, which commenced on September 18th, 1912, was forced on the workers by the refusal of the operators to meet the representatives of the unions in conference, or in any manner recognize the grievances of the men working in the mines of Bingham.

The workers of Bingham made every effort possible to adjust their grievances before going on strike, and only resorted to the strike when all other means of adjustment failed.

The efforts on the part of the unions have been continued to the present time to bring about a settlement of this controversy, but the employers refuse to recognize the right of their employés to even petition for a redress of grievances.

The unions involved in the strike comprise the machinists, boilermakers, blacksmiths, switchmen, steam shovelmen and miners. The Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen continued to work, notwithstanding their repeated assertions, prior to the strike, that they would join their fellow workers in their struggle for better conditions. This deplorable conduct on the part of the railroad men has been primarily responsible for the continuance of the strike to the present time, as the assistance rendered by this branch of the industry made it possible for the operators to make a semblance of a showing in their efforts to crush the strikers.

That the action of the railroad men employed by the Utah Copper Company in scabbing on their fellow workers of the mines, is severely condemned by the membership of their own organization as shown by the following resolution, which is one of many now being passed by locals of that organization:

Condemned By Their Brotherhood.

Rocky Mountain Lodge No. 77, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Denver, Colorado, January 10, 1913.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by Rocky Mountain Lodge No. 77, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, at our regular meeting, held January 9th, 1913:

WHEREAS, It has come to our knowledge that certain demands for increased wages made by certain employés of The Utah Copper Company, located at Bingham Canyon, Utah, and that said increase did not even reach the amount paid other employés for similar service, and the refusal of said increase resulted in a strike of the said employés of the said company, and

WHEREAS, As we have learned that all other employés of the said company, located at or about the mines of Bingham Canyon, including the machinists, blacksmiths, carpenters, shovelmen and all others, have ceased to work for said company, during said strike, except the men who are engaged in the operation of the locomotives employed in taking the ore from the steam shovels; and,

WHEREAS, As we understand it, the men employed on said engines are all, or nearly all, members of this brotherhood and mainly constitute the membership of Lodge No. 690; and,

WHEREAS, No contract of any kind exists between said company and said brotherhood, or the members of said lodge, or any of them, directly or indirectly; and,

WHEREAS, The said Utah Copper Company absolutely refuses and did refuse to at any time receive any of the officers of this brotherhood, as such, having business in connection with said enginemen, or to in any manner acknowledge the existence of this brotherhood or of any other labor organization; and,

WHEREAS, These members have been and are now running and firing the engines hauling the ore from the shovels, and, as we are reliably informed, are the only class of organized workmen who are working under these circumstances with strikebreakers, protected by gunmen; and while it may be true that said members can continue in said employment under such circumstances and conditions without losing their membership in this brotherhood; and,

WHEREAS, It is notoriously and well known that said, The Utah Copper Company is amassing colossal fortunes in paid dividends every month, showing their full ability to meet with such slight increase of wages; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deplore and condemn the actions of any class of labor, and particularly of this class, who will work under the facts and circumstances, as we understand them to exist, to be degrading in the extreme and worthy of the condemnation of all brotherhood men. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the members of Lodge No. 690, and to the men who are out on that strike.

J. F. McNAMARA, President No. 77.
JOHN A. RYMER, Secretary No. 77.

During the first three weeks of the strike no apparent effort was made by the employers to resume operations, but the Utah Copper Company, the principal operator in Bingham, was actively engaged in recruiting strikebreakers and gunmen in all the large centers of population in the country; an army of gunmen was rushed into Bingham, deputized by the sheriff of Salt Lake, when all preparations were made to coerce and terrorize the strikers into submission; operations were attempted to be resumed on October 9th, 1912. It then became necessary to call out the workers at the smelters at Garfield.

All the craft unions working in the Garfield mills and smelters responded to a man, including the molders, machinists, blacksmiths, boilermakers, patternmakers, electricians and organized portion of the smeltermen. The majority of the workers were held within the works by armed guards. The employers, finding their efforts to operate unsuccessful, a reign of terror was inaugurated by the deputies at Bingham. Men were forcibly driven to work; others who refused were beaten and thrown into prison. Some were murdered without provocation, homes were entered, and the inmates, including women, beaten and robbed. No redress could be obtained from the civil authorities, who are completely under the control of the mine owners; but notwithstanding the resources and power of the Utah Copper Company and its allied interests, they have utterly failed in their efforts to operate successfully; their own reports showing for the quarter ending December 31st, 1912, a production of less than 25 per cent. of normal.

The strike at Bingham marks a new epoch in the struggle of the workers for better conditions, it being the first time in the experience of the W. F. M. where all the unions employed in the mining industry (with the exception of the railroad workers) co-operated and to this solidarity shown by the union men of Bingham and Garfield, is due the fact that the Utah Copper and the Guggenheims have received their first serious check in their predatory career.

The issues involved in the strikes in Bingham and Garfield are far-reaching in their effect on the future welfare of the workers, and cannot be surrendered.

Although an eight-hour day has been put on the statute books of Utah, the majority of the men employed at Bingham worked from ten to sixteen hours a day, at wages averaging from $1.00 to $1.50 a day, less than the wages paid for similar work elsewhere. The demands made by the men at Bingham and Garfield were for a fifty-cent increase in wages, an eight-hour day, and recognition of their unions, which, considering the conditions, were not only moderate, but conceded by some of the employers to be just.

Strike at Alta.

A strike at Alta, Utah, involving about 100 men, took place on September 12th, 1912. The men demanded an increase in wages and improved conditions in the boarding houses. Some of the smaller operators conceded the demands of the men, leaving about sixty men still involved.

A strike was called at the Scranton mine in the Tintic district of Utah, in November, against an increase of five ($5.00) dollars a month for board. The strike is still on.

The Strike at Porcupine.

The Porcupine strike resulted from an attempt on the part of the employers to force a reduction of wages on the men employed in the mines and mills of that district, and the move was inaugurated by the mine operators during the month of July, 1912, a number of them posting notices for a reduction of wages averaging about fifty cents per day per man, to become effective September 1st, 1912. Porcupine Miners' Union No. 145, through its local executive committee, endeavored to negotiate with the operators to the end that an adjustment of the dispute might be brought about; failing in this, they made application to the minister of labor for an arbitration board under the Industrial Disputes act of Canada. The board was granted by the department, and after a considerable delay took up the matter of investigation as to wages and working conditions in the Porcupine district, and concluded their work by making an award in favor of the employing companies, recommending the mine owners' scale be accepted as a settlement of the dispute. This award was delivered to the mine owners and to the Miners' Union on or about November 11th, 1912. The employing companies receiving the award posted notices that the reduced wage scale would become effective on that date. The members of the organization in that district, through a referendum vote, refused to accept the award of the board as a settlement of the controversy, and on November 15th all men employed in the mine and mills of the Porcupine district were called out on strike by the Porcupine Miners' Union.

Approximately 1,000 men and those dependent upon them are involved in this conflict. All the methods known to the ingenuity of employers and their official lackeys are being used against the strikers in this conflict. The imported gunmen, the servile public official and willing policeman, are all to be found doing the bidding of the mine owners in this conflict. A number of men have been severely wounded by the gunmen; large numbers of them have been arrested on trumped-up charges and thrown in jail, a number of whom have been sentenced to long terms at hard labor in the central prison at Toronto by a servile magistrate. But notwithstanding this fact, the men are fighting on more determinedly each day and added attacks from the employers and so-called peace officers of the district on them and their movement only have a tendency to bring about renewed activity in the ranks of the strikers in off-setting the encroachments of the employers and their official agents.

This strike is of vital importance to the metal miners of North America and to the wage earners in general, as the determining of wages now in dispute in northern Ontario will in the end play its part in the establishment of wages in the mining districts of Ontario and the men involved in this conflict should receive the undivided moral and financial support of the membership of our organization, that they may in the end realize their one great ambition—the establishment of the rights of the workers to organize and deal with their employers as to wages and working conditions in northern Ontario, and they ask and expect this, not alone from the membership of the Western Federation of Miners, but from every member of organized labor in the country who is true to the cause of his class.

Strike at Ely.

The Ely strike followed on the heels of the Bingham strike. It was practically an extension of that strike, a controlling interest in the Nevada Consolidated being owned by Utah Copper. All crafts involved joined with the Federation in declaring the strike, with the exception of the railroad crafts. The tie-up at the mines and Copper Flat, an open pit mine, was complete. The smelter and mill were poorly organized and when the call was made a large number did not heed it. The company imported thugs, ostensibly for the protection of men who desired to work; in reality to intimidate and kill—as results proved—those who did not want to work. Following the murder, Governor Oddie declared martial law, and brought in the state police, a body patterned after the militia of other states, and organized for the same purpose. Scabs had the right of way, but strikers and men working at fair mines had their way barred by the police.

The demands in the Ely district were for a flat increase of fifty cents per day for all workers. The company granted this increase to nearly all crafts on the eve of the strike; thus many entered the strike feeling that they had nothing to gain from it, not realizing that it was the large body of miners and unskilled workers who won the raise for them. Within a week after the strike was declared at the smelter, the McGill carpenters voted to return to work. It is to the credit of the Ely carpenters that they gave most loyal support to the strike.

Here, as at Bingham, an effort was made to enlist the support of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, whose members man the dinkeys at the open pit workings and the smelter, and who are not under contract. Though they had received an advance of twenty-five cents per day through the united action of the workers while their prior demands had been ignored, they refused to lend their assistance. The strike was ended upon the explicit pledge of the management to reinstate all employés in their former positions without discrimination against union men, "the steam shovelmen being specifically included." Discrimination was rank against our membership at the mill and smelter and also against the steam shovelmen. Efforts are still being made to get the company to comply with its agreement. All employés receiving $3.00 or more per day got a twenty-five cent advance, those under $3.00 got an increase of twenty cents.

Legislation.

The Executive Board has had under consideration various measures affecting the welfare of the workers generally, and organized labor particularly. All are aware that many new laws should be enacted and some old ones repealed. The board believes that the best results would be secured by concentrating our efforts upon a few bills of vital importance and using every effort to secure their enactment, rather than to propose a large number with a certainty that many if not all of them would fail.

An anti-blacklist and card law was drafted which will be submitted to the Legislatures of South Dakota, Nevada and Montana. If this measure is drafted into law and given an honest interpretation by the courts, it will prevent the blacklisting of unionism as has been done by the Homestake Mining Company in South Dakota and go far towards establishing the right of the workers to organize.

Another bill was drafted limiting the powers of sheriffs, mayors, justices of the peace, etc., vested with the power to appoint peace officers, limiting the number to be so appointed, and providing that all such peace officers should be paid from the funds of the county or municipality provided for such purposes and not by any person, firm or corporation. Few measures are of greater importance to workingmen struggling for a larger measure of justice. The use of thugs, commissioned as deputy sheriffs or policemen, paid by the corporations and acting under their direction, using the power of the state—not to preserve the peace but to beat up, intimidate and kill striking workingmen—has become a regular method of procedure. A strike cannot be peaceful when thugs are commissioned to provoke violence.

A bill prohibiting false representations in securing workingmen, either within or without the state, and forbidding the use of armed guards in connection with the transportation of men employed in labor difficulties through deceptive advertising has also been submitted. There is not a strike but involves heavy expense in caring for and sending men back to their homes who came ignorant of the troubles. It had not ought to be a severe penalty to require labor agents to tell the truth to men whom they employ, and both the agent and the employer should be visited with a heavy penalty if they fail to do so. Every act of labor legislation interferes with the privileges which the employing class have been exercising, and seeks to establish a right which the worker has not been permitted to enjoy. Some judges, with their eyes on the past, fail to catch the trend of events and will be hit with the recall.

Legislation Against Disease.

Owing to the prevalence of miners' consumption which is the scourge of the underground toiler, and which has sent thousands of our brothers to untimely graves caused by dust-laden air in all dry mines, we would urge upon all local unions, to make every effort to have appropriate laws enacted by the Legislatures of the several states where such life-destroying conditions exist.

The following measure submitted by Tonopah Miners' Union would, in a large measure, remedy those conditions:

AN ACT TO PROMOTE PUBLIC SAFETY AND TO PROTECT LIVES OF EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN THE MINING INDUSTRY BY REQUIRING EMPLOYERS AND CORPORATIONS OPERATING MINES TO PROVIDE SPRINKLING DEVICES TO OVERCOME THE DUST MADE IN THE HANDLING OF DRY ORES AND IN THE OPERATION OF POWER DRILLS, AND PRESCRIBE PENALTIES FOR THE VIOLATION OF THE PROVISIONS THEREOF.

The people of the state of Nevada, represented in the Senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, company or corporation engaged in the business of mining or operating mines in the state of Nevada, to operate any kind or form of power drills or machine without a device for supplying water to the drill and drill holes, for the purpose of overcoming and allaying the dust occasioned by the drilling.

Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, company or corporation engaged in the business of mining or operating mines in the state of Nevada, to handle dry ores, in ore shoots and ore houses or ore pockets, unless the ores so handled be sprinkled with water by means of some sprinkling device to be approved in writing by the state inspector of mines, and such sprinkling of such dry ores with water shall be sufficient in degree to overcome, allay and settle the dust otherwise arising from the ores.

Section 3. Any person, firm, company or corporation engaged in the business of mining or operating mines in the state of Nevada violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a gross misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than five hundred ($500) nor more than two thousand ($2,000) dollars for each and every violation thereof.

Litigation.

The Federation has been at heavy expense to protect the interests of the organization and the liberty of individuals, as well as attempting to bring commissioned thugs, guilty of every offense from assault to murder, to justice.

Twenty-one men are under indictment at Owingsville, Ky. The most serious charge is conspiracy to destroy property and do great bodily harm. The cases come up for hearing in February.

Two members of the Federation were murdered in cold blood by the thugs imported for that purpose by the Nevada Consolidated Company. The coroner's inquest found that the "killing was unnecessary" and recommended a thorough investigation by the grand jury. This in spite of the fact that there were but two men on the jury who were not opposed to unionism—three were scabs. The evidence before the grand jury was such that if the murders had not been committed in the interest of a corporation which dominates the community, true bills would have been found against the twenty guards and Captain McGaffin, who marched out to kill. The grand jury did not return a true bill.

The strikers at Bingham, Utah, have been and are being subjected to every outrage that the brutality of more than 600 deputies could devise or commit. Houses were broken into and looted by them, women were beaten, houses shot up, men walking peaceably along the highway shot and maimed for life, and men murdered. Seldom could a warrant be secured for the arrest of a thug deputy and when secured the county attorney would refuse to prosecute on the ground that it grew out of the strike, and he wished to keep his office neutral. No such reasons interfered with his conducting a most vigorous prosecution whenever a striker was brought to trial: dozens were thrown into jail without a warrant. Many suits for eviction have been brought against men who have builded their houses on company ground—they should serve as a warning to workers everywhere against trusting a corporation with the savings of a lifetime put in a home. Two of our brothers charged with grave offenses, are awaiting trial.

Many seem to be under the delusion that the power of the government is not as ruthlessly used against the workers in strikes in Canada as it is in the United States. Our experience in the Porcupine strike affords no justification for the idea. Wholesale arrests have been made, excessive fines levied and sentences imposed, the magistrate and the policeman showing the same bias against the striker that we have come to expect here. Many cases have arisen out of the Le Mioux Industrial Disputes act.

Organization.

The work of organization has been carried on as the finances of the organization would permit. The large number of men employed in the mining industry, who remain yet unorganized, must be reached, if we are to obtain that justice which thorough organization alone can bring.

More activity on the part of the membership of local unions, in localities now partially organized, would greatly increase our membership, and strengthen the position of the organization in such localities.

Every man working in the mining industry, remaining outside the ranks of the organization, is a possible asset of the employer, and is generally used to defeat the union men, in time of conflict. It is not the imported scab or strikebreaker who is successful in breaking strikes, but those of the locality who are unorganized or not imbued with the spirit of unionism. It requires the co-operation of all our membership to bring about the desired results.

In the eastern state, where large numbers of men are employed in our industry, our Federation has had organizer for the past number of months carrying on a campaign of education and organization, with the result that a number of locals have been organized, and while the employers are not at all favorable to organization, yet the spirit displayed by our fellow-workers, especially in the states of New Jersey and New York, encourages us to believe that time will bring about a thorough organization which will mean the adding to our ranks many thousands of members.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota the question is one of reorganization. A large number of men who were secured by the operators in the Black Hills and used by them to defeat the efforts of union men to establish their rights to organize, were not members of organized labor. The only difference in their position and that of thousands of others who are outside of the labor movement, is that they are already on the ground and being used by the employer, while the others in their unorganized and uneducated condition, will, in all probability, follow in their footsteps at the first opportunity. It is as necessary to reach these men and endeavor to bring them to a realization of the unjust position which they occupy and to educate them to the end that they may understand the principles and benefits of organized labor, as it is to reach the men who have not as yet fallen into the hands of the employer to be used in this campaign to destroy organized labor.

After giving the Black Hills situation careful consideration, the Board decided to adopt the same policy as was adopted in the Cripple Creek district, namely, the establishing of one local in the district centrally located, the same to exercise jurisdiction over the territory formerly covered by the Deadwood, Central, Terry and Lead City unions. By so doing it will be possible to have a salaried secretary continuously in the field, and the Board feels confident that as a result of this policy the time is not far distant when unionism will again have established itself in that part of our jurisdiction. All locals of the Federation will take notice that the charters of Deadwood, Central City, Terry and Lead City have been surrendered to the Federation and that the Black Hills District M. & M Union No. 12 is the only recognized local of the Western Federation of Miners in that district.

There are numerous benefits derived from organized effort which cannot be measured by increased wages and shortened work-day. The spirit of fraternity that flowers when men unite to uplift the toilers in industry; the growth of independence and self-respect that comes through a realization of power are gains to the race, their worth cannot be estimated.

During the past year the men in the metal industry were probably benefited more than in any preceding year. The benefits derived are in direct ratio to the strength of the organization. Great as these benefits are, they are but a tithe of the gains that would accrue if the metal mining industry were thoroughly organized. These gains should give renewed enthusiasm to every member of the Federation in the work of sustaining and extending our organization until every toiler in the metal industry is enlisted under the banner of the Federation. The compilation of annual reports of increased wages and reduced hours, as sent in by the secretaries of local unions, is not complete, but gives a partial idea of the benefits secured.

A tabulated statement follows:

Increase of wages per month	$ 286,852.50
Increase of wages per year	3,442,230.00
Number of men benefited by increased wages	34,869
Average increase per man per month	$ 8.23
Increase per man per year of those benefited	98.76
Number of men benefited by reduction of hours	8,174
Total number of hours reduced per month	248,625
Total number of hours reduced per year	2,983,510
Total wages saved by reduction of hours at 37½ cents per hour	$1,118,816.25

No reduction in wages accompanied the reduction in hours. The grand total gain to men working in the metal mining industry in camps organized under the Western Federation of Miners, estimated in dollars and cents, is $4,561,046.25. These figures are the benefits secured through the efforts of the Federation, are more eloquent than any words could be.

Trial of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers.

The trial of forty members of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers before the Federal Court in Indianapolis, resulting in the conviction of thirty-eight of their number for periods of from one to seven years, doubtless came as a shock to every member of our organization. Yet when it is considered that the Steel trust was back of the prosecution, as unscrupulous in court as it has been brutal in all its relations with its employés, the result is not strange.

The following resolution, passed by the directors of the Steel Trust at the inception of its operations, has guided that corporation throughout its history: "That we are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor, and advise subsidiary companies to take a firm position when these questions come up, and say that we are not going to recognize it."

All men know that the U. S. Steel Corporation has been guilty of barbarous practices in its war on organized labor. We refuse to accept the verdict of guilty by men who are ignorant of industrial warfare, and the sentence of a prejudiced court as conclusive evidence of their guilt.

We regret the result of the trial; hope that in a higher court their innocence may be established. In the meantime, we extend our support and fraternal greetings to our brothers in prison, with the hope that freedom may soon be theirs and the right to organize conceded and enjoyed by all workers.

Conclusion.

In conclusion, the Board would ask for the hearty and enthusiastic support of the membership in all that pertains to the work of organization. Where membership is voluntary it requires the constant effort of the local membership to maintain the organization The work of establishing the organization devolved upon men who did the work for the love of the cause, and any movement for the uplift of the workers must continue to receive such devoted services. We cannot extend the organization into unorganized fields and support the men now on strike without funds. No assessment has been levied, nor will be by the present Board, that necessity did not imperatively demand. Prompt payment of dues and assessments by the membership and compliance with the constitution by the local unions is necessary to the proper conduct of our affairs.

Trusting that the spirit of fraternity will ever animate our councils, we remain, Fraternally yours,

WANTED, INFORMATION.

Wanted—the address of James Dohoney, who was last heard of in Butte, Montana. Address William Maguire, 2332 Lawrence street, Denver, Colorado.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Information is wanted of the whereabouts of John H. Shields, who was last heard from at Stewart, British Columbia. He was a member of Portland Canal Miners' Union. Anyone knowing his present address will confer a great favor by writing to Robert Shields, Tonopah, Nevada.

PARTY ORGANIZATION.

Science "is an exact knowledge of a thing." Everything that is real has a science; therefore, scientific democracy is a proper phrase and expresses the highest form of government of which man has any conception. There is but one science to anything, and every science has its exact principles and rules, and any departure therefrom is just that much less than science. No one could expect to correctly work out a difficult sum in arithmetic except by the precise rules of mathematics; no more can we hope to successfully inaugurate "THE GREAT CO-OPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH" without a prior exact knowledge and practice of scientific democracy.

Absolute scientific organization is absolutely efficient; but while we have nineteen Socialists outside of the Local to one inside, secure but a one-fourth ballot of Locals on referendums and have but a meagre attendance of the membership of Local meetings, we can hardly claim absolute democratic and efficient political organization.

It was thought when we adopted the initiative, referendum and recall that that would make our organization democratic, but it does not, from the fact that questions are submitted without comment and with no possible adequate means of discussion, without which a very small per cent of the rank and file can vote intelligently; besides, comrades are inclined to put too much confidence and dependence in the honesty and ability of those who initiate questions, and therefore the great majority vote "yes."

Conventions, delegates, committees, leaders and bosses is not democracy, but representative.

Our publishers preach collective ownership and democratic management of public utilities and practice private ownership and individual management.

If publishers, authors, leaders and speakers only have ideas worth printing, then democracy is a farce, as capitalists claim. We have over 300 Socialist and labor publications in America, all maintained mainly by the rank and file, and not one in which the rank and file have any adequate voice or can express their ideas.

Absolute democratic party organization is practicable, will increase Local membership ten fold, dues the same, secure a full Local ballot, attendance of meetings, give employment to many members, reduce the high cost of living and reduce the cost of propaganda and party management fully one-half.

What would be thought of a sea captain who gave no attention to the condition of his ship, but gave his whole thought to speed? How many Socialists can give a definite working detailed elucidation of scientific democracy? All give their thought to propaganda, none to organization.

Fraternally yours, G. F. HUNT, Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS FROM THE FEDERATION OF SHOP EMPLOYÉS.

Whereas, We, the System Federation of the Harriman lines, in session assembled at Los Angeles, Friday, December 20, 1912, having under consideration the present investigation of the so-called money trust; and

Whereas, It has been generally stated and advertised universally that we, on September 30, 1911, called what was known as the Harriman lines and Illinois Central strike; and

Whereas, During a period of two months previous to the call of said strike, the said companies laid off and discharged 50 per cent of their shop employés, members of this federation; and

Whereas, The arbitrary action of the said companies in discharging so many men had the effect (possibly desired effect) of forcing the other 50 per cent in self-defense to lay down their tools; and

Whereas, We respectfully submit that our action taken as aforesaid was solely and purely in the defense of the American workingman's home and citizenship, both of which are in jeopardy from the machinations of the money power in Wall street; and

Whereas, Our places have been filled by incompetent workmen, and as a result of their employment the locomotive boilers and safety appliances have been so neglected and abused that the lives of many employés and passengers have been sacrificed; and

Whereas, The employés in the operating departments of said railways are today forced over their own signatures to assume all responsibility for defective conditions; and

Whereas, If the said employés in the operating departments refuse to assume responsibility, they are discharged; and

Whereas, If any of the present employés should report defective boilers or safety appliances to the government authorities, or refuse to operate defective equipment, they also are discharged; and

Whereas, The defective conditions of motive power and car equipment are growing worse every day, thereby causing great loss to business interests and the shipping public, and becoming each day a more serious menace to the lives and limbs of the American public; and

Whereas, Our places have been filled by foreigners whose interest, if any, in the welfare of our nation is of a small and almost negligible character; and

Whereas, We realize the tremendous gifts of the United States government to the railroads in the form of land grants, 266,000,000 millions of acres, and mileage construction bonuses from $16,000 to $45,000 per mile; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we call upon the President of the United States, the United States Senate and the House of Representatives to see that the inspection of locomotive boilers and safety appliances for railway equipment be strictly enforced; and, be it further

Resolved, That a congressional investigation be ordered immediately, with the object and to the end that the tremendous loss of life caused by defective equipment of railways may cease; and, be it further

Resolved, That steps be taken immediately to prevent the railway companies from forcing strikes or lockouts for purposes of financial enterprise or stock market manipulation, to the end that American railway employés may feel secure in the occupancy of their homes and enjoyment of their fair share of the prosperity now so general in the United States.

SENDS A DONATION AND A CHALLENGE.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1913.

Ernest Mills, Secretary-Treasurer Western Federation of Miners Denver.

Dear Brother—I am enclosing ten dollars ($10) as a donation to assist Porcupine and Bingham strikers, or all involved.

In making this little donation, I wish to appeal to the membership not to get discouraged and feel we should give up the fight or fail to contribute the necessary financial aid to our brothers in distress. It is your fight and my fight as much as the ones actually on the battle ground. I would not dare to presume to remind the membership of an organization founded on the principles of the Western Federation of Miners of this. They realize it and I have confidence in them and believe they will live up to their teachings. We claim to be a militant. class-conscious and progressive organization. I have often said before state and local organizations of the American Federation of Labor that the Western Federation of Miners was the most progressive and aggressive organization in the West if not in the United States. I hope our record in supporting the fight of our brothers will be proof of the statements we have made in public so often.

I am an active member of an organization (the printers) that I have heard some of the revolutionary element in the Western Federation of Miners refer to as the "aristocracy of the movement" and "silk stocking union," etc., and I do not claim the Typographical Union is ideal or defend any mistakes they have made, but their record as assessment payers when their own organization needed funds is admirable.

If the membership of the Western Federation of Miners think they have ever been assessed heavy, I would like to have them look up the record of some other organizations—I have two great organizations in mind—one paid ten per cent. of their earnings for nearly an entire year without a lapse of one month—one other voted by referendum to give thirty-five per cent. until the necessary funds were raised.

Methinks I hear some knockers say, "it is easy for people getting five per day to talk about assessments and donations" and to that dear, misguided brother, I want to say that by the time a representative pays the transient rates on the road all the time—robbed by hotels, laundries and a few dear friends (?) and comrades borrow a few dollars each week and forget to pay it back and they meet the expenses of a family, large or small, the man that receives living wages and works at home is as well able to assist as the man or woman employed by the Western Federation of Miners. So don't allow that to weaken the plea that we all stand together and not let our brothers fight hungry. "Why don't we quit?" some brothers in the last convention, referring to organizers, said. Because we are sincerely and earnestly interested and intend to fight to the finish and never run up a white flag.

Challenge.

In order to make this interesting, I will agree to donate twice the amount that any member of the organization (working for wages) will donate to the strike fund. This is a challenge and stands good, whether the individual is in the rank and file or in the service of the Federation or not. If I receive notification from the president the next mail of my services not being longer necessary, this stands good just the same, whether the money is earned as a representative of the Western Federation of Miners, fighting the smelter trust, or in a printing office at the linotype machine—so all you Militants, Progressives and Conservatives get busy and we will raise the very necessary ammunition when fighting a big corporation—funds. If we are lucky and raise more money than we need for Porcupine and other places involved, we can find some way to use it in the future, no doubt.

Don't all send a check the same day—our secretary-treasurer would need an assistant. If we are going to continue to say the Western Federation of Miners believes "an injury to one is the concern of all," let us show by our actions we mean it! Success to our brother strikers! Sincerely,

EMMA F. LANGDON, Organizer.

FRAGMENT OF A WIFE'S LETTER TO AN AWAKENED HUSBAND.

.....,

Saturday, January 18, 1913.

Out of my love for you, I tell you this: You have come to the parting of the ways. . . . It had to be reached sooner or later if you wish to serve aright. . . . So I cry to you from the depths of my soul; arise from your sleep of sense and be a man among men. . . . The time is ripe . . . and men of thought and strong of purpose are needed. . . . You cannot longer be a parasite, feeding self upon women, or allow yourself to be drawn to and used by married women who are violating every law of right and who keep you swinging between unrest and discord. . . . You can no longer be a destroyer of homes and so slay your own higher nature. . . .You can no longer live a lie and preach the true and expect to be of service in the world. . . . You cannot denounce the wrong you see in church, state and the whole social order, and let your own life run riot. . . . You cannot longer allow an illicit attachment, that in spite of its seeming charm, did not make you a true brother, or a stronger man to bear a man's burdens, or shoulder your own responsibilities, nor did it free you from the inner desolation that saps the very well springs of joy. . . . You have hewn every step of your way upward and you cannot now refuse to come out into the open and stand as a man and serve . . . the world needs you, needs the strong, valiant free man . . . the worker, who has lifted himself and has a right to teach.

It takes great strength to lift the weight of dead men's habits, methods and ideas and hold that back with one hand while you support the weak steps of a new thought. Think what that means . . . habits of body as well as thoughts . . . methods of self-seeking and the false notions born of ignorance of the real life its function growth and fruit.

We cannot judge a tree by the embryo shut fast in a seed, but we can judge it by its fruit. . . . Whatever makes for a lie cannot be truth. . . . Whatever the hidden life is, is sooner or later written in unmistakable signs that he who runs may read. . . . I love you. . . . I am your soul crying in the desert of these experiences; be true, be true; the greater your struggle the greater your power to become.

The women of the "Red Light districts" deserve more respect, standing as they do in their true colors in a world that brands them as outcasts, than the army of married women of our time, who, living under the shadow of homes, posing before the world for what they are not, violating every confidence placed in them as mothers and wives by secretly consorting with others. . . . They truly are the vampires.

They are unmolested in their work of undermining the very foundations of what is important in the world and sapping the moral fiber by their lie in life. . . . Better a scarlet letter than this; better the open life of an anarchistic colony, if it must be, than this hidden lie. . . . If the institution of marriage is unsatisfactory, let women come out and demand a remedy, but cease this lie in life.

You have often spoke of the advance or decline of the race. . . . Beloved, the race cannot go back into a period of darkness so long as each awakened individual stands forth in the night of confusion, holding aloft the light of his own intelligence. Freeing himself from lust—lust of power, lust of profits, lust of passions. . . . The rise of one man is important to his time, though he may only be as a little light upon a hill; he still can guide a traveler through the dark.

To alter this sorry scheme of things, you must stand in the open among men. . . . Work for the new order in your world . . . in my world . . . and then in the world abroad . . . This is a task fit for a man. . . . You have powers equal to the task. . . . The world needs you! . . . The world needs you!—A. H.

SOME HISTORICAL FACTS OF THE PORCUPINE STRIKE.

South Porcupine, Ontario, January 17, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

Yours of the 10th inst. is to hand in due time and much as I would like to contribute an article to The Magazine, giving a general outline of conditions as they are in Porcupine, yet, I do not feel that I can do the question the justice which it demands, and for that reason would rather see you take it up.

As to the reason for and what led up to the strike, you no doubt are aware, and since the battle has started much the same conditions prevail as in other conflicts of this nature.

At the commencement of trouble the mining companies, of course, sought the aid of the Thiel detective force, some 200 of their agents being sworn in as special police, and needless to say, they fully exercised their police powers, and in many instances far exceeded them, a reign of terror at one time prevailing that almost made the use of public highways by residents of the district prohibitive.

These depredations continued until the now historic shooting affray in front of the Goldfields hotel (at Timmins) took place, when four members of the union were deliberately shot down by these capitalist hirelings while trying to peacefully interview a number of strike-breakers that had been brought to camp a few hours previously, and were being forced, much against their will, as later developed, to go to work. And I might add here, that those who did the shooting (though arrested at the time) are now at large, and it is impossible to locate them anywhere.

This act, however, was the one that was rapidly crystallizing public sentiment in favor of the organization and its members. The master class realizing this was not slow to resort to new methods, which turned out to be that a large number of these gunmen were moved out of the country and our friends (so-called), the Ontario provincial police, were immediately moved in to take their places, some forty-five in all being dug up from all parts of Ontario, with worse results than ever for we fellows, for there is scarcely a day now goes by but that some of our members are arrested and thrown into jail on charges that, under normal conditions, would be regarded as a joke.

On the evening of December 20, 1912, a number of strike-breakers were being brought into camp on the regular train from Toronto, and as is quite usual, about 200 members of the union were at the station to meet them and explain the situation and conditions in camp, and the opportunity apparently was too great for the provincial bulls to allow to go by unchallenged, and in order to add another feather to their cap proceeded to beat up the crowd in an effort, I believe, to precipitate a riot. As a result of this four men were arrested, charged with unlawful assembly, and in spite of every effort on the part of legal counsel, are now serving six months at hard labor at Central prison, Toronto.

Action is also being taken against 100 members of the union by the Hollinger Mining Company relative to going on strike contrary to the provisions of the industrial disputes act. The principal ones whom they are trying to land being Peter Cleary and Organizer William Holowastky. These cases have now been adjourned on four different occasions, and for what reason I do not know, though it would appear to me that the magistrate is somewhat cautious in handing down his decision, for it would appear to any fair-minded man that judgment this time will not be in favor of the master class.

Another point that is very noticeable at this time, and though there may be nothing to it, it smells strongly of suspicion: The Bank of Ottawa with which we have been doing business since the birth of the camp now refuses to honor a telegram from the American Bankers Exchange transmitting $1,800 from headquarters of the Federation to Porcupine Miners' Union. What do you know about that? We can get no money until the check comes in by mail.

I am mailing you under separate cover a photo of a portion of the Provincial Cossacks; also some views of the New Year's day parade and would like to see you couple those with these facts and give us a write-up in The Magazine, for I know that you can treat the question in a far better manner than I can.

With best wishes, I am, Yours for the Western Federation of Miners,

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

Parade of the Strikers of Porcupine Miners' Union No. 145, W. F. M. January First, 1913.

The Types of Deputized Thugs Used in the Porcupine Mining District.

[The secretary of Porcupine Miners' Union in the above communication has presented facts without any embellishments. He has told in plain and concise language the manner in which a master attempts to hold in subjugation the victim, whose poverty makes him a dependent on a job.

The strikers of Porcupine have met with the same insults and outrages that are perpetrated by an exploiting class everywhere else when such exploiters are hungry for profits. The mine operators of Porcupine, under the flag of England, use the same weapons to crush the working class as the mine operators use beneath the folds of "Old Glory."

Capitalism is the same under the flag of an empire as it is beneath the banner of a republic, and only can Labor become emancipated when Labor, regardless of race or creed, stands united industrially and politically to wrest the powers of government from the hands of Privilege.—Editor.]

STRIKE ECHOES FROM PORCUIPNE.

Everything must have its original cause. The cause of the general strike of the workers in Porcupine was the attempt of the mine operators to cut down wages and increase the hours of labor in some cases. To fulfill the details of the "industrial disputes investigation act" the parties to the dispute applied for a "conciliation board" which held its sessions, the majority decision of the board was in favor of the mine owners, which meant that the mine owners were justified in cutting down the wages and increasing the hours of labor. Those companies that were not represented before the "board" could really be considered as parties to the dispute, as they never paid the wages or worked the hours demanded by the workers who were represented by Porcupine Miners' Union No. 145, Western Federation of Miners. The cut which amounted to an average of 50 cents per day would bring the wages down to the lowest paid in the camp.

Now let us see what this means. The wage slaves working for the companies paying the higher scale were to be cut to the lowest. while the aim of the workers was to maintain these wages and compel these companies to come up to the higher scale.

The wage slaves are beginning to realize that they not only are entitled to higher wages and shorter hours, but that the full product of their toil is theirs and that they should enjoy it.

The capitalists' "Board of Conciliation," blind to the rising sun of Socialism, refused the small demand of the workers that their wages be not cut, not realizing that the workers were organized in a class-conscious organization—the Western Federation of Miners—who are advanced Socialists and therefore not to be deceived by prejudiced law-makers who want to justify the companies in exploiting the workers to the last degree by cutting down wages and increasing the hours of labor, while these workers do not ask for the full product of their labor, knowing that they live under a government that is in the service of the capitalist class and that such government would easily stop them from any bold steps taken to hold what belongs to them.

After consideration, the wage slaves decided to go on strike against the companies that were a party to the dispute, leaving the other companies and their employés to proceed as they saw fit. The result was that the employés of those companies that paid the lowest wages and could not cut lower came out with the other workers, so that in Porcupine exists at present nothing more or less than a general strike against the parasites who are exploiting the working class and this strike continues up to the present time; but as this strike happened, as it often does, when there is a dispute between the exploited and those who exploit them; betwen labor and capital; between poor and rich; between those who produce nothing and own everything and those who produce everything and own nothing but a small portion in wages by which they may maintain a bare existence.

Mine owners belong to the exploiting class; strikers are members of the working class and consequently the first are upheld by the powers of government; the latter oppressed by all means in order to break their solidarity and determination to accomplish its purpose.

The companies employed the Thiele Detective Agency to break the strike, and then began the usual tactics of these mercenaries using intimidation, abuse and every means possible to force the miners back to work, even going so far as to enter private houses and take men out by force and compel them to work on penalty of being shot. But these tactics never helped them much. The strikers would sooner go to jail than to work as strike-breakers. Then came that famous day of bloody battle, December 2, 1912, when four of our comrades were shot, their hot blood being innocently shed. This was at the town of Timmins. We were just marching peaceably over the public highway, when we reached the fields.

Having just arrived from Sault Ste. Marie the gunmen, imagining that we were marching to take them by force, and in order to prevent this imaginary attack, shot into the parade, wounding four of our comrades. A few of the gunmen were arrested immediately, but only one of the gunmen was held for attempting murder, and he was let out on $1,000 bail, and is probably out of the country before this. The provincial police seemed to help us, but this may be believed by people who are under a hypnotic spell, but never by those who know why police exist under the capitalist system.

That the above is true, the following arguments will serve to show their willingness to serve the rich against the poor:

Many of our men were persecuted, many fined; then the time came when the provincial police, being jealous of the special police, showed themselves friendly to the strikers only for a purpose. As soon as they got control of the situation—as soon as they got a chance to show the companies, their masters, that they could herd scabs and club and shoot strikers—they turned themselves into wolves who never have mercy on sheep. They tried to shoot us on December 20th. Provincial Policeman Smith tried to shoot Lundberg while he was running away. They made arrests when peaceable strikers and non-strikers and sympathizers were trying to board the train on December 20th for Schumacher and Timmins when there were sixteen strike-breakers in the Pullman, the police conveying them, as part of their duty in helping to break the strike, being afraid that if the strikers got to talk to the strike-breakers they might persuade them to join the strikers. The result was that four absolutely innocent men, namely, Milo Jakszic, arrested for trying to board the train to meet a friend, who had telegraphed from North Bay and that he would like to have some of his friends meet him at the station; another, Evan Trochyn, who was walking, with a ticket, to board the train in order to get to Timmins to get his baggage from the Hollinger company. This man was brought here from Sudbury a few days before under false pretenses to act as a strike-breaker. As soon as he found that there was a strike on he refused to scab. This man being asked in court why he did not go to work at the Hollinger, answered, "It would be the same to me to work there in enforced servitude; I would rather be in the prison where I am now."

The third victim, Hryhory Propir, who seeing his countryman, Trochyn, in the hands of policemen, asked, "What is the reason they arrest you and where are they taking you?" Inspector Calbick, ignorant of what the question was, because Propir spoke Russian, imagined that Propir was going to take Trochin out of his claws, and clubbed him over the head so that blood like drops of rain flowed over the body of this man.

The fourth man that the police happened to fasten their claws on was Adolph Lundberg, a stranger who happened to be in the crowd, pushed by the crowd he slipped, and to save himself from falling took hold of the horses which were loaded with the first victims who were arrested.

The trial was held on December 31, and January 1st, and the above named innocent victims were convicted by Magistrate Thomas Torrence of being members of an unlawful assembly and sentenced to six months in Central Prison, Toronto, at hard labor.

Now, oh, you free-born citizens, do you think you still have liberty left in free Canada, while even to be at the railroad station is a crime, a place universally known to be public, and where all may have business.

Very soon a protest to the minister of justice will be made to demand freedom for these victims. I will tell you more of this at the proper time and will procced with what happened later.

The mine owners try by all means to break the strike, but the main weapon they rely on is as follows:

In Canada exists a famous law known as "the industrial disputes investigation act." This law has to deal with affairs when the workers can go on strike and when the capitalists can lock the workers out. Now, as some of the companies were not represented before the "Board of Conciliation" according to the above named act and their employés quit work when the employés of the companies who had a legal dispute quit, the result was that the Hollinger Mining Company issued summonses for about 375 of its ex-employés who had quit work and against two non-employés for inciting the employés to go on strike.

The trail was held at Timmins, Ontario, on January 6th, before magistrate Torrence, Peter Cleary and William Holowatsky for inciting, encouraging, etc., the employés of the Hollinger Company to go on strike. and Percy Croft for going on strike. Evidence was given by a few witnesses in favor of the company. but their evidences never proved anything against the men tried that would give good reason to convict them.

Council for the defense, Mr. A. G. Slaught, offered no evidence, but in conclusion, on behalf of the defendants, said: "The prosecution has not shown by the evidence that there has been any dispute between the company and its employés as to wages and hours prior to the time the men quit work, therefore the strike is lawful, and Croft, who quit work, and Cleary and Holowatsky, who told the men how they might better their condition, had a right to do so, otherwise we could not say that we are free, and a verdict against these men would mean that we are living in the days of chattel slavery. But this is not so, because under the British common law, liberty to quit work when we please is guaranteed without telling anyone what our intentions are."

The decision in these cases will be given on January 21st.

We are waiting to hear how the laws will be interpreted against those who dare to lift their voices in behalf of the downtrodden and oppressed. Going on strike and inciting to go on strike simply means the liberty to share your opinion with the members of the class to which you belong.

In conclusion, I may add what happened recently. Two men, Wasil Krisavich and Nick Hollik, were arrested for the same reason. On the night of January 14th a strike-breaker was assaulted on the street and lost a parcel he was carrying, and claims that Krisavich was the man that struck him, Hollik being accused of being accessory to the act; that is. aiding and abetting Krisavich.

This is an interesting story; it simply means that traps are being fixed to get the active men in jail so as to scare the others into going to work. The above named, when the assault happened, if it really did happen, cannot be convicted, for there are about 100 witnesses that saw them at the time in the Miners' Union Hall.

Now they are in jail, nobody being allowed to visit them; they are being held without bail for these minor charges and are sleeping on the cold stone floor of the cells, being furnished with neither mattresses or blankets.

The provincial police, in conjunction with the Thiele detectives, are doing their best to break the strike; but the strikers stand so firmly that we do not believe there is any reason to fear that the enemies of the working class will succeed in breaking the solidarity that prevails here.

THE DEPTH OF SERVILITY.

When a Socialist orator or a labor agitator applies the word "wage slave" to the American workingman, this giant of free-born American citizenship gets highly offended and remonstrates with the person applying such epithet protesting that he is a free-born American citizen and dares anyone to say that he is a slave. He gets very indignant, his chest swells out and he straightens up his shoulders, a light of fire gleams in his eye, his fighting spirit is aroused and ready for action to annihilate the intemperate that dares to classify him as a slave. He is ready to fight anybody that with facts tries to classify him with the slaves of the South or with the Roman populace of Nero's time. He is a free-born American citizen and, by the Gods, he wants everybody (but his master) to understand that. He is not the slave of anyone. If he doesn't like to work for his present master he can quit him and go to look for another, and so forth. He will not be dictated to by anybody, particularly by any labor unions. When for any reasons union men go on strike, he is a free-born American citizen, claims the right to scab or to carry a gun to shoot down his fellow workers.

He will not tolerate being called his right name by his fellow workers, nor has he any time to listen to them, to reason with them, to discuss with them, problems that concern him and his family. Nor will he do anything at all to break the shackles of wage slavery. Oh, no! He is a free-born American citizen, and therefore these things do not concern him at all. But as a slave that he is, when his master wants him to do anything detrimental to his fellow workers as well as to himself, he, like a cringing brute, goes ahead and does it. There is no depth of degradation into which he will not crawl in order to please his master and retain his job.

On October 14, 1912, a general strike was ordered in the Ely district of Nevada which included McGill. In this strike the Mill and Smeltermen's Union No. 233 of the W. F. M. was involved. The strike went into effect at 11 p. m., and the members of that union, assisted by a number of organizers, began to picket the entrance to the smelter, which was very effective in keeping men away from the works, though the shift that was working when the strike was called remained at work, working twenty-four hours straight for eight consecutive days under armed guards in order to break the strike.

The pickets were very successful in persuading men to keep away from the smelter, which fact exasperated the management, who appealed to the sheriff of White Pine county to break the picket line for them so as to give them a better chance of securing scabs. The sheriff would not interfere with peaceful picketing, therefore the company sent for a squad of Wadell's professional man-killers and strike-breakers. These thugs, headed by one McGaffin, arrived here on October 16th The company requested Sheriff Crain to deputize them, which he refused to do. They therefore were taken inside of the stockade at the smelter in the presence of the governor of this state, who had come here at the request of the company and for whose cowardice and servility to the company, to a large extent, can be laid the blame for the murder of two men by these imported thugs. If Mr. Oddie, as governor of the state of Nevada, had done his duty, there would have been no murder committed, but upon his failure to be the governor of the state, George Pinnoris, Greek organizer of the Western Federation of Miners and Nick Papas, a member of Mill and Smeltermen's Union No. 233, were murdered while on picket duty by the imported thugs on the morning of October 17th.

The coroner's jury, composed mostly of company men, after hearing much evidence, rendered a verdict which said that the killing was unnecessary, and, notwithstanding this fact, 176 workingmen, the majority of whom are Americans, have attached their signatures to a document addressed to the captain of the murderous squad.

This list of signatures, in the shape of a vote of thanks for being murdered, was introduced by the company representatives at the grand jury hearing for the purpose of influencing said jury, which it did.

In order that the readers may form an idea of the servility of these signers, I want to say to you that H. Bayliss, whose name appears on the list, a blacksmith by trade, while on his way home from the railroad station the morning of the shooting was struck by a flying bullet fired by these thugs, who with his own signature he thanks for saving his life.

One G. A. McKay, whose testimony before the coroner's jury was of such nature that if given before any impartial jury, said jury would hang the whole squad of murderers without leaving the jury box. Said McKay begged us not to have him called before said jury for fear that he might lose his job.

These are your free-born American workers, that in order to hold their jobs and please their masters, they sink their boasted freedom and independence lower than that of any slave of any time.

Two workingmen that were fighting for the recognition of some of their rights were murdered in cold blood by imported professional murderers, and other servile workers thank the murders for their deeds.

Can workingmen be any more servile?

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR WARNS AGAINST LEAD POISONING.

So much lead poisoning has been found to exist among painters and lead workers in New York factories that the Department of Labor (of that state) has begun a vigorous campaign against plumbism, a disease which recent investigation by the federal government shows to be from eight to ten times as frequent in American as in European factories where the manufacture and use of lead is under strict governmental control. The department is endeavoring to enlist the co-operation of employers and workers in lead at the same time that definite legal regulation of the industry is being proposed by the American Association for Labor Legislation as a necessary supplement to voluntary action. This regulation which comes in the form of the association's uniform bill, now being introduced in every state in which a Legislature is at present sitting, calls for sufficient washing facilities, instructions to workmen by foremen and others, mechanical methods of dust prevention and removal and the prohibition of eating in work rooms This promises to be a big national campaign for the prevention of lead poisoning.

The New York law already requires physicians and hospitals to report lead poisoning and the department has just distributed to every painters' union and to all employers and hospitals reporting cases of lead poisoning a 50,000 English edition of a card of "Information for Workmen," to be followed later by editions in other languages, stating that lead poisoning can be prevented, that hoods and other mechanical means are necessary to take away lead dust and fumes, but that the workers themselves need to take extraordinary precautions. These instructions to lead workers continue:

How Men Are Poisoned by Lead.

(1). Lead is poison to the body. It enters the body mainly through the nose and mouth. It may be inhaled as dust or fumes It may be swallowed with food or saliva (especially if tobacco or gum is put into the mouth with soiled fingers), or it may be absorbed through the skin.

(2). When lead gets into the body it leads, among other things, to indigestion and lead "colic;" to diseases of the heart, blood vessels and kidneys, or to paralysis of the hands. known as "wrist drop."

(3). Lead acts upon the body slowly and insidiously. Without knowing your danger you may be getting some lead poison into your body every day. If you are working with lead in any one of its many forms, you must therefore use great care so as to protect yourself against it.

(4). On the very first sign of not feeling well see a doctor or go to a dispensary. Do not wait until you are too sick to work. The earlier you go to a doctor the easier it will be to cure you if you are being poisoned by lead. BE SURE TO TELL THE DOCTOR ALL ABOUT YOUR OCCUPATION AND ITS DANGERS.

How to Prevent Lead Poisoning.

(1). Always wash before eating, and if you work in a factory, before leaving the factory. Remove all dirt from under your finger nails with a brush.

(2). Never eat in the room in which you work.

(3.) Never chew tobacco or gum while working. If you do, the lead dust on your fingers and in the air is sure to be swallowed.

(4). Use overalls when you work. Do not wear your working clothes on the street or at home. They may contain lead and poison you and others.

(5). Respirators are very useful and should always be used when working among lead dust or fumes.

(6). Keep the workroom clean. Do all you can to keep down dust. Do not get lead on your hands and clothes any more than you can possibly help.

(7). Always eat a good breakfast before going to work. Drink plenty of milk. Have at least one good movement of the bowels every day. Constipation is a suggestive symptom of lead poisoning. Avoid the use of intoxicants in any form. Their use weakens the body and makes it harder for your body to overcome the poison of lead.

(8). Keep clean. Wash with warm water, soap, and nail brush. Take at least one full hot bath a week.

WARS WILL CONTINUE UNTIL SOCIALISM TRIUMPHS.

By R. A. Dague.

At the time I write a great war is in progress between Turkey and Bulgaria and her allies. It is not my purpose in this contribution to go into the discussion of the cause of the bloody conflict further than to say it is twofold, to-wit, greed of the capitalists and religious prejudice and bigotry. In this article I will write chiefly of the religious phase of the subject. The Turks are Moslems, or Mohammedians, while the Bulgarians are Christians. Great devastating wars for centuries have at intervals been fought between the adherents of the two religious systems. The crimes that have been committed by both Mohammedians and Christians were unspeakly atrocious In America we are told how cruel and wicked is the Turk, but an occasional writer, who is impartial, tells us that Christians often are guilty of horrible outrages against the Mohammedians.

Not long ago a correspondent of the "London Mail" published the result of his investigation of the conditions existing there for several years. He says after much diplomacy he succeeded in gaining the confidence of one of the noted Christian chieftains and for a time was the guest of the Skrill, that warlike tribe of brigands who live in the mountains behind Scutari and are 20,000 strong. He says: "For a fortnight I lived with its chief, Vatt Marashi, in a little hut high up above the town of Scutari, and many are the chats we have had together. Once I asked him why he so constantly terrorized Scutari, whereupon he replied, with a grin: 'We fight and massacre the Turks only because we are Christians.'

He says these same robbers and murders claim to be Christians. He adds:

"There is a big Christian cathedral at Scutari and I happened to attend the festival of the Madonna, at which there was a great procession, but, strange, indeed, was the sight, for the orderly Christian procession was guarded by a great body of those brigandish tribes armed to the teeth and carrying rifles."

All the so-called Christian nations maintain large armies and are ready on small provocation or for spoils to rush at other peoples and murder them. Each army that goes forth to burn and destroy and kill and to commit nameless outrages, send along chaplains to pray to God to help them in this horrible work. To my mind this is mockery—is worse than blasphemy—worse than paganism.

The Russians claim to be Christians, but they often horrify the world by savagely murdering men, women and children of the Jewish faith. How can any one of sane mind think such cruelty and fiendishness is any part of a true religion? Jesus said, forgive your enemies, return good for evil. Do to others as ye would that they should do unto you. It is sad to think how distorted one's religious beliefs may become. Col. R. G. Ingersol told how a land buyer hired a man to go with him and show him certain timber lands for sale. He had a lunch prepared which he took along with him. In the evening the hired man returned without the land buyer. A suspicion was aroused that he had done away with the stranger. A search revealed the fact that he had been killed. He had been robbed and his lunch had been eaten all except the meat. The suspicioned man was arrested and confessed the crime. When asked why he ate all the man's lunch except the meat, he replied that he killed the man on Friday and it was contrary to his religion to eat meat on that day.

Religious fanaticism and capitalism, or greed, have shed rivers of blood and cursed mankind beyond an estimate. Pagans and Christians stand ready to murder each other with promptness and despatch, either for spoils or for Christ's sake, and for territory to extend their trade or to put money in their pockets. Christian will wage war against his Christian brother, burn his houses, assault his females, devastate his country and kill him as he would a dog.

The following by J. B. Staff quite truly depicts the true situation. He says:

> We take the millions that could found new schools
> And pay them for the maiming iron tools
> Of Death. We hear the cry from Hunger's lips
> And heedless, build our dreadnaught battleships!
> Our money is a mass of steel, perhaps
> A few short years, then dumped as iron scraps!
> While soon we launch another—smash the wine!
> It's larger than our neighbors; my! how fine!
> And thus we go, like little boys, our chips
> Upon our shoulders: mighty battleship
> And armies. These we use to maim and kill
> The very ones who now must pay the bill!
> When shall we put this cursed thing away?
> This grisly relic of an ancient day,
> That should no more of our life be a part
> Than feudalism, witchcraft, or black art!

My answer to the poet is: We shall put "this cursed thing of war" away. when Socialism triumphs and not before. Speculation, greed, graft, slavery, war and the robbing of the weak by the strong are the logical, legitimate fruits of the competitive system of industrialism. War will not; in fact, cannot be abolished so long as the competitive system of business is in force, for it is the essential part of it. When Socialism is established then wars will cease, because it proposes a co-operative commonwealth and a universal brotherhood and universal peace. The Socialist movement is diametrically opposed to contention, slavery and war. It is based on reciprocity, equity and justice. Its motto is "An injury to one is the concern of all."

When Socialism has arrived in all its fullness, kings, plutocrats, monopolists and all selfish robbers of their fellow-men will have disappeared. There will be no strikes, nor blacklistings, nor dynamiting, nor war; there will be no unemployed; poor girls will no longer sell their bodies for bread; the jails and insane asylums will contain few or no inmates; there will be no beggars in the land, and no festering slums in our cities; there will be no pale-faced, half-starved women working in sweat-shops, no tender children enslaved in shops and mills. Then labor will receive its just reward; peace and prosperity will cover the earth; then will life be worth the living.

Then the truly religious people will not from intolerance, superstition and greed, raise great armies and go forth to burn, destroy, outrage and murder their fellow-men. Then the written religious creeds will be reduced from thirty-nine articles to one, and people will emphasize the practice of kindness and the doing of good works rather than doctrines, theories, creeds.

I know of no better confession of faith than that given in four lines, by that noble Socialist woman, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who says:

> "So many gods, so many creeds,
> So many ways that wind and wind,
> While just the act of being kind
> Is all the sad world needs."

INTERNATIONAL NEWS LETTER.

A Synopsis of Facts Relating to the Trade Union Movement of the World.

(Issued by the International Secretariat of National Trade Union Centers. Affiliated membership over seven million.)

Australia.—A bill has been introduced in the Australian Parliament for the purpose of founding a state merchant fleet. It is practically assured also that the bill will pass the House. . . . The Parliament of New South Wales has passed a bill providing for an eight-hour day for all colliery workers. . . . At a conference of the various unions of waterside workers, marine engineers, seamen, marine officers, carters and drivers, it was decided to establish a Transport Workers' Union for the whole of Australia. . . . In connection with the miners' strike at Waihi, in New Zealand, there are now sixty-six unionists in jail for twelve months because they refused to find recognizances for future good behavior. The strike, which was lost, was a protest against the compulsory court of arbitration. As the newly-grounded Federation of Trade Unions have declared themselves against the trades disputes and arbitration law, which has been in force for nearly twenty years, we may reasonably look forward to further struggles in the "Land of Social Peace." . . . The federal arbitration court has decided that the regular working time for ships' crews at sea of eight hours within twenty-four hours shall not be overstepped, and that the three-shift system shall be introduced for all. This decision means an important advance for Australian seamen. for which their comrades in other countries, unfortunately, must probably wait a long time still. . . . The Musicians' Union in Victoria has decided to maintain the entrance examination for new members, but members of foreign trade unions will be recognized when they do not stay longer than a month in the country. Otherwise the latter must also undertake the examination. . . . The Federal House of Representatives passed a bill by the labor government relative to workmen's compensation in case of accidents. This was even accepted by the opposition as "long overdue." . . . The amalgamation scheme of the building trades in Victoria is proceeding satisfactorily, and the question of closer organization in country districts is receiving much attention.

Austria.—The central organ of the Austrian trade unions will appear weekly from the beginning of this year in German and fortnightly in Czech. It has also been decided to publish a Polish edition and also to improve the organization of the trade union center in general. . . . The wage demands of the women glove sewers in Prague have been rejected by the employers. . . . The plasterers of Vienna have been in negotiation for a long time with the employers in regard to a new tariff agreement. Plasterers, therefore, are advised to avoid Vienna. . . . According to the statistics compiled by the Woodworkers' Union, there are, in Vienna, 11,718 cabinet makers. The average working time of the cabinet makers is at present fifty-four and a quarter hours weekly, as against fifty-seven and a quarter hours in the year 1906. Six per cent of them are engaged weekly, 27 per cent daily, 41 per cent hourly, 26 per cent on piece work. Half the cabinet makers earn at present 28 to 32 kronen per week, nearly a quarter 33 to 40 kronen. The average daily wage of all cabinet makers is now 5 kronen, as against 4 kronen in 1906.

Belgium.—The Socialist Tobacco Workers' Union has published statistics covering 241 establishments and 5,081 work people, inclusive of 1,736 female workers, according to which the average work time works out at sixty and one-half hours, and the rate of pay at 16 francs 46 centimes per week, i. e., 27 centimes, or not quite 3 d. per hour. The government has introduced in Parliament a bill which provides for compulsory sickness, invalidity and old-age pension insurance for all workers—industrial, commercial. agricultural and public servants—who earn less than 2,400 francs (about £96) a year. The insurance may be done through recognized societies, as under the English law, while each province must have a state insurance department for those who did not join the recognized insurance section of a society. Contributions shall amount to at least 12 francs for sickness, 6 francs for invalidity and 6 francs for old-age pensions, a total of 24 francs per year. Insured persons, with an income of less than 15 francs per week shall pay half that amount. The employer shall per head of his employés pay 2 francs per year for sick insurance, and 4 francs for old-age pensions. From the latter contribution 2 francs shall be handed over to the invalidity insurance department after the year 1938. The state will contribute 25 centimes for every franc paid by the worker and employer up to 12 francs per head. Sick persons shall have free medicine and doctor, and from ten days onward till the end of the third month 1 franc daily sick pay. All other provisions of the bill are equally unsatisfactory. . . . A national union of teachers, to be affiliated to the Belgian Labor party and federation of trade unions has been established at a congress recently held in brussels.

China.—It is reported from Nanking that a great Socialist Congress has lately taken place there, and that it was decided to form a Socialist party and to publish a paper with the title "The Chinese Republican."

Croatia.—Since the beginning of November the state of siege has given those in power the opportunity of terrorizing the folk to the utmost bent. All freedom of the press has been stopped and the papers may print scarce more than the announcements of the government. Every day numerous expulsions take place, particularly effecting the Serbians. Employers are often requested by the authorities to discharge their Serbian workers, in order that they may be expelled from the country as undesirable citizens.

France.—A meeting of 5,000 municipal workers in Paris came to the decision that a pension of 1,250 francs per annum after twenty or twenty-five years service should be demanded at the age of 50, and, further, payment for all days of the year. When the latter demand is not immediately satisfied another meeting is to be called to consider further steps. . . . A large number of workers of marine workshops and other state works, who participated in the protest strike of December 16th, have been punished by order of the authorities. . . . Nearly all the sardine fisheries have definitely closed down their works on the plea that the fishers refuse to use more successful methods of catching and that the government appears to have no interest for the industry. Should the employers stand by their decision, it would mean loss of work for 50,000 workers. . . . The continually recurring agitation in the building and coachmaking industries for the abolition of the prevalent sweating system of sub-contractor brings to mind the fact that this was abolished by a decree of March 2, 1848, which threatened severe punishment for offenders. . . . The granite and slate quarrymen of the Meuse district are locked out, and the employers are making attempts to bring in workers from abroad. . . . The labor minister's office has published statistics re the employment of women in France. These show that there is a total of about 4,150,000 women workers in the country. They are spread over the various industries as follows: Agriculture, 949,000; industries, etc., engaged outdoors, 48,000; workwomen, 1,337,000; home workers, 540,000; business and professional employés, 296,000; workwomen, 208,000; servants, 772,000. The percentage of women workers is higher in France than in any other land.

Germany.—According to statistics published in the "Correspondenzblatt," the central organ of the German trade unions, the so-called free trade unions on January 1st have 2,625,000 members, as against a round 2,400,000 at the beginning of the past year. The metal workers and the transport workers' unions increased their membership by 35,000 members each, the building workers increased by 27,000 members, the factory workers by 20,000, etc. . . . The "Korrespondent," the organ of the German Typographical Union, celebrated its jubilee on January 1st. Book printers' journals have been founded very often since 1766, but the first to hold ground was the "Korrespondent," founded in 1862 by the Leipzig local union. This paper, which appears three times weekly, and has 50,000 regular subscribers, is the only organ of a German trade union which is not obligatory for all union members. All other official organs of the unions, with a circulation of 3,000,000 copies per week, are supplied free to members. The German Typographical Union has now 65,000 members, i. e., 90 per cent of the printers employed in Germany. . . . The union of warehousemen, numbering about 3,000 members, joined hands with the Shop Assistants' Union on January 1st, the membership thereby raising to 20,000. . . . A conference of shipwrights and kindred trades decided to advise their members to amalgamate with the woodworkers. . . . The sculptors have rejected a proposal to amalgamate with the woodworkers. Voting on the point did not provide the necessary two-thirds majority. For amalgamation 1,653 members voted, while 1,518 voted against. It should be mentioned, however, that the Sculptors' Union covers also the stone carvers and modelers. . . . In Berlin the tilers are on strike against a prospective reduction in wages. . . . Notice of termination of the local tariff agreement for stucco workers and roofers has been given by the employers in Kiel. . . . About 1,400 engineers and other ships crews have been locked out on the Lower Weser fishing steamers. . . . During a millers' strike in Bremen the representative of the Cristian rival union offered the employer men who were willing to work.

Great Britain.—A strong movement for amalgamation is afoot among the thirty-eight different trade unions in the printing trade. These unions have an aggregate membership of 77,161. . . . The railway workers, who in unions number 185,379 members, appear to be within sight of successful amalgamation. The same appears to be the case with the building workers, who lately voiced their opinion by casting 31,500 votes against 12,150 for amalgamation into an industrial union. . . . The taxicab drivers of London and Liverpool, to the number of 6,000, are on strike because the proprietors have increased the price of petrol which the drivers themselves must provide. . . . A conflict between the executive and the delegate meeting of the engineers ended in the highhanded removal of the executive officers from the offices, because they were said to have acted against the instructions of the last national congress. At present a group of delegates has been appointed as a provisional executive committee. . . . A well-attended special conference of trade unions has decided to accept the government's bill relative to the political activity and position of trade unions, but yet resolutely to demand further modifications and reforms. . . . The London bakers are agitating for a week of fifty-four working hours, with an hour for dinner, and a minimum wage of 30s. a week for bakehouse men and 32s. for factory hands. . . . Eight hundred calico printers' laborers in Lancashire struck work for an increase in wages of 10 per cent, after six months' negotiations with the employers had failed. . . . More than 200 unions are involved in a scheme to amalgamate the organizations catering for the metal, engineering and shipbuilding industries. Fewer and correspondingly stronger unions are all the more necessary in this industry, as the employers are combined in one all-powerful federation. . . . The White Star and other shipping companies have "voluntarily" increased their seamen and firemen's wages 10s. per month.

Holland.—The National Center of Trade Unions in Holland have just published their fifth annual statistics on Trades Councils or Central Labor Bodies, after the example of the German General Commission. These statistics cover 40 of the 44 trades councils in existence in 1911. At the end of that year they embraced 409 trade unions, 33 local branches of the Social-Democratic party, 8 co-operative stores and 13 other organizations (working-men's sport clubs, etc.) The increase in membership for the last year was 6.060, the total number of members rising from 51,288 to 57,348. These members were divided among the various groups as follows: Trade unions, 46,-898 (82 per cent of the total); Social-Democratic party, 2,709 (5 per cent); other organizations, 7,741 (13 per cent). The largest councils are in Amsterdam, 19,810 members, and in Rotterdam, 9,010 members. The Carpenters' Union had in 1909, 2,137 members; 1910, 2,646; 1911, 3,046; beginning of 1912, 3,620. In the last year this union was able to increase the wages of 1,665 journeymen by a florin per week and shorten work time by 739 hours weekly . . . The coal haulers and trimmers of Amsterdam have been able to secure a rise in wages from 2.25 to 2.50 florin or gulden per day. . . . The printers and compositors from a number of printing works in Amsterdam had to go on strike as good understanding with the employers was not to be attained on termination of their tariff agreements.

Italy.—The congress of the syndicalist trade unions which was held in Modena at the end of 1912, decided by 42,000 votes against 29,000 to start a new national center of trade unions, because, they argued, the old center made it impossible for the "revolutionary unions" to join. It is stated that the unions affiliated to the new center may continue to adhere to the old federation of trade unions. It remains to be seen whether the old center agrees to accept that point of view, which, indeed, would mean recognition of the disorganization of labor . . . A bill re the labor contract of private employés has been laid before Parliament by the groups of the Left. The government apparently is in sympathy with the bill. . . . For having participated in a riot, though it could not be proved that they were present at the time, eight organized workmen have been sentenced to altogether sixty-seven years' imprisonment. The riot referred to took place two and a half years ago between day laborers and other workmen who operated threshing machines co-operatively. . . . The Railwaymen's Union has pronounced its dislike of the system which has obtained till now of distributing gratuities to the personnel at the end of the year and through which increase of wages may be avoided. This year it is said that 4,000,000 lire were required for this purpose.

Norway.—During the past year the trades unions of this country increased their membership by 7,000. At present they number about 60,000 members. The workers in the printing trades, of whom 95 per cent are organized, have given notice in regard to the tariff agreement which has been in force since the last six years. This agreement is to terminate at the end of March. . . . The chief judge, the president of the Christiana High Court, Mr. Thinn, has lately published his endorsement of the Social-Democratic principles.

Russia.—According to the report of the inspector of industries, the price of bread in Russia has risen 10 per cent within the past two years, while the wages of factory workers have increased only 3 per cent. This increase, however, only taking place where wages movements have been successful. . . . In the Baltic provinces 1,300 book workers have been locked out. The authorities have dissolved the assistants' association, confined the executive and sentenced ten assistants, each to ten months' imprisonment, because they issued statistical inquiry forms in regard to the conditions of wages and work. Many strikers also have been banished in order to assist the employers in their decision "to starve the whole bunch out." In spite of this, latest reports state that the assistants in half the workshops have won and gained a nine-hour day and other reforms.

Servia.—On the application of the Servian and Bulgarian trades unions the International Secretariat of the National Trade Union Centers in Berlin. Germany, has issued an appeal to all affiliated countries for the support of comrades in the two countries. It is a question of preventing the failure of their labor temples and Press, and, further, of supporing them in their efforts to help neccssitous families, who have union members at the front, or who have to care for returned wounded. By rendering aid the international solidarity of the workers will heal many a wound and mitigate much of need for which their Serbian and Bulgarian comrades have the "dividend" patriots to thank.

Switzerland.—The Swiss Woodworkers' Union numbered over 8,000 members at the end of 1912, as against 7,016 at the beginning of the year. . . . The "yellow" or blackleg "Bakers' Assistants' Association," which was founded by the masters two years ago, has gone into liquidation. . . . The next Trades Union Congress will probably take place in September at Zurich. Simultaneously the Eighth International Conference of the National Trade Union Centers, and, for the first time, a conference of the secretaries of the various international trade organizations, will be held.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington, January.—Two bills designed to give greater popular control of the federal courts are now being drafted by Representative Victor L. Berger of Wisconsin, who will probably introduce both of them in Congress some time during the week of January 20th.

One of the measures provides a limitation on the powers of the Supreme Court in declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional. The other relates to a reform policy of making federal judges elective instead of appointive.

"If the people are capable of electing their President and Vice President, their representatives in state and national Legislatures, and now in many states their United States Senators, they surely ought to be competent to elect their federal judges," said the Wisconsin Socialist. "Judges in all state courts are now elected by the people. So why should federal judges be kept from their control? In order to change the present system we will need a constitutional amendment, but I expect my proposal to receive serious consideration by Congress."

Berger's bill will ask a constitutional amendment providing for the election of federal judges for terms of four years. The amendment will also carry with it the right of popular recall.

The other bill, which is being drawn up by Berger, prescribes conditions under which the Supreme Court of the United States will be permitted to pass upon constitutionality of federal laws. The constitution now gives the Supreme Court certain appellate jurisdiction in specified cases, but "with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." Representative Berger proposes to make some of these regulations.

He proposed: First, that no federal law shall be declared unconstitutional unless the membership of the Supreme Court is unanimous in the decision; second, that in any case Congress may add to a law a provision prohibiting the Supreme Court from questioning its constitutionality.

A federal investigation of recent actions of Idaho judges which are said to violate the constitutional guranty of a free press may be forced by Representative Victor L. Berger. In addition to the recent heavy punishment inflicted upon the proprietors of the Capital News of Boise City, Idaho, for printing a telegram from Theodore Roosevelt which criticized the action of the court in barring the Bull Moose electors from the national ticket in November, the case of Carl Machold, a reporter for the Pocatello, Idaho, Tribune, who was thrown into jail for six months for criticising Judge J. M. Stevens of the Blackfoot District Court, has also been brought to Berger's attention.

Machold wrote a story demanding an investigation of Steven's court, based on court records and including a sworn affidavit. Stevens immediately ordered Machold's arrest on a criminal libel charge, insisted on trying the case himself, although a change of venue is guaranteed by the Idaho constitution, and sentenced Machold to jail for six months and to pay costs amounting to $1,200.

Berger has sent for the documents in both Machold's case and that of the Capital News, and if these bear out the stories which have come to him he will ask Congress to investigate.

Recent developments in the District of Columbia insurance investigation by the sub-committee of which Victor L. Berger is a member, have shown the startling fact that the payment of half the taxes in the District by the federal government has resulted in making real estate higher in price than any other city of the United States, and probably higher than in any other place on earth.

In other words, the real estate dealers appropriate the millions contributed annually by the federal government which are intended to relieve the burdens caused by the extraordinary building and street development in the nation's capital, and put this money into their own pockets in the shape of inflated real estate values.

Representative Victor L. Berger, Socialist congressman from Milwaukee, believes that the federal officials at Indianapolis used "a little too much foresight" in ordering on November 19th—forty days before the ironworkers, charged with the dynamiting conspiracy, were convicted—a special train to take them from Indianapolis to the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth. St. Louis "Labor" reproduced photographic copies of letters, the first dated November 19, and others dated December 14th and 24th, advising railroad officials that the special train would probably be needed for January 1st. About a week before the jury reported on the case a letter signed by L. L. Kensinger, superintendent of the St. Louis Terminal Company, positively ordered the special train for January 1, or "possibly somewhat sooner." The jury's verdict was rendered on December 31st.

Representative Berger has sent to St. Louis, asking that the originals be forwarded to him, with the idea of asking for a congressional investigation of the "foresight" of the railroad and court officials.

In Memoriam.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in His wise and never-erring judgment to take unto Himself our beloved brother, Joseph Freeman, who departed this life on earth on the 29th day of December, 1912, reminding us that in the midst of life we are in death, and by our brother's decease Mrs. Joseph Freeman has lost a devoted husband. and De Lamar Miners' Union a loyal member and brother; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our charter be draped for a period of thirty days, that a copy of this resolution be spread on the minutes and a copy be given to the deceased's relatives and friends in this, their time of sorrow and bereavement.

When draws life's journey to its end,
Oh, light eternal shine!
As through Death's vale our way we wend
Be with us strength divine.
Then earth's dark night shall wane to day;
Heaven's morn shall chase its gloom away—
Light everlasting shine.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

THE REMEDY for private monopoly is collective ownership, and that is Socialism.

THE SECRETARY of Creede Miners' Union has notified headquarters that seventy-five men have been recently laid off the mines at Creede, Colorado, and that idle men seeking employment have but little chance to secure work.

HETTY GREEN, the female financier of Morgan & Co.'s United States, says she didn't care to ride in an automobile because Jesus didn't. Good! Now let Hetty practice some more things that Jesus didn't do. For instance, Jesus didn't lend money at 10 per cent. interest.—Toilers' Defence.

THE DEMOCRATS will be at the pie-counter after March 4th. It is probable that a few million workingmen who aided in securing a Democratic victory, will be taking a hitch in their belts of a few more holes ere the Princeton Professor has served his four years in the White House.

An empty stomach sometimes starts the machinery in the cupalo.

THE GARMENT WORKERS have been making a desperate fight in New York, and regardless of hired thugs and armed policemen, they are standing united and their determined battle for conditions that will enable human beings to escape death by starvation, has forced a number of the factory tyrants to concede some of the demands of the strikers.

THE MORGAN and Rockefeller combinations, which are recognized as the "Money Trust," control holdings estimated at $40,000,000,000. The "Money Trust" has within its keeping the power to precipitate a crash at any time that will paralyze every industry on this continent.

It is a joke to boast of the independence of American citizenship. Morgan and Rockefeller are Kings and so-called sovereign citizens are Slaves.

THE MINERS of Wharton, New Jersey, demanded an increase of 10 per cent. in their wage scale. The old wage was $2.00 per day and the mine operators granted the 10 per cent. increase, but raised the work time to eight hours more per week.

The miners refused to accept the terms of the mine owners and declared a strike for the same hours of the former workday and an increase of 10 per cent,, with no discrimination against an employé who belonged to a labor organization. The miners have organized and have a membership of 500.

They are standing firm and feel confident of winning the strike.

A VISITOR to an insane asylum saw a guard in charge of about one hundred inmates out for exercise. The visitor inquired of the guard if he was not afraid of being attacked by one of the lunaties. The guard replied, "No, I can liek any one of them." "Yes," said the visitor, "but suppose they all attacked you" "Oh, there is no fear of that," said the guard, "crazy men don't organize."—Adapted Exchange.

It is a foregone conclusion from the above, that all the crazy men are not inmates of the asylums. There are millions of workingmen who have not brains enough to see the necessity of a labor organization, and the employér as a general rule, refers to such crazy men" as independent.

THE CORPORATE and commercial interests of California that are represented in the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, are determined, if possible, to convict Clarence Darrow.

The Chicago attorney has been identified with many notable cases involving members of organized labor, and the enemies of unionism are using every effort to place Darrow behind the bars, believing that his conviction and imprisonment would be an effective blow to organized labor.

The prosecution of Darrow will react on the persecutors, for the simple reason that the cause for which Darrow is being hounded will live and grow stronger, and a time will come when the power of the labor movement will sweep opposition aside and make it possible for human beings to enjoy "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

THE STRIKE at Mineville, New York, has disclosed the outrageous methods that are utilized to rob the worker out of even the measley wage paid by corporate gluttons. In this issue of the Magazine appears a lengthy communication in answer to the circular letter compiled by the mining company. The circular issued by the company endeavors to make it appear that its slaves have no grounds upon which to base a strike, and presents a verbal picture of the generosity of the operators towards their employés.

But the circular letter of the mining company is but a produet of the imagination of a liar, whose pen does not hesitate to record glaring falsehoods.

The employés have been robbed and the affidavits of 77 men whose names appear in the communication from Mineville, tells a story that tears off the mask from the pretended benevolence of soulless exploiters, who know no honor or justice, that might cause a slight shrinkage in dividends.

WE ARE ALL EQUAL before the law, is receiving some severe jolts in these days when the class struggle is increasing in intensity.

It took but a short time, comparatively, to pass sentence on thirty-eight members and officials of organized labor who were adjudged guilty of transporting dynamite contrary to law.

The judicial department of our government did not hesitate to send these men to prison, but such criminals as Judge Hanford of Washington and Judge Archbald of Pennsylvania, will not be imprisoned, regardless of the fact that their official records are reeking with debauchery. Removal from office will be the only punishment inflicted, although their crimes against justice are like mountains to mole-hills compared with the crimes charged against men who were resisting as best they knew against the conspiracy of an octopus to destroy their organization. "Equal before the law," in this day and age, where Poverty is convicted and Privilege remains unmolested, is but a comedy, were it not a tragedy to those who feel the outrage of discrimination.

A GROUP of I. W. W. sympathizers were gathered around the campfire by the railroad track. "Are we going on strike for shorter hours next May?" asked one as he shared his handout with his "fellow worker." "No, that was last year," the other replied. "All the I. W. W.'s that I know have been on strike longer than that," spoke up a third. One of their number who had been thinking while the others were loudly talking strike, now rose to his feet and said: "We, who are in the unemployed class—and there are millions of us—must keep a legal residence even if it is only a lodging house, so we can vote ourselves into ownership of this country. We cannot strike when we have no job. Neither can we revolt when they have control of the soldiers, wealth and weapons of war. Vote!" "Heretic," they cried, and fell upon him with sticks and beat him. And so they secured a victory for direct action. Then the policeman—backed up with political power—came along and ran them all into jail.—Oakland World.

JOSEPH FELS, the big manufacturer of Philadelphia, was in Washington recently, and while at the nations capitol, delivered an address on the doctrines of single tax.

In the course of his address, he assailed philanthropy and threw a brick at our Andy, the builder of libraries.

Fels said: "I have made no philanthropic gifts. I give nothing to charity. When I have money to give I give it to justice. The men usually called philanthropists, as a rule, uphold existing injustice, but give money to relieve victims of the wrongs they uphold.

"One conspicuous example is the man who has given enormous sums to found libraries and to abolish war. I do not wish to be understood as questioning his sincerity, but I have my doubts. It is, nevertheless, true that he is doing all that one man of influence can do to perpetuate the evils he is endeavoring to relieve.

"The man is typical of all so-called philanthropists. The most prominent supporters of charitable institutions in our cities are men who bitterly oppose abolition of wrongs that create poverty. These philanthropists may well be described as men who give money to repair a little of the harm they themselves have helped to do, or, as Tolstoy has well stated, 'men willing to do anything for the poor except get off their backs,' "

THERE IS NOTHING quite so shocking to our capitalistic patriots as the Socialist conception of international unity. Internationalism, to them, is akin to treason. How can any one be a good American who does not hate foreigners?

If there has been any genuine American "patriot" it is the American steel industry. It has been protected against the competition of the German and English capitalists engaged in producing steel for profit. The laird of Skibo never was quite so patriotic as when he was appealing to congress for higher duties to exclude the degrading and contributed to the increase of American capital that it might not be demoralizing importations of steel from Europe. No man could be a real American who did not believe that American capital was entitled to be protected from the pauper capital of Europe.

The American people—patriotic to the core—have safeguarded and contaminated through association or competition with foreign capital—that it might be kept separate from the capital of Europe and free from the curse and taint of internationalism.

The steel capital has waxed strong. We now have enough millionaires in Pittsburg and New York to make every true American feel proud of his country. With the high buildings and the large fortunes that characterize the United States, it is a prouder boast to be an American citizen than it was to be a citizen of Rome, when to be a Roman was to be first among kings and envied of mankind.

Sharper than a serpent's tooth is the ingratitude of a thankless child. The steel trust, which the American people have fostered and protected and made prosperous, has struck hands with foreign capital. William Ellis Corey, former president of the United States Steel corporation, in testifying in the suit for the dissolution of the trust, stated that there is an international agreement between the steel manufacturers in which they have apportioned the world's markets among themselves.

The steel trust has become international.

In face of such un-American conduct what will become of our glorious institutions and insure their perpetuity when the workers of the world shall unite and the brotherhood of man shall become a reality?—Milwaukee Leader.

THE ALARMING FIGURES made public by the experts employed by the Pujo Money Trust Investigating Committee regarding the capital controlled by the Morgan and Rockefeller groups of financiers, should be printed and reprinted in every newspaper in the country and paste on the dead walls and in every public place where even the most indifferent and stupid citizens may view the facts and endeavor to realize their tremendous significance.

The estimates of the Money Trust Committee and its experts place the total assets of the interests controlled by Morgan and Rockefeller at $39,711.328,678, divided as follows:

Industrial and public utilities	$15,636,853,814
Railroad properties	17,250.000,000
Banks and other financial institutions	4,000,911,932
Mining and oil properties	1,500,949,932
Miscellaneous	1,322,613,000
Total	$39,711,328,678

It is as certain and plain as mathematics that if two men can, within the short space of a lifetime, centralize under their control forty billions of wealth, or more than two-thirds of the capital invested—and which control includes all the pricipal avenues of profit-taking—in less than a score of years these two men, or their successors, will have secured possession of the remaining one-third of active capital in existence, and which is at present actually controlled by them indirectly.

It is small wonder that Mr. Baker, one of Morgan's ablest lieutenants, admitted upon the witness stand at the Pujo committee hearing, that wealth had been centralized so efficiently in the hands of a few that the danger point had been reached.

It is not pleasant to contemplate the possibilities that will accompany the next panic that strikes the country, whether it is precipitated by the money obligarchy or is produced by natural causes inherent in the capitalist system.

The Morgan-Rockefeller interests can, by converting only a small part of their wealth into collateral and locking their vaults, bring the whole country to their feet and name their own price to take over the industries that they do not now completely dominate, must be conceded by every intelligent person.

Then the game will be at an end; the capitalist system will have run its course; the new slavery will be here.

The question for you to decide, Mr. American Citizen, is, shall the nation own the trusts or shall the trusts own the nation?—Cleveland Citizen.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD of the Industrial Workers of the World, at a session held at New Bedford, Massachusetts, made a report, from which the following is taken:

"Not the least effective weapon in this program of deceiving and misleading the workers as to their true economic interests is the aid and assistance rendered the bosses by the small coterie of self-appointed saviors that have infested the Socialist movement of America. This aggregation is chiefly composed of petty business men of doubtful business ability, shyster lawyers, whose mental equipment prevented them from success in competition with better equipped members of that profession; doctors who failed to build up a practice; idle millionaires, who look upon the labor movement as a good fad to kill time and gain notoriety, and a number of other failures who were not successful in establishing themselves securely on the backs of the workers. They are devoting their petty talents to further misleading the workers in order to curry favor with the masters and thus enable them to win a place at the pie counter politics. They repeat every foul slander that has been coined by mouthpieces of the capitalist class."

Socialists who have gone down into their pockets and furnished some of the needful to the "Slander Syndicate" should congratulate themselves on their wisdom.

The Haywoods, Hazelwoods, St. Johns, Trautmans and all the other wind artists who have maligned and reviled bona fide labor bodies as scab organizations and the Socialist party as an ally of Capitalism, must have laughed at the numerous "Rubes" who parted with their money to support "Direct Actionists" who have a perpetual thirst for soup. The fellows who drafted the report throwing slime upon Socialists do not give their own records.

Their records, painted in the choicest language, would be too dirty for admission through the United States Mails. Members of organized labor and members of the Socialist party whose sympathies can be touched by every squeal for help that comes from chronic loafers whose hardest work is writing appeals for finance, deserve to be hit and the coarse calumny from the pens of veteran ingrates may teach some whole some lessons to the unsophisticated.

Capitalism Digging Its Grave

EUGENE V. DEBS has been arrested on an indictment returned against him in the Federal court for the Third district of Kansas. Debs is charged with obstructing justice.

Debs brands the indictment and arrest as an effort to crush the Appeal to Reason.

After his arrest, Debs gave bonds to the amount of $1,000 for his appearance at the May term of the United States court of the Third Kansas district, and made the following statement: "The Federal prosecutor in Kansas hired an ex-convict, it seems, to come to me and plead for financial aid so that he could go to parts unknown and start life anew. I promised him the means he pleaded for, and now I am indicted on the charge of having attempted to induce a witness to leave the jurisdiction of the court. I promise that if this case comes to trial there will be some interesting developments before it comes to a close."

During the past few years various schemes have been put into operation having for their purpose the suppression of the most powerful Socialistic journal in this country. The capitalists of America have realized the growing power of the publication printed at Girard, Kansas, and have decreed that it must be put out of existence.

The Appeal to Reason has been merciless in its exposition of the corruption and debauchery of public officials and has never hesitated in throwing the searchlight into the high places of public life, in order that the working class might be able to see clearly the outrages that were committed by that element of society who boast of their reverence for law and order.

The Appeal to Reason tore the mask from the brutal face of Capitalism in order that oppressed humanity might know something of the heartlessness of economic tyrants.

The treachery, hypocrisy and depravity of political lepers received no clemency from the Appeal to Reason, and the sanctified sinner who wore the cloak of Christianity to hide his villainy did not escape the shot of the Gatling gun at Girard, Kansas.

It is no wonder that Capitalism has summoned all its allies to murder a publication that dared to tell the truth.

It is no surprise that Debs, the most brilliant writer and orator in America, should become a victim of the vengeance of Privilege.

Debs, however, will not shrink from the battle. He will face his enemies without a tremor, and when his speech has been heard in the judicial sanctum of a Federal court in Kansas, Capitalism will be nearer its deathbed, and when that speech has been read by the millions of workers of this country, the Socialist party will loom up like a David to kill the Goliath of exploitation.

A Near View of "Bill" Haywood

Belleville, Ill., January 15.

THERE WAS A TIME when I admired "Bill" Haywood and looked upon him as a man possessed of honesty and integrity. I looked upon him as one of the greatest men in the American labor movement. I defended him on every occasion and held up his hands in the face of threats of expulsion from one of the international conventions of the United Mine Workers. I looked upon him as a man who could do no wrong.

I saw him in company with Moyer and Pettibone taken from Colorado to Idaho and held in prison, and my admiration grew for him. With others who were interested in his liberation, I worked night and day to raise money and create a sentiment to bring about his freedom. To my mind there was none greater than "Bill" Haywood. Others of the United Mine Workers held him in the same esteem and thousands of dollars were contributed by our organization for his defense. He was acquitted and released from prison. He came to the following international convention at Indianapolis, thanked the United Mine Workers for their loyal support to him, and said it was largely due to their efforts that he was again a free man. He told those delegates that they represented one of the most progressive constituencies in the labor movement.

With me there was only one "Bill" Haywood, but I knew him only at long range. I have since been in closer touch with him and have seen more of his work. I now see a different "Bill" Haywood than when he was an official of the Western Federation of Miners. My confidence in his integrity has been shattered. I can no longer look upon him as a man who has the welfare of the workers at heart. When I met him in New York last year he began a tirade against the United Mine Workers, the organization that had done so much to bring about his freedom and that he had characterized while a guest at our convention as one of the most progressive in America. He insisted that the United Mine Workers are not entitled to any more members than are "willing" to pay dues. According to Haywood, it is reactionary to compel men to belong to a union, while in effect our policy is not different in this respect than that of the syndicalists of France. The latter look upon it as entirely revolutionary to compel the workers to join the organization.

In his recent speech in Denver, Haywood characterized the United Mine Workers as the most reactionary organization in the A. F. of L., while according to his mind the International Typographical Union is the most progressive. What change has overcome the United Mine Workers of America since Haywood visited the convention a number of years ago and when he considered it one of the most progressive in America? The facts are that since the convention that Haywood visited the United Mine Workers have issued more progressive and revolutionary declarations than any other bona fide labor organization in the United States. Peculiar, indeed, that the United Mine Workers of America, which, according to Haywood now, is the most reactionary organization, should be applied to by men who are not working at the production and handling of coal and coke in or around the mine and coke ovens for charters that they might receive the protection of this "reactionary" organization. Peculiar, indeed, that within the last year more than 100,000 men working in the coal and coke industry have joined this "reactionary" organization. Can Haywood say as much about his most "progressive" organization?

My faith in Haywood's honesty has also been dispelled. I looked upon him as a man who would handle the financial affairs of his organization with the greatest possible accuracy, but investigation since his liberation from prison has proven that he is not only an ingrate, but that he is far from being honest in the handling of funds that belong to the Western Federation of Miners. It would be exceedingly wrong for me to make this statement unless I furnished proof of its truthfulness, and it is not at all pleasant for me to relate what I am going to, but I consider that recent developments demand it.

Shortly after Haywood had been released from prison, the Western Federation of Miners sent him throughout the country to solicit funds for the defense of Steve Adams, who was still in jail. Haywood came to Collinsville, Ill., where he collected something over $17; the following day he came to Belleville, Ill., where a meeting was held and $31 was collected. That same night two meetings were held in St. Louis, where $75 was turned over to him. All of this money was intended, and it was so stated at the meetings, for the defense of Steve Adams. But up to this day not a cent of this money, according to advices from the headquarters of the W. F. M., has been turned over to the office. It has been the long-standing custom of the W. F. M. that its representatives shall receive no money intended for strike or defense funds; that it shall be sent direct to headquarters; but having confidence in Haywood, it was turned over to him, thinking that he would forward it to where it properly belonged. I wonder how Haywood would have felt had those who solicited funds for his defense failed to turn it over to the W. F. M. Had everyone who was active in the interest of Haywood's release from jail done as he did in the instances mentioned, Haywood would either be occupying a prison cell or would long ago have met his fate on the gallows. The life of Steve Adams should have been as dear to Haywood as was the life of Haywood to those who gathered funds and created a favorable sentiment for his release, but his actions would indicate that his only concern was "Bill" Haywood.

The members of the United Mine Workers of America, organized labor in general, and the Socialists should know with whom they are dealing when they are warring over the personality of "Bill" Haywood.—Adolph Germer, in United Mine Workers' Journal.

The General Strike

VII. DIRECT ACTION AND ANARCHISM.

By Robert Hunter.

DIRECT ACTION AND ANARCHISM have much in common. Both lay emphasis on a series of oppositions. Both are anti-parliamentary, anti-patriotic, anti-militarist, anti-votes, anti-dues, anti-insurance, anti-contracts. Both believe in a vague federalism of ill-defined and hastily-grouped workers. The Revolutionary unionists declare for the general strike, which is a form of the insurrections urged by the anarchists. The sabotage of the Revolutionists bears a striking resemblance to the anarchists' propaganda of the deed, even when it leads to assassination. Leadership is abhorred by both, but an inner circle of daring revolutionists is advocated by both. "We must form," said Bakunine, "not indeed the army of revolution—the army can never be anything but the people—but yet a sort of staff for the revolutionary army * * * * No very great number of such men is requisite. A hundred revolutionists, firmly and seriously bound together, are enough for the international organization of all Europe."

This idea of an inner clique to lead the ignorant and inert mass plays a great part in both the anarchist and syndicalist movements. Bakunine formed a secret society in the midst of the International Workingmen's Associatioh, and after that organization was abandoned in 1871 the anarchists continued to advocate the same tactics in subsequent conferences. Today we find Pouget, the leader of the French syndicalists, insisting that the enlightened minority in the French labor unions should be the unrestrained guardians of the organization. He says: "The conscious minority will act without taking account of the obstinate mass of the unconscious who have not yet been animated by the spirit of revolt and may be considered as human zeros." And Pouget concludes: "Thus appear the enormous difference in method which distinguishes syndicalism from democracy; the latter, by the mechanism of universal suffrage, gives direction to the unconscious * * * and stifles the minorities who bear within them the hopes of the future. The syndicalist method gives a result diametrically opposed to this. Impulsion is instilled into the conscious, the rebels, and all favorably inclined are called upon to act and to participate in the movement." The position here taken by Pouget is incorporated into the very constitution of the French Federation of Labor, which makes it possible for a closely organized minority to completely control that organization. The trade union with a score of members has the same voting power in the Federation as the trade union with 10,000 members. Opposition to majority rule has always been as much a cardinal principle of the anarchists as it is of Tammany Hall, and it today stands as the policy and practice of the French unions.

The anarchists in the international fought as the Revolutionary unionists do today, for what is called purely economic action. They had no faith in political parties, in parliamentary methods, or, in fact, in any effort to capture public powers. For instance, the anarchist, Bordat, said before the Lyons tribunal in 1893, what most of the Revolutionary unionists today would thoroughly assent to. "To send workingmen to a parliament," he declared, "is to act like a mother who would take her daughter to a brothel." "Working-class candidates," said Bakunine, "transferred to bourgeois conditions of life into an atmosphere of completely bourgeois political ideas, ceasing to be actually workers in order to become statesmen, will become bourgeois, and possibly will become even more bourgeois than the bourgeois themselves. For it is not the men who make positions, but, on the contrary, positions which make the men." Such have been the criticisms of the anarchists levied against working-class political action. Anyone who will turn to the literature of Revolutionary unionism will find again and again the same thought In advocating trade union action, however,, the anarchists always opposed officials and sought a de-centralized federation of groups. The chief purpose of the vague organization they advocated was little more than to enable the workers to keep in touch with each other and to serve the needs of a quick and widespread insurrection. They believed that the world was on the verge of an upheaval, and that mere agitation would suffice to create a violent revolution that would usher in the new order of society. Parliaments would then disappear, but trade unions were necessary, for, as Prof. Hins declared at Basle in 1869, they represented in the germ the organization of the new social system. "Bakunine glorifies," says Plechanoff, "the 'essentially economic' tactics of the old English trade unions, and has not the faintest idea that it was these very tactics that made the English workers the tail of the Liberal party."

The Revolutionary unionists today believe, as the anarchists always have believed, that the world is ready for a tremendous upheaval. The new order is waiting to be born, and the sole work to be done is to arouse in the people the will to start the revolution. How much like the views of the syndicalists, as given in an earlier paper, are the following declarations of Bakunine and Kropotkin! "The revolution, as we understand it," said Bakunine, "must on its very first day completely and fundamentally destroy the state and all state institutions." The workers must then proceed to the "confiscation of all productive capital and instruments of labor in favor of association of laborers, which will use them for collective production."

"The first act of the social revolution," says Kropotkin, "will be a work of destruction. * * * The government will be overthrown first." And following that "the people will also, without waiting for any directions from above, abolish private property by forcible expropriation. * * * 'The reorganization of production will not be possible in a few days,' especially as the revolution will presumably not break out in all Europe at a time. The people will, consequently, have to take temporary measures to assure themselves, first of all, of food, clothing, and shelter. First, the populace of the insurgent cities will take possession of the dealers' stocks of food and of the grain warehouses and the slaughter houses. Volunteers make an inventory of the provisions found and distribute printed tabular statements by the millions. Henceforth, free taking of all that is present in abundance; rations of what has to be measured out, with preference to the sick and the weak; a supply for deficiencies by importation from the country (which will come in plenty if we produce things that the farmer needs and put them at his disposal), and also by the inhabitants of the city entering upon the cultivation of the royal parks and meadows in the vicinity. The people will take possession of the dwelling houses in like manner. Again volunteers make lists of the available dwellings and distribute them. People come together by streets, quarters, districts, and agree about the allotment of the dwellings. But the evils that will at first still have to be borne are soon to be done away; the artisans of the building trades need only work a few hours a day, and soon the over-spacious dwellings that were on hand will be sensibly altered and model houses, entirely new, will be built. The same procedure will be followed with regard to clothing. The people take possession of the great clothiers' establishments and volunteers list the stocks. People take freely what is on hand in abundance, in rations what is limited in quantity. What is lacking is supplied in the shortest of time by the factories with their perfected machines."

I quote the above statements of the two chief anarchists to illustrate the similarity between their views and those advocated by the syndicalists. The latter are extremely vague regarding the actual procedure of the general strike. Some of them believe that the general strike may be solely a peaceable abstention from work. Most of them have, however, been forced in discussion to agree that a peaceable general strike would surely meet with defeat. As Buisson says: "If the general strike remains the revolution of folded arms, if it does not degenerate into a violent insurrection, one cannot see how a strike of fifteen, thirty, or even sixty days could bring into the industrial form of government and into the present social system changes great enough to determine their fall." To be sure, the revolutionary unionists do not lay so much emphasis on the abolition of government as do the anarchists, but their plan leads to nothing less than that. If the capitalist class is to be locked out—whatever that may mean—one must conclude that the workers intend in some manner without the use of public powers to gain control of the tools of production. In any case, they will be forced, in order to achieve any possible success, to take the factories, the mines, and the mills, and to put the work of productios into the hands of the masses. If the state interferes, as it undoubtedly will, in the most vigorous manner, the strikers will be forced to fight the state. In other words, we shall see the general strike become an insurrection and the people without arms carrying on a civil war against the armies of the government. We might, of course, pass over with light hearts much of the above interesting and harmless speculation were it not for the violent and bitter attacks made by both anarchists and syndicalists upon any form of political party action. We can afford to be tolerant toward any positive proposition, and even adverse criticism, except when they menace organization. When, however, a group of men conspire to create suspicion and to promote distrust of all Socialist party action, we are forced not only to defend ourselves, but even to put the proposals of our opponents under critical analysis. And the general strike of the syndicalists is only the insurrection of the anarchists in disguise.

Indeed, syndicalism, as a whole, has been defined as anarchism in disguise. Certainly the entire forces of anarchism have been turned to the service of the syndicalist movement. Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, and other anarchists in New York have recently formed a Syndicalist Educational League, and from now on, even in this country, every assault made by the anarchists upon the Socialist movement will be labeled "Syndicalism" or "Direct Action." The marriage of anarchism and syndicalism is, of course, a natural and legitimate union, and we must expect to see in the near future under its new guise an extensive growth in anarchist propaganda. So long as the anarchists were excluded from the unions and divorced from every section of the labor movement by the Marxian elements, they could only keep alive their doctrines by individual acts of violence. But in recent years the anarchists have not only gained a strong position in the labor movement of the Latin countries, they have also gained a hearing in other countries through policies which, however old in their philosophy, bear new and striking labels.

And it is perhaps inevitable that the views of the anarchists should gain a larger and larger following. Political action is slow, and many of the younger, the mort petulant and impulsive, are impatient. Furthermore, the Socialist movement has become so extensive that while it is fundamentally more revolutionary, it no longer appears revolutionary. Its tone is quieter, its reasoning is saner, and its members include a multitude who are no less determined because they are less given to fanaticism. Great halls, theaters and lyceums are now common meeting places of the party, and such assemblies have not the irresponsible recklessness of the old talking revolutionists assembled in the back room about the stove. The discussions are kept to well defined points and lead to definite, concrete forms of action, instead of ranging over the entire gamut of human problems and leading to no action whatever. In the little circles of revolutionaries in the early days there was room for every point of view. Freedom of thought was unlimited, the play of wits had no end. Every theory of economics, sociology, ethics, religion and politics were handled without gloves. It was a never-ending day of never-ending talk. But the seeds those little circles of sectarians distributed throughout the world are today bearing fruit. Men are settling down to the cold proposition of massing their armies and winning their battles. And philosophies and tactics which consist of endless oppositions and the denunciation of every action of the organized bodies are passed over and ignored. To be sure, celebrated little circles of brilliant men and women, of artists and philosophers, will still hug to their hearts the memory of what they consider the glorious, imperishable act of the assassin or the marvel of a few hungry rioters facing the violence of the world with flaming rage and hatred, but the labor movement, imperfect as it is, plods along its way educating and organizing the millions into the most irresistible power the world has ever known.

The General Strike

VIII. DIRECT ACTION VERSUS POLITICAL ACTION.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

AMONG THE VISIONARIES there has occurred in recent years a great battle of wits and tongues as to the relative value of direct and political action. The really active and influential men in the Socialist and Labor movements have had little time to spend in these futile discussions. They have been too much absorbed in building up great organizations of the working class, both trade union and political. They have been organizing and recruiting the armies of labor to strike and to vote, and they have left it largely to those in the arm-chairs to debate whether the strike or the ballot is most capable of revolutionary ends. Indeed, the more remote one is from the actual movement of the working class and the more free one is from its actual responsibilities, the more these discussions assume an importance.

> "* * * The Socialist ballot," says De Leon, "is weaker than a woman's tears,
> Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance,
> Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
> And skilless as unpracticed infancy,

unless it is backed by the might to enforce it That requisite might is summed up in the industrial organization of the workng class." In another place De Leon says: "A political organization cannot perform a revolutionary act. * * * The error has gone abroad that a political party can take and hold (the factories, etc.). It is an error, because you cannot legislate a revolution. A political party cannot do it. The nature of its organization prevents it."

In the above few words the entire contention between direct and political action is set forth. I believe it is true that Haywood, Bohn, Kerr and nearly all the other direct actionists in this country have little love for De Leon. Yet he is the fountain head of all their philosophy. He is not, to be sure, so unwise as to put direct action against political action, as they so often do. His thinking is too skillful, and two ideas can in his mind dwell harmoniously together. Nevertheless, although De Leon does not recognize any antagonism between direct and political action, he, with the others who follow him without loving him, have in recent years proclaimed the doctrine that only the industrial movement of the working class is capable of revolutionary action. Political action is merely to vote. The political party is only a propaganda club that urges men to express certain opinions at the polls. The ballot is merely a declaration of feeling. The might and the force of the working class can only be expressed in the revolutionary general strike, or, as De Leon says, "in the general lockout of the capitalist class."

Now, the thing that strikes one most in all such talk is that these men have the same limited conception of political action as the anarchists. To vote is their definition of political action. They call it "to stick wads of paper in a box." And that certainly seems very tame indeed compared with riots and with massacre. Having accepted the anarchist's definition of political action, De Leon and his pupils arrive, as a consequence, at practically the same conclusions as the anarchists.

Now to this limited and faulty conception of political action let us oppose the view of Jules Guesde. Guesde is one of the veterans of the French movement who has never known the ways of compromise. His fierce, unbending logic, his passionate and unadulterated Marxian philosophy, has made him perhaps the most striking personality in modern Socialism. He has known in life but two enemies, the capitalist and the anarchist. He has been as pitiless in his warfare on the one as on the other, and all the new phrases of the direct actionists he meets with the flattest contradiction. "Political action is," he declared at a great French Socialist congress, "necessarily revolutionary. It does not address itself to the employer, but to the state, while industrial action addresses itself to the industrial employer or to associations of employers. Industrial action does not attack the employer as an institution, because the employer is the effect, the result of capitalist property. As soon as capitalist property shall have disappeared, the employer will disappear, and not before It is in the Socialist party—because it is a political party—that one fights against the employer class, and that is why the Socialist party is truly an economic party, tending to transform social political economy.

"At the present moment words have their importance. And I should like to urge the comrades strongly never to allow it to be believed that trade union action is economic action. No, this latter action is taken only by the political organization of the working class. It is the party of the working class which leads it—that is to say, the Socialist party—because property is a social institution which cannot be transformed except by the exploited class making use of political power for this purpose.

"I realize that the direct actionists attempt to identify political action with parliamentary action. No; electoral action as well as parliamentary action may be forms, pieces of political action. They are not political action as a whole, which is the effort to seize public powers—the government. Political action is the people of Paris taking possession of the Hotel de Ville in 1871. It is the Parisian workers marching upon the National Assembly in 1848. * * * To those who go about claiming that political action, as extolled by the party, reduces itself to the production of public officials, you will oppose a flat denial. Political action is moreover not the production of laws. It is the grasping by the working class of manufactory laws; it is the political expropriation of the employer class, which alone permits its economic expropriation.

"I wish that some one would explain to me how the breaking of street lights, the disemboweling of soldiers, the burning of factories can constitute a means of transforming the ownership of property. * * * Supposing that the strikers were the masters of the streets and should be able to take possession of the factories, would not the factories still remain private property? Instead of being the property of a few employers or stockholders, they would become the property of the 500 or the 5,000 workingmen who had taken them, and that is all. The owners of the property will have changed; the system of ownership will have remained the same.

"And ought we not to consider it necessary to say that to the workers over and over again? Ought we to allow them to take a path that leads nowhere? * * * No, the Socialists could not, without crime, lend themselves to such trickery. It is our imperative duty to bring back the workers to reality, to remind them always that one can only be revolutionary if one attacks the government and the state. Trade union action fights within the circle of capitalism without breaking through it, and that is necessarily reformist, in the good sense of the word. In order to ameliorate the conditions of the victims of capitalist society, it does not touch the system. All the revolutionary wrangling can avail nothing against this fact. Even when a strike is triumphant, the day after the strike the wage earners remain wage earners, and capitalist exploitation continues. It is a necessity, a fatality, which trade union action suffers. * * *"

Any word of mine would only serve to mar the perfection of this masterly logic of Guesde's. I know of nothing in Socialist literature which deserves so much the study and thought of our younger party members. I marvel that anyone has been able in so few words to sustain the party position against the onslaughts of those who clamor for direct action. This is no time to go into the history of the terrific battles that have occurred in the progress of our movement over this very question. Yet, the result of those battles is the pledge every man takes when she becomes a member of our party. We do not ask his views as to the theories of Socialism or as to the details of the cooperative commonwealth. We ask only that he believe in the organization of the working class into a distinct and separate party for the capture of public powers. That simple pledge contains the very essence of Marxian Socialism; and not only in this country, but in every other as well, the door of our party is closed to all who deny the necessity of political action.

Guesde says that Socialists could not without crime lend themselves to the trickery of allowing the workers to take the path that leads nowhere. Yet, we know that both in France and in America men professing to be Socialists are today committing that crime. Well, when a crime is committed we seek the motive, and in this instance the motive is easily found. As I have shown elsewhere, anarchists, "radical" politicians, and certain adventurers in France sought to split the working class of that country into two warring sections and to force the Socialists out of the leadership of the French unions. To accomplish this end, political action was denounced as bourgeois, while direct action was lauded as the sole revolutionary weapon of the working class. When one wants to do anything, one can always find a philosophy to back up one's desire. Direct action, therefore, quickly developed into a complete revolutionary philosophy.

In this country something of the same sort happened. When De Leon saw his party fading away he sought new fields to conquer, and in 1905 the Industrial Workers of the World appeared. In 1904 there was not a trace of direct actionism in De Leon's thought. His party at the Amsterdam congress voted against the general strike resolution submitted by Allemane. De Leon refers to that gentleman as a "flannel-mouthed blatherskite, whose leading principle is the cart-before-the-horse idea of a 'general strike.'" In a report which De Leon submitted to that congress, it is said that "it is only by the use of their political power that the working class can abolish capitalist class rule and privilege."

That was in 1904. In 1905 De Leon had developed his new theories of the "lockout of the capitalist class." The Socialist ballot became weaker than a woman's tears. Thoughts and speculations which he had not dreamed of two years before now possessed his mind. The same sophistries that had enabled the anarchists of France to disrupt the working class movement of that country served De Leon here in his effort to become the master mind of the Industrial Workers of the World.

"The immediate aim of the Communists," says Marx and Engels in their historic Manifesto, "is * * * the conquest of political power by the proletariat."

"The proletariat must," they repeat, "first of all acquire political supremacy."

"The first step in the revolution by the working class is," they declare again, "to raise the proletariat to the position of ruling class, to win the battle of democracy. The proletariat will use its political supremacy to wrest, by degrees, all capital from the bourgeoisie," etc.

These are the simple foundation principles of modern Socialism. For 50 years the workers have labored slowly and painfully to build up great political organizations of the working class. The road has been long, the journey has brought many bitter disappointments. Yet, today a light appears on the horizon. We are, in the opinion of many, entering upon a great revolutionary period. We are nearing the hour when the work of a half century is beginning to bear fruit. It needed no Marx to teach the workers to strike or to riot. It required a Mark to teach the revolutionary possibilities of political action. Tons upon tons of literature and multitudes of tireless agitators have been required to raise the working class from the blind folly of mob action and sabotage. And well may we ask ourselves whether theories and sophistries developed in France and in America in the maneuvers of certain leaders for mastership shall displace the tried and tested principles of Marxian Socialism!

Capitalism is a social, political and economic system. Its fortifications are manned by legislators, police, armies and courts. The ownership by the capitalist class of the means of information, of production, of transportation, of exchange, of public powers, of social wealth, of natural resources—all this and more constitutes the power of capitalism. Its right is founded in tradition, in legislation, and in moral sanction, no less than in actual material power. And he who thinks to capture this society by having the working class forcibly take possession of a mine, of a railroad, or of a factory, wherever it can, understands Socialism about as little as the bandit who believes that to hold up a millionaire and rob him of his purse is a work of democracy.

The "Bummery on the "Bum"

THE COOKS AND WAITERS' strike in New York collapsed very suddenly, and the poor dupes who were induced to declare a strike by professional vagrants have been using language that was far more forcible than elegant in denunciation of the wind-jammers who attempt to impress upon plastic minds that a world can be emancipated by a verbal blast from a soap-box.

The following in a press dispatch from New York shows that the traveling jawsmiths must seek another field besides New York to play their game, as the cooks and waiters who were duped by the snarling representatives of the "Bummery" have had some experience that, while bitter, will be wholesome and will have the effect of causing men and women to hesitate in responding to the call of irresponsible mavericks who are agitators for "revenue only." The dispatch is as follows:

"New York, Jan. 26.—The hotel waiters' strike slipped around on thin ice today and late in the afternoon collapsed. It was at this time that Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Patrick Quinlan and Carlos Tresca, the big three of the I. W. W., who have been conducting the affair, suddenly decided it would be best for the men to return to their various places.

"It was a surprise to the hundreds of waiters who have been having such riotous times about town, urged by the I. W. W. representatives, and after listening sullenly to the announcement made in Bryant hall that the executive committee intended to vote on the situation and the strikers were expected to abide by its decision. Many of thm slunk away and disappeared. Where they all dispersed to no one seemed to know, but they were not in evidence anywhere during the afternoon and night.

"Mis Flynn gave an unofficial statement to the newspaper men, which in effect was that the waiters had not been sufficiently organized to completely win, and that they should go back to work, become more thoroughly educated as to organization and a few other things, and then the I. W. W. would have another strike."

The executive committee, according to the above, appropriated to itself the authority to order the slaves back to work.

Where is the Democracy in such a so-called labor organization when an executive committee assumes the power to vote the slaves back to work?

But the vote of the executive committee did not secure employment for the duped who responded to their call for a strike. Later dispatches disclose that their places were filled and that proprietors of hotels, restaurants and cafés refused to reinstate their former employés, even when such employés tore up their I. W. W. cards and flung them into the street with contempt.

The "Wandering Willies," according to dispatches, have landed in Chicago, and at this writing are endeavoring to bring about a strike among the cooks and waiters of the "Windy City." Their gall is peerless.

Time for Action Is Nigh

PROFESSOR WILSON is talking considerably as to what he intends to do when he takes his seat in the White House. The professor is likewise writing articles for a number of the leading publications of the country, and the following gems extracted from the columns of the Scripps-McRae journals may have a soothing influence upon that element in the makeup of the human race, whose brains are always enjoying a vacation. Wilson's pearls are as follows:

"If the men you have put into office go back on you now, I, for one, hope they will be gibbeted for the rest of history."

"God helping us, this is the time when the Democratic party will see to it that the people of the United States are served as parties have all along professed to serve them."

"The very life of the Democratic party depends on its fulfilling its promises."

"The people of this country wish, first, to clear their government for action by making it free and then they wish to use it, not to serve any class or party, but to serve civilization and the human race."

"If the economic control of the United States is now in the hands of a small body of men it is not due to any policy that the Democratic party has advocated, or promoted or consented to."

"The Democratic party did not wait until the year 1912 to discover that the plain people had nothing to say about their own government."

"It counts for something to stay out in the cold on a conviction."

"Through all its years of self-chosen exile the Democratic party has been purged and purified."

"The service of humanity is the business of mankind."

There are nine paragraphs in the above, compiled by the statesman of New Jersey, who, in less than a month, will stand at the helm of the national ship to guide it for the next four years.

If the thoughtful man or woman can draw any consolation from Wilson's paragraphs, such man or woman must be equipped with an imagination that can revel in the realms of optimism.

Wilson has but little time longer to write and preach. The time for action is almost here, and the man who won political honors from his party at Baltimore and received the greatest number of electoral votes of any candidate for the presidency in the history of the nation, must "deliver the goods."

The Democratic party is about to be placed on trial before the people of a nation, and the people want something more than platitudes. The Princeton Professor will have the opportunity to show to the people the mettle out of which he is made, and it will require more than verbal embellishments in an article and more than clever gymnastics in oratory to ameliorate the condition of the wronged and oppressed.

Wilson declares: "The very life of the Democratic party depends on its fulfilling its promises," and he has certainly stated a fact which no intelligent man will dispute.

The great mass of the people are awaiting anxiously for the coming Democratic administration and are hoping that ere another year shall have passed away that light can be seen behind the storm-clouds that now presage adversity.

Revealing Some Facts

THE DAILY JOURNALS controlled by the Utah Copper Company have indulged in falsehoods from the very beginning of the strike at Bingham, Utah. Not only have these journals slandered the strikers and officials of the Western Federation of Miners, but they have published glaring lies relative to the production of the mines operated by scabs and strikebreakers. The following in the Salt Lake Telegram of January 25th, reveals some truth and shows that the Utah Copper Company and its stockholders will remember the momentous occasion, when its despotic representative refused to treat with organized labor:

"Reports from the eastern offices of the Utah Copper Company received this morning show that during December only 5,975,246 pounds of copper were produced from this Bingram property. This compares with 5,802,544 pounds in November and shows only a slight increase after operations had been resumed following the strike in September and part of October. The month previous to the strike Utah Copper made its record production, which was approximately 12,000,000 pounds.

"To some the production from this mammoth mine during the last month of the year will be disappointing. The company has had a number of things to contend with, besides the fact that new men were employed to take the place of the strikers, and most of these laborers were inexperienced. Weather conditions have been unfavorabl for a large production from the mine, for the severe cold and heavy snows have handicapped operations to a large extent. When winter sets in at Bingham it makes it difficult to mine a large tonnage from surface operations.

"Even the tonnage that was sent down from the mine could not be handled easily at the mills. The ores froze in the cars and this caused delays which resulted in a shortage of ore to be put through the mills. A considerable amount of difficulty was also experienced with frozen pipes and some delays were experienced in getting enough water to supply the tables.

"Utah Copper has had a number of hardships this month as a result of the continued cold and the heavy snows in the mountains. For this reason the management is not prepared to make any promises as to the tonnage that will be mined and milled. The mills have had the crushing department enlarged in order that more ore could be handled during the winter weather, and a larger tonnage will be crushed and the bin capacity increased during the seasons when a larger tonnage can be brought down. A large tonnage of ore will be made ready for the mills, so that operations can be kept up to capacity whenever there is a delay in mine deliveries."

We clip the following from another Salt Lake publication to corroborate the forced admission in the Telegram:

"The December operations of the Utah Copper Company netted a total of 5,975,246 pounds of copper, against 5,802,544 pounds in November, and a total of 2,128,792 pounds in October of 1912. These figures illustrate the loss sustained through the strike at Bingham, a loss that reduced the production of this and all Bingham companies in 1912 as compared with 1911. The 1912 copper production of the Utah Copper Company totaled 95,105,391 pounds, against 99,456,225 pounds in 1911 and 89,127,250 pounds in 1910. The increase in December over November is gratifying as it shows the company is recovering from the effects of the labor trouble, while laboring at the same time under the usual difficulties incident to that winter period.

"The following are the monthly production figures of the company for the year:

The above clippings refute the statements of the professional prevaricators who have heralded their lies broadcast, relative to the production at the mines, in the hope that the strikers would become discouraged and return to work. The Utah Copper Company has suffered a loss that will be felt by its stockholders for years to come and, furthermore, the time is not far distant when the industrial czars of Utah will be willing to hold a conference with the representatives of organized labor.

Unionism is here and will live until the cause that gave birth to the labor organization is removed.

How Do You Like Him?

IN THIS ISSUE of the Miners' Magazine appears a length article taken from the United Mine Workers' Journal and written by Adolph Germer, of Belleville, Illinois.

Mr. Germer for a number of years has been one of the most prominent and active men in the coal miners' organization. He has held a number of positions of trust, and at the last annual convention of the United Mine Workers he was elected as a fraternal delegate to attend the International Miners' Congress at Amsterdam, Holland.

Germer is likewise a prominent Socialist and is now a member of the national committee.

His article, therefore, will have some weight, as it comes from a man who can ill afford to make statements that are not borne out by the facts.

Germer, in his communication, mentions specific instances where "Bill" Haywood has received money and failed to forward the money that was raised for the defense of a man whose life was in jeopardy.

The man who was commissioned by a labor organization to go before other labor bodies to plead for funds to defend a man who was the victim of the same conspiracy as himself, and who became so shameless and bereft of honor as to put such funds in his own pocket, challenges the English language for a word or phrase to paint his perfidy. That Haywood is guilty, is beyond every question of a doubt.

The charges made by Germer against Haywood are only trivial and minor offenses compared with other acts of the "Bull Moose" of the I. W. W., whose palms have itched for "filthy lucre" for several years.

The editor of the Miners' Magazine is cognizant of his dishonor, and we have refrained from giving publicity to his acts of dishonesty in the hope that this peerless ingrate and grabber of coin would pull himself together and make an effort to be a man.

We believe, however, that the time has come when no mantle of charity should be thrown over the acts of "Bill" Haywood, but that the working class should know that those who know him best would not trust him, nor have they faith in his loyalty to labor.

The man who would pocket funds that were given to him to defend the life of a man whom a Mine Owners' Association had decreed should die upon a scaffold, is not made of that material that is true to the working class or loyal to the principles of unionism. His dishonor brands him as a traitor to a member of his own class, in a prison cell, awaiting trial on one of the gravest charges that can be brought against a human being.

Since Haywood committed treason to a man in prison, charged by conspirators with the crime of murder, it becomes conclusive that Haywood can scarcely be classed as loyal to workingmen out of prison.

As the I. W. W. is proud of "Big Bill" and lauds him as a hero, their publications can reproduce the Germer article in order that laboring men may not be in ignorance of Haywood's many accomplishments.

Denver Has Another Moral Spasm

THE RIGHTEOUS and moral people of Denver have had another spasm, and ladies who "toil not neither do they spin" have decreed that the "redlight" district of the "Queen City" must be abolished. It may be that the "bad lands" of Denver may be wiped out, but that does not mean that prostitution will be abolished.

The following in the columns of a daily journal of Denver shows that the ladies of the Woman's Club are indignant and that they propose to give battle to white slavery and all its attendant evils:

"Indorsing the crusade of Sheriff Sullivan and District Attorney Rush to wipe out the redlight district of Denver, members of the Woman's Club, at their regular meeting yesterday, determined to take an active part in the fight against the social evil by undertaking rescue work and by finding homes for girls who have taken their first misstep.

"Their decision followed a speech in which the evil conditions of white slavery were reviewed and the women were told that they would be 'unworthy of their womanhood' unless they backed every effort to abolish the redlight district.

"'It is womanhood that is being degraded, and as women you must fight this evil of white slavery,' said one speaker. 'The woman who scorns her fallen sister is no better than the sinner. The old feeling that the girl who has gone wrong once can never again hold up her head is all wrong. You must support the institutions where these girls are taught that they may start life over again. You must support the fight to abolish the redlight district.'

"'We must do more than that,' declared Mrs. Ray S. David. 'We must open our homes to these girls who have fallen or how else can we expect them to live aright? Unless we take care of them they will have no place to go.'

"Mrs. Fannie M. D. Galloway, chairman of the social science department, told of the instance of a young girl who had been rescued and placed in a good home.

"'It is the finest thing this department has ever done, and I hope in the future we will be able to help many more girls,' said Mrs. Galloway. 'Another thing which every one of us can do as individuals is to see that our maids are allowed the privilege of having some place in the house where they can receive men callers without being forced to meet them on the streets.'"

For years and years the people have read about the uprisings in our large cities against the social evil, but it seems that these uprisings are as futile in halting the progress of the moral pestilence as a gentle zephyr would be in removing a towering mountain.

The professional slummers and society women who, for a fad, make their usual ineffectual assaults upon the moral leprosy that threatens the purity and sanctity of homes, seem to have no conception of the cause that plants a "redlight" district in every city of importance and magnitude in this country.

Prostitution is the product of wrong economic conditions, and while "redlight" districts may be apparently wiped out, yet prostitution will remain and assume more dangerous proportions until the cause from which prostitution is bred is removed. The members of the Woman's Club gave their indorsement to the crusade of the sheriff and the district attorney, who, in accordance with the law, placed sixty inmates of dens of shame behind the bars of a county jail.

Will the indorsement of such a course on the part of the legal authorities by the Woman's Club be received favorably by the social outcasts whose only home is in the "bad lands" or within the confines of a prison?

The sheriff and the district attorney are not to be censured, for they are both rendering obedience to their oath of office; but for ladies of a fashionable club, the upper crust of society, to indorse a raid on a "redlight" district that puts the "soiled dove" in a jail, will not appeal to the sympathy or intelligence of men and women who have brains to think and hearts that feel for the unfortunate victims that have fallen in the brutal struggle against poverty.

These members of the Woman's Club are going to fight white slavery.

How?

Is the social evil being successfully fought by indorsing a crusade that puts the victims in jail?

Will the blush of virtue return to the cheek of the social outcast through being held behind the walls of a prison?

Will the imprisoned and unfortunate women turn to that type of womanhood that sanctions a crusade that flings the Mary Magdalene into a cage of steel?

The members of the Woman's Club are insane if they believe that such methods will elevate the moral standard of a city.

How did these women who have been thrust into jail become the victims of ostracism against whom the portals of respectability are closed and to whom the doors of a jail are open? They were once virtuous. They were once as pure as even the members of the Woman's Club.

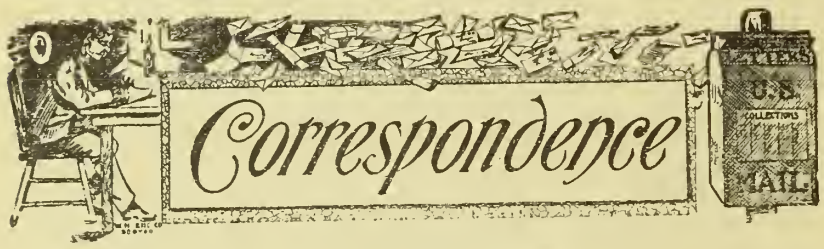
What snatched them from the pedestal of womanhood and painted the scarlet letters of shame upon their brows?

Statistics show that poverty has filled the "redlight" districts and that poverty is the product of a profit system that is upheld and supported by the very same members of the Woman's Club who are crying out against a "redlight" district and throwing up their hands in holy horror against white slavery.

Let us suppose that the "redlight" district was abolished tomorrow, and that every woman who has fallen was removed from the city of Denver, how long would it be until their places would be filled by others, whose wages in department stores, laundries, factories and sweat-shops bid for dishonor?

The "redlight" district and prostitution will only disappear when woman, as well as man, shall no longer groan in the chains of economic slavery, or in other words, when Capitalism, the producer of prostitution, has been swept from the earth.

Under Capitalism, profit is more priceless than virtue, and until womanhood has a higher value than dividends, the social evil will remain as an indictment against the economic wrongs of a rotten cilivization.



INFORMATION WANTED.

Sutter Creek, Calif., Jan. 30, 1913.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Brother Ed. Zuchella, kindly notify the Secretary of Amador County Miners' Union No. 135, at Sutter Creek, California. Brother Zuchella is wanted on very important business.

JAMES GIAMBRUNO, Secretary.

RESOLUTION FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

San Francisco, January 18th, 1913.

To the various national and international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor:

The following Resolutions were unanimously adopted by the San Francisco Labor Council at its regular meeting Friday evening, January 3rd, 1913

Kindly give this matter your immediate attention.

Fraternally yours, JOHN I. NOLAN

Secretary, S. F. Labor Council.

Whereas, The jury in the famous Indianapolis dynamite conspiracy trial found thirty-eight of the forty defendants "guilty as charged" in the blanket indictment.

Resolved, That we set forth to the world the following declaration ,which we believe to be true and timely:

First, It will be conceded by all fair-minded people who have given any attention to public affairs in the recent six or seven years, that the United States Steel Corporation, commonly known as the Steel Trust, is by far the most absorbing and powerful financial and political trust.

Second, There can be no doubt that this corporation was the power behind the prosecution.

The following is a statement of facts as published in La Follette's weekly magazine of December 13, 1912, written by Louis Brandeis:

"On June 17, 1901, six weeks after the Steel Trust began its operations, the following resolution was passed by its board of directors in the offices of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Company:

" 'That we are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor, and advise subsidiary companies to take firm position when these questions come up and say that they are not going to recognize it.' "

This anti-labor policy of the Steel Trust has been prosecuted for the past eight years, with the result that every labor union wthin its industry has been destroyed, with the single exception of the Bridge and Structural Ironworkers' International Union. Brandeis' article deals extensively with the report of the Steel Committee, of which Congressman Stanly of Kentucky and Daniel J. McGillicuddy of Maine, were active members. This report shows that it would require a sum not less than seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars per year to maintain a family of wife and two children. It likewise points out that if the employés in the steel industry at the present wage worked twelve hours a day three hundred and sixty-five days a year, they would fall short one dollar and fifty cents of earning the minimum amount necessary to sustain a wife and three children .

The report shows two hundred and sixty thousand men employed in the steel industry, and the average annual income of all males over eighteen was three hundred and forty-six dollars, and the average annual income of male heads of families among the iron and steel workers was only four hundred and nine dollars.

In no other trades investigated was it so low, with the single exception of the woolen industry.

Mr. G. W. Perkins testified before the committee on steel and said that they had a profit-sharing plan in vogue, which distributed twelve million dollars to its employés annually. The committee shows that this was distributed only among superintendents, foremen and others in authority.

A man by the name of John Fitch testified before the committee, to wit:

"That fact is the steel workers do not dare openly express their convictions. They do not dare assemble and talk over affairs pertaining to their welfare as mill hands. They feel that they are living always in the presence of a hostile critic. They are a generous, open-hearted set of men upon the whole. The skilled men are intelligent, and are able and glad to talk upon a variety of subjects. But let the conversation be shifted to the steel works and they immediately become reticent. It is safe to talk to a stranger about local option, the price of groceries, or the prospect of a war with Japan, but it is not regarded as safe to talk about conditions in the steel industry."

Again he says:

"One man of long experience as a steel worker who gave me a better insight into mill conditions than any other person, remarked, I used to write for labor papers a great deal, and sometimes I fairly burn to do it now—to declare before the world, over my own signature, the fact about working conditions in the steel industry. But I can't. It wouldn't be safe."

In a statement made by Brandeis before the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor, he says:

"Did you ever stop to realize that Judge Gary, George W. Perkins. J. Pierpont Morgan and a few other men high in the United States Steel Corporation wield power greater than that of kings? The Steel Trust is capitalized at one billion six hundred million dollars but its directors are directors in fifty-nine of the greatest banks in the country. They control forty great manufacturing establishments. They hold the reins of power over more than half the railroads of the country, and they are the controlling power in hundreds of traction, water, gas, telephone and electric companies. The total amount of wealth they control is very nearly twenty billion dollars."

This corporation has made the extermination of organized labor from their factories the very foundation stone of their labor policy.

On August 9, 1912, the Hon. Daniel J. McGillicuddy of Maine addressed the House of Representatives, speaking on the steel investigation, and on page 9 of his address we find a question asked by Mr. Buchanan:

Does not the gentleman know since that time by despicable methods they have practically destroyed every labor union working for them in the United States?"

Mr. McGillicuddy replied: "I know that. Of course I know that. Any man who has any sympathy for the laboring man in this country knows it, and with good reason, and we know the result of it, and if I were a laboring man I would do just as the laboring man did there. I would rather give up my life than give up the right and privilege to organize. When the working men give up that right, they will become little more than slaves so long as this trust organization continues."

With this power against the indicted men at Indianapolis, the result obtained is little to be wondered at.

One of the witnesses who testified for the prosecution said that he was an expert accountant and had been employed to go over the document that were stolen out of the Iron Workers' office. He admitted on cross-examination that seven months out of eight he was under salary to the National Erectors' Association.

Mr. Drew, chief counsel for the Erectors' Association. was a very conspicuous ffigure, not only before the grand jury that brought the indictment. but also in the court room and during the trial, and immediately after the conviction of these men, he issued a public statement to the American Federation of Labor and asked the question: "What are you going to do with the Iron Workers' Union now?" Thereby disclosing clearly the real underlying purpose of the Erectors' Association and the Steel Trust.

Judge Anderson who presided at the trial and once referred to by ex-President Theodore Roosevelt as being either a knave of a fool, was guilty of conduct which by no means precluded a reasonable charge that he was biased and decidedly unfair to the defense and their counsel.

First. One of the defendants' counsel, Mr. Krum of St. Louis, in rising to offer an objection in the interest of his client, was peremptorily ordered to sit down, and was told that he was only there by courtesy.

Second. When defendant M. J. Young of Boston was on the witness stand, the judge deliberately interrupted him in the middle of his testimony and said this in the presence of the jury: "If you don't tell the truth, how do you expect any one to believe you?"

Third. Brother O. A. Tveitmoe was ordered in the presence of the jury removed from the counsel's table, and denied the right to consult with his attorney in court, upon the flimsy charge that he had smiled, which was construed by the judge as a demonstration.

Many witnesses who were subpoenaed were never placed on the stand. The prosecution bulldozed many of the witness behind closed doors during the night. The conduct of the District Attorney and his associates, together with the detectives for the Steel Trust, towards the witnesses is almost indescribable. Unless a witness would testify the way they desired, he or she was threatened with jail sentence.

The action of the jury in finding all of the thirty-eight defendants equally guilty on every count shows that they were strongly influenced by the conduct of Judge Anderson during the trial. This is proven by the subsequent action of Judge Anderson in suspending sentence on five of the defendants and by his action in sentencing the defendants to terms ranging from one to seven years. The jury must have been prejudiced and did not give each defendant's case the consideration the law demands, otherwise there would have been separate verdicts in the cases of many of these defendants.

Resolved, That the Building Trades Councel in regular session assembled jointly with the Labor Council of San Francisco, declare it our most emphatic opinion that O. A. Tveitmoe and his colleagues were the victims of the avarice of the Steel Trust, and did not receive a fair trial; be it further

Resolved, That we request every local union affiliated in this city and State to immediately request their national organization to assist financially, to the end that proper presentation may be made to the Appellate Court for a new trial; be it further

Resolved, That in reply to the question asked by Mr. Drew: "What are you going to do with the Iron Workers' Union now?" and as a protest against the criminal and dominant power of the United States Steel Trust, we favor the sentiment now strongly maintaining throughout the country for the declaration of a general strike throughout the length and breadth of this nation; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this statement and resolutions be forwarded to international unions for indorsement and approval, and a copy be sent to the press. (seal).

THE STRIKE AT MINEVILLE, NEW YORK—AN ANSWER TO THE CIRCULAR ISSUED BY THE MINING COMPANY.

Beginning with the third paragraph on the third page of the circular, we have numbered the paragraphs from one to twenty-one, and herewith give reply to them.

First—Good faith of the company, shown by the fact that the janitor of the Memorial Hall has been discharged for his activity in unions affairs and the Woodmen have been refused the use of the hall for a ball they had advertised extensively for the evening of January 24, 1913.

Second—A new school building has been erected, but the company was not actuated solely by philanthropic sentiments, for it took the old school building and the site for purposes for which the location of the new building were not just suitable, and with that, some there are who claim that the school in question was built at the expense of the taxpayers of Essex county.

Third—As an instance of the working of this benevolent policy, which seems to be more of an advertising work than an act of compensation, one Mike Ruszewicz had his ear drums injured by being close to where some men drilled into a missed hole in the mines in November; others were injured by flying missiles when the explosion occursed, but Ruszewicz, while not hit by flying rock, was badly hurt by the concussion. Over eleven weeks have elapsed since the accident. Mike has received between $9 and $10, and notwithstanding the fact that he is physically unfit and deaf, the company officials are trying to compel him to work underground, which he has tried to do, but has had to quit. He has asked for surface work, but he has been refused, the bosses insisting that he work underground, despite the fact that his deafness, caused by the accident and his physical condition from the same cause rendered him unfit for work in the mines. The final touch of benevolence in this case is the company's attempt to induce him to leave the district, whereupon, it is possible that the gullible public could be induced to believe that the "compensation" of which this company boasts, was working in good order.

Fourth—Some of the houses are of concrete; most of them are frame buildings. The sanitary condition of which the company boasts, consists, in some cases of water in the cellars, and the hard wood floors of which they sing the praises is a promiscuous lot of different woods from their own mills, all of which may be hard, but the floors do not wear uniformly, nor they do not resist usage in the same consistency. How much consideration is given to make these houses is comfortable is evidenced by the fact that the joints on these floors are made where the board chances to end and not on the beams or joists as one would suppose. This results in a short time of a place which "springs" and through which the cold blasts of winter find a perpetual entrance, keeping the limbs of the occupants in a continual state of uncomfortable cold. The "hardwood floors" are a matter of expediency, not of selection.

Fifth—If the working conditions and the pay of the men were satisfactory, the people would keep their homes clean and eat good food without the dispensation of the district nurse.

Sixth—Very little is known of this pension fund in Mineville.

Seventh to Eleventh—Elsewhere the spokesmen for the company object to the coming of people from the outside to assist its men in formulating their demands and conferring with them on means by which their life and labor can be made easier and life made happier, this list of questions show us why.

Three men, Waldron, Wykes and Hughes, were taken from their work in the mines and brought before the officials of the company—men with a college education—and a list of questions, most of which are hypothetical, were put to them, and they were instructed to answer "yes" or "no." The modifications which they made were not accepted. Wykes is made to say that he got better treatment from this company than he ever did from any other. The fact is that he never worked for any other company. Waldron's experience is just as limited. If there is any credit in gaining admissions from these men in this manner we fail to see where it lays.

Twelfth—Before the increase in wages, the men were furnished with lamps and oil for underground work; since then carbide lamps have been provided, and the employés have been compelled to pay from 50 cents to $1.50 for them. This takes quite a little of the increase.

All men working for the company were promised 10 or 15 cents of an increase, to take effect January 1st, but many of them on receiving their checks on January 21st discovered that they had suffered a reduction of 15 cents, no notice of which they received until the deficiency in their pay envelopes informed them of it. In this "best-paid mining camp of the East" engineers get as much as 29 cents for three hours overtime. And they are expected to do these three hours daily for this pittance.

Fourteenth—The rents are not from $3.50 to $7, but are from $3.50 to $12 per month.

Fifteenth—The companies never did any repair work, nor spent anything for maintenance before 1912, until the State Labor Department recommended that something be done with the houses, so all the upkeep of many years came in 1912, making it appear that excessive amounts are spent to provide for the comfort of the tenants. Any repairing which was done before this time was paid for to the grafting company officials by the tenants at an exorbitant rate.

Sixteenth—See answer to paragraph three.

Seventeenth—Will the officials of the Witherbee, Sherman and Company dare to say as much for the Port Henry Iron Ore Company, one-fifth of which it is said to own and with which it is associated?

Eighteenth—It has frequently occurred that bodies of men killed in the morning at these works have been buried on the same afternoon, and in cases of men not belonging to the union, no notice given of the interment. No inquests are held over "troublesome corpses" in Mineville.

Nineteenth—Coffey, the carpenter foreman, who was charged with soliciting graft and of whom it has been sworn in an affidavit that he discharged a man because he would not pay the graft, is still working at the old job and very active in victimizing union men.

Twentieth—The workers are not so much interested in "welfare work;" it is well-paid work for which they are contending?

Twenty-first—Waldron and Wykes, who did so much to expose the "welfare" graft of the company's officials and peace officers, are publicly discharged by a widely-circulated letter; the grafters with the services of whom the companies dispensed, "resigned." Waldron and Wykes are ordered from theis homes; the retired grafters still occupy company houses unmolested and are treated as honorable members of society.

Nine men were killed in these mines in 1912, and two have been killed here this month. Welfare work does not help these victims in any way.

Mineville, New York, January 23, 1913.

Affidavits.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
County of Essex, } ss.

Jacob Tazelaar, being duly sworn, says that he is the representative of the American Federation of Labor, with headquarters in New York city. That his attention was called to a situation in Mineville, New York, at which place is located the Witherbee-Sherman Company, which is engaged in mining iron and steel ore, operating several shafts in that town and employing several hundred men. That information was brought to deponent that these men were working under what is commonly known as the padrone system, which requires the workmen to pay out of their earnings certain amounts of money to superintendents, foremen, bosses, overseers or others working in connection with them, and that unless such sums are paid they fear the loss of their jobs. That in consequence thereof they did pay this money in one form or another amounting to several thousand dollars, covering a certain period of time.

Deponent further states that he made a most thorough and systematic investigation of these charges and found them to be true in every respect. That he proceeded to New York City and met the directors of the Witherbee, Sherman and Company at the office of the company No. 2, Rector street, on Tuesday, August 15, 1911, and there laid before the aforesaid board of directors the entire subject matter, and the said board of directors agreed to give every possible assistance in stopping the conditions complained of, if the same could be sustained by proper testimony.

Deponent further deposes and says that he thereupon proceeded to Mineville, New York, and held several meetings with the men from whom this money was received by the company's superintendents, foremen, bosses and others; that he was assisted by interpreters speaking several languages; that seventy-seven (77) men employed by the Witherbee- Sherman and Company (including one who was discharged because he refused to pay graft), appeared personally before a notary public and a witness and made affidavit to having paid the amounts of money set forth in each affidavit, which aggregate a sum of in excess of nineteen hundred dollars ($1,900).

Deponent further deposes and says that these seventy-seven (77) affidavits, copies of which are hereto attached and marked "Exhibit 1," were personally delivered by him to the officials of the company at its office in Port Henry, New York, and that a record of the names of each workman making affidavit as to the amount of money he paid and the name of the party receiving same and marked "Exhibit 2," are attached hereto for further reference.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

It is believed that Victor Berger's resolution calling for a congressional investigation of conditions in the garment industry of New York will receive a hearing in Congress, even though the resolution is not passed. The resolution was promptly referred to the committee on rules, but inasmuch as this committee will have to hear evidence sustaining Berger's contention that garments made in sweat shops are apt to spread disease throughout the country, it is likely that Berger will be asked to call witnesses from New York, which will give the strike an airing in Washington.

The following is the text of the Berger resolution:

Whereas, The New York clothing industry, which through the channels of interstate commerce, supplies the trade of a large section of the United States, is now suffering from a strike which directly involves about 100.000 workers and their families; and,

Whereas, It is generally charged in the public press and in mass meetings that the average wages paid to the garment workers in New York are so low that healthy surroundings and a decent standard of living have become almost impossible for them; and,

Whereas, It is further charged that vice and crime are bred of the needless misery coincident to the manufacture of the nation's clothing, and further that said manufacture is carricd on in filthy and unsanitary places saturated with germs of consumption, smallpox, scarlet fever and other contagious diseases.

Whereas, Garments made under such conditions when sold through interstate traffic to the people of the United States undeniably become a serious menace and danger to the welfare and health of all; therefore, be it

Resolved, That a committee of seven (7) members be appointed to inquire into the general conditions of the clothing and garment industry in New York and to investigate the facts relating to this strike, said committee to report its findings as soon as practicable to this house.

In commenting upon the resolution. Representative Berger said:

"I want to show the close connection which the intolerable economic condition of the garment workers bears to crime and vice on the one hand, and further that these economic conditions and injustices revenge themselves on the people in general who permit them to exist.

"In other words, the miserable and inadequate wages bring forth bad housing, consumption and contagious diseases for the workers. They in turn communicate these diseases to the clothing and other goods produced, which clothes are bought by the people of the United States, who are thereby punished for permitting these conditions to exist.

"Moreover, it does become the unquestioned duty of Congress to interfere and to protect the people just as much on this point as against the invasion of cholera, or trachoma, or any other infection.

"Not only that, but Congress has the right to interfere because the New York clothing industry is supplying the markets of a large part of the United States with goods through the channel of interstate commerce. And the absolute right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce has been upheld in the case of pure-food legislation and in other instances. There can be no question of the right of Congress to interfere.

"I expect to get a hearing on this resolution, although the Democratic party is very zealous in protecting state rights, which have become a bulwark of reaction in our country; and although there is a tendency not to do anything in this short session of Congress other than to pass the appropriation bills."

When the bill restricting immigration was called up for passage last week, Representative Victor L. Berger voted "no." He was the only one of the trade unionists in Congress to vote against the measure, which was backed by the A. F. of L., and which passed.

In explaining his vote, Berger said: "I do not think the time has yet arrived when we must limit immigration, although I can appreciate why the trade unions feel the effect of the continual stream of cheap labor from the eastern and southeastern part of Europe, which is having a depressing influence on wages, even though only a temporary one. But even if it is only temporary—and the working class is always able to rally with the aid of unionism—I will admit as a Socialist and as a trade union man that on the whole the standard of living in our country during the last forty years has been on the downward, and not on an upward grade, when compared with the tremendous resources of the country.

"Yet, in spite of all this, I voted against the bill simply for Socialist and humanitarian reasons, because I believe we should not stand in the way of any white people trying to improve their condition by coming to this country, even if the American working class does have to suffer thereby to some extent. Undoubtedly the Russians, Slavonians, Italians, Bulgarians, Armenians and other peoples who come to our shores improve their economic condition very materially, and as a Socialist I want to give them this chance."

Manufacturers who have employed high-priced lawyers to present their arguments for a continuation of the high tariff before the Underwood ways and means committee have in many cases been beautifully stung, according to information obtained at the committee room.

The efforts of the lawyers who have appeared so far before the committee have been lamentably futile. The manufacturers who have received the greatest consideration from the committee so far have been those who have appeared in person. The high-priced lawyers who have come have displayed almost complete ignorance of the vital facts in the industries they have represented, and the Democratic members of the committee have taken the keenest delight in exposing the ignorance of the lawyers in cross-examination. It is reported that Attorney Auerback of New York received $15,000 for representing the plate glass industry at the hearing. Auerbach spoke for ten minutes, or at the rate of $1,500 a minute. To make matters worse for the plate glass industry, Auerbach was completely confounded by the cross examination he received and as a result the industry will probably fare badly when the next tariff bill is written.

A number of lawyers who had persuaded New England manufacturers of small steel articles to retain them as counsel before the committee, contracted several bad cases of cold feet after witnessing the grilling to which the attorneys for the machine tool industry were subjected. The committee faith, since it was admitted to the committee that this industry is "dumping" a large percentage of its product on the European markets today. After this cross-examination the lawyers appearing for the New England manufacturers, but who had not yet testified, deposited their briefs with the clerk of the committee, seized their hats and silently stole away.

SHALL NEGROES BE BURNED AT THE STAKE?

By R. A. Dague.

The editor of the "Salina (Kansas) Daily Union, "in his paper of Jan. 6th, discussing the frequent burning of negroes at the stake in the South for assaulting white women, says that recently he talked with a distinguished ex-judge of the South who now stands at the head of the bar of his state, and who is wealthy and influential. This man defends the practice of lynching negro rapists and burning them to death. In his conversation he said:

"Nothing but burning at the stake has power to strike, terror to the weak "and lecherous black, and only by such swift and terrible punishment can the "white woman of the south be protected. Such crimes can only be stopped by "fire. Such burnings are not an evidence of barbarism, but in reality are a proof of a high state of civilization." Now I admit that the outrage of women is an atrocious crime. Society should afford females all the protection possible and by every means not themselves inhuman and criminal, but the lynching and burning to death of a human being is both inhuman and contrary to the laws of every civilized country. It is not only savage and revolting, but the evil effect on the hundreds who witness the barbarity, may be far greater than that of the act of one degenerate on an innocent fellow being. For two or three hundred years in America, negroes were bought and sold, and treated like animals who had not souls. Their females from tender girlhood to old age were continously outraged by white men, and the law gave the victim no redress. No negro was allowed to testify in a court against a white person, even though that negro was nineteen-twentieths white. Slave holders had no more regard for the chastity of their female slaves than they had for that of their cows. Young or old, married or unmarried. the female negro had to submit to the assaults of white men. Millions of mulattoes were born; they were the children of lustful, brutal, slave-owning man; they are degenerates. Thus was poured out on the South a flood of black perverts—the fruits of the white man's lust and brutality. It was not because of the intentional sin of the negro female that these degenerates were spewn upon the country, but it was the voluntary sin of the white man. Now, when one of those degenerate blacks assault a white woman, all this history is forgotton or ignored, and the poor victim of the lust and violence of the white libertine is run down by blood-hounds, is beaten, lacerated, bound to a stake and burned to death, surrounded by a mob of howling, frenzied, often drunken men, who yell and dance like demons as the fire laps itself about the body of the victim, and his screams of agony rends the air. And yet a distinguished southern lawyer and wealthy citizen says: "this is in reality proof of a high state of civilization; and that the men of the South are noted for their zeal in protecting woman's chastity." Now, I venture to say that good men in the North and the West are just as jealous of woman's chastity as are those of the South.

No Southern State, I believe, permits women to vote. neither are the laws of those states so generous towards women as are those of other sections of the republic. I have many objections to lynching negroes, for it has been shown that in some instances in which white women were assaulted, that the man who attacked them were white men blacked up, and innocent negroes were punished for crimes they did not commit. The barbarous, fiendish burning to death of men for assaulting women, does no good but incalculable harm. The fear of punishment, of any sort, does not restrain a degenerate whose reason at the time he makes the assault is entirely dethroned or obscured by his animal passions. You might as consistently burn a mad-dog to deter other dogs from going mad and biting people, as to burn a sex-degenerate to deter other brutal misfits from committing crime.

The public burning of a human being by a mob of men who are themselves in a temporary, insane frenzy of mind, sows the seed of hate, revenge. and murder that, later will produce a luxuriant crop of crimes. It is a law of nature that hate begets hate; violence leads to greater violence; brutality and savagery indulged in by individuals or communities, put in motion powerful, silent forces or influences for evil. Such atrocious crimes as the burning to death of a man, does the world a thousand fold more injury than did the one bad act committed by the poor, ignorant victim of the mob's hate and vengence.

The moral pervert who assaults a female should be put in prison, be required to work, and should receive wholesome teaching and kind, patient treatment. He is a moral cripple; he was cursed before he was born; he is a human monstrosity because of the sins of one or several of his ancestors. He is what he is because of the law of heredity. Shut him away from temptation, improve his environments, educate him to let reason instead of animal instinct guide him, and you will have saved a soul and blessed the world. Burning him to death is unspeakably atrocious and vicious. I have no prejudice against the people of any part of our great country. I regard every human being, black or white, as my brother. I do not believe in lynching criminals. There are mental and moral cripples as well as physical. I would no sooner burn such to death than I would cremate an unfortunate child because he was born blind or deaf and dumb or feeble minded. I am disposed to think that the distinguished ex-judge referred to, was less inclined to defend lynching, than he was disposed to indulge in a little boasting about the alleged superiority of Southern men in protecting the chastity of women. I hope so. The cause of the frequent lynching of negroes, by whites, is not so much due to their color or because the negro is a black man as to the fact that capitalism kidnapped him, forced him into slavery, robbed him of his earnings and of his liberty, degraded him to the level of the brute before the law, and although no longer a legal slave, he is looked upon by many whites as an inferior who has no rights that they are bound to respect.

Abraham Lincoln made it unlawful for the capitalist to own him as he owns his horse or dog, but the great emancipator did not and could not make the negro nor the white wage-slave economically free. The colored ex-slave and his children are still poor, and ignorant, and continue to suffer from the wrongs inflicted upon his ancestors.

Slavery, race-prejudice a race-war are the legitimate fruits of an industrial system of capitalism based on competition or the practice of exploiting from others the value of their labor without returning an equivalent therefore.

Socialism proposes to establish and maintain a co-operative commonwealth. Under such a system race antagonisms will in due time fade away because socialism has for its four corner stones justice, reciprocity, universal brotherhod and universal peace.

When the people of the South, put more Socialism, into practice and less competition, strife and hate, they will have fewer horrible lynchings and will advance several notches in the estimation of right-thinking and peacefully disposed persons.

Creston, Iowa.

TO HER—TO HIM.

(W. E. Hanson, Butte, Montana.)

TO HER:

When you're clothed in your silk and satin,
With billowy flounces of laco,
And your jewels danco and glitter,
Turn your rougéd and powdered face
And glance in the mirror a moment
While another face I show—
Of another, who is your sister,
Who is walking the streets below.
Her face is pinched with sickness;
Yours is abloom with health;
Her form is encased in flimsy rags;
Yours in the trappings of wealth.
Your jewels are rubies and diamonds;
Her's is a bleeding heart.
You live in a world that is yours alone,
In which she can have no part.
You sold your soul for position,
For wealth and a tinsel crown—
For an empty name and a palace;
And you try your thoughts to drown
In an ocean of social madness,
In a giddy and senseless whirl.
But mem'ries of bygone gladness
Come back from the long, long ago,
And you do not see your "sister,"
And your heart is dead, I know,
For she is one "that has fallen,"
And is drinking the cup of "Woe."
She fell through loving too deeply;
You, through not loving enough;
You get the world's acclamation,
She, frowns and the world's rebuff;
But, I wonder, when blindfolded Justice
Weighs you both at Judgment Day,
Which has the best claim to pity,
Which one is heard when you pray?

TO HIM:

You're a man of might and position;
You have garnered a golden store—
A master and ruler of Labor
And are ever harvesting more.
To you the name "Man" has no meaning
Unless it be coupled with wealth,
And labor of mankind is the lever
You use by subjection and stealth.
Some of your gold is crimson
With the blood of a patient slave
And some of it damp with grimy sweat;
'Tis the price of a beggar's grave;
And some of it has a lurid tint,
Like a low and slumbering fire.
'Tis the levy you put on a human soul;
'Tis the price of a harlot's hire.
But it bought you the woman in satin,
With her flounces of a filmy lace;
It paid for her rubies and diamonds,
And the rouge for her pallid face;
And as the woman who wears your name
Added jewels to her crown,
The one who paid your her wage of sin
Sank deeper and deeper down.
And so, you proud man of position,
With millions of ill-gotten gold,
While you prate of God and religion,
And give, that the giving be told—
Suck the life blood of man and of woman,
Send souls to damnation and hell
By practices base and inhuman,
That are part of a devil's spell,
Which he has cast over and bound you
And to whom you have sold your soul;
In return he gave what you craved for,
And let you win at the goal.

THE FRIENDS OF WORKING GIRLS.

By Agnes Thecla Fair.

The working girl needs best be on a sharp lookout for the pious brigands, tools of Big Business, who pose as "friends" of the working girl while chloroforming her with the programmes of social justice to come in the sweet bye and bye, when the workers are wise.

The working girl needs no help from these brazen lazies who are "sacrificing" their all to get fastened to the pay check of the girl who sweats blood to earn the bread of life.

The latest savior of the working girl, Miss Jane Addams, had best do her reforming on that much-overrated institution, the "Cull House," where I myself have served Miss Addams the best in the house, but we, the waitresses, were limited to stew and come-backs.

All new waitresses work for a time for their experience, and my attempt to organize the girls was met with strenuous opposition from the lazy who now draws five hundred a month for telling what she doesn't know about children and what she learned about child labor (not as child laborer), but from the children who come into the "Cull House" to get out of the cold.

We waitresses in the "Cull House" were prevented from getting a living wage, as these "lazies," who desired to learn of the slums, smelling La France roses in their cozy rooms at the Hull House, who must have their fat salary, even though we never were organized.

As for the men who hang onto their meal tickets around that institution, they are too sissified to be worthy the name "man," and ought to be demonstrating Dutchess trousers in some store window. When they talked economics their knowledge was only superseded by their gift of gab, and rather than laugh in their faces at every meal, I quit in disgust.

Getting back to the one who established Jane Clubs, so the working girl could live cheap, consequently work cheap, thereby lowering the working girl's standard of living and increasing the number who must go to the red light sweat shops. Has she ever done a single thing to benefit the working girl? I answer no; a thousand times, no!

Alice Lord, the little waitress in Seattle, who obtained the eight-hour law while engaged in her duties as a working girl, has done more than all the Jane Addams or Hull House lazies ever could do.

Lest we give too much space to the worthless, let we working girls add we are not so dull that we cannot see that those who name themselves apostles of social justice had best get off our backs and become workers, then take their place in the factory and sweat shop and let us out in the sunlight for a change.

From the dingy, dirty sweat shop to the sunlight; O God, what a change!

OSCAR WANTS WHOLE CHEESE.

(By Oscar Ameringer.)

I am a proletarian. That is a landless, toolless worker who works four-fifths of his time for a boss in order that I may have the opportunity to work one-fifth of the time for myself. I do not do so for the fun of it, but because I have to. I'd much rather keep the whole product of my labor. But the things with which I produce wealth are the private property of my boss. Without their use I cannot live at all. Even a poor living is better than no living. Hence I turn over to my master four-fifths of the wealth I produce. I do this with joy in my heart, because I must or starve to death.

Now comes Socialism. It promises me the whole cheese through the common ownership of the cheese factory. The whole cheese looks good to my hungry eyes. Therefore, I say, "Socialism is right."

The present owner of the cheese factory begs to differ. The ownership of the cheese factory gives to him the whole cheese, minus the one-fifth which is set aside for my maintenance while I make the cheese. The major portion of the cheese looks as good to my beloved boss as it does to me. Socialism endangers his strangle hold. Therefore, he says, "Socialism is wrong."

Any person of ordinary horse sense can see from the above that Socialism is both right and wrong. This may look contradictory to some folks, but it isn't. A thing may be right today and wrong tomorrow. Or it may be right and wrong at the same time. Or it may look right to some people and wrong to others. So you see there is something wrong about wrong, and right don't seem to be altogether right, or not quite right, or not right at all times or in the eyes of certain people. All this is as clear as mud.

For instance, it is right for a chicken to eat grasshoppers. But the grasshoppers entertain an entirely contrary notion on this subject. It is also right for the early bird to catch the worm. But it is safe to presume that the worm is bitterly opposed to the concept of right harbored by the early bird.

A coyote may also eat chickens without losing caste among his brethren. But judging from the amount of indignant noise arising from the chicken-coop this action is bitterly condemned by the fowls.

It is even so among other animals called humans. There was a time when the best people, the pillars of church and state, owned slaves or traded in slaves. Nowadays we say slavery is a wrong. But it was not wrong prior to 1863. And the undesirable citizen who raised his voice against the institution of slavery in those days had a good chance to be hanged by a committee of the leading citizens.

Yes, the world does change, and our own conception of right and wrong changes it. "But," you say, "is there no right or wrong in this sinful world?" Oh, yes, oodles and oodles of it. Whatever is against the strongest class in society is wrong. In other words, "might makes right."

At the present writing my boss belongs to the strongest class. Hence the cheese belongs to him by right—by right of might. It is the only right that has any standing in court—because the courts also belong to the strongest class. The cheese I made is not my cheese. Should I take that cheese, notwithstanding, I would be condemned by law. Morality, the interpretation of religion and law, follows the strongest class in society even as the tail follows the dog. The tail don't wag the dog. It expresses the sentiment of the dog.

Some day the working people will become the strongest class in society. When that day comes my boss will lose the cheese I made. For I will belong to the strongest class.

I am right because I am right.

This is the economic interpretation of the actions of men. This is the scientific view of life. It is the true conception of life because it is borne out by the recorded facts of life and by the 6,000 years of known history. Therefore the Socialist who tries to prove the justice of Socialism by a religion or a morality arising out of the institution of a semi-barbarous people is a muddlehead of the first order. The beneficiary of the present system which he seeks to convert with such arguments will laugh at him. Because whenever religion interferes with business we cut out religion. On the other side the victim of the system needs no moral arguments to convince him that four-fifths of the cheese is preferable to one-fifth. What he wants to know is how to get it. Show him, and he's your man!—Exchange.

THE MAN OF THE IRON JAW.

By J. William Lloyd.

Roosevelt the Candidate was the cynosure of all eyes. Roosevelt the Beaten is still not forgotten. This is a man who cannot be forgotten nor ignored.

Let us be just. The Man of the Iron Jaw is a wonderful personality. He has that peculiarly dynamic quality which all possess who do not attempt to be consistent, but who, like animals and thunder-clouds, express freely the stress of the moment.

Life is paradoxical, and the Man of the Iron Jaw is like life. Life, today, is in the mood of the Social Conscience, and Roosevelt, the Nietzschean, bidding in supreme egotism for the niche of the Superman, suddenly finds himself caught and twisted by the invisible Composite Will to serve its ends. Do you not see? Roosevelt the egoist has to work altruist; Roosevelt the Anti-Socialist has to be the step-ladder whereby Socialism may mount and enter the second story windows of a bourgeoisie too contented to look out and see it in the street.

Roosevelt is no coward. It was a brave man who could stand up after receiving an assassin's bullet and address an audience. Ay, a brave but a boastful one. For it was a fool act, the act of a neurotic egotist, hungry for the plaudits of the crowd, welcoming a wound as a dramatic opening for a picturesque impression and using it even at the risk of life. Yet what is life but being noticed and a warfare to win?

Yet life should be picturesque. As a race, as a people, as an age we are stupidly, criminally unpicturesque. The man, of the Iron Jaw has the good taste to make himself picturesque and a grateful country gives him his reward.

Roosevelt says he will go on. Of course. When he stops exhibiting himself and stops fighting he will be dead. He is a dynamo of neurotic egotism, energy, persistence and combativeness. That makes him the Man of the Iron Jaw.

The Man of the Iron Jaw is no charlatan. He is sincere. He is a Cromwell. It is his ethics you do not understand—a very simple one. Just this: Roosevelt is right. Whatever helps Roosevelt is right. Whatever opposes Roosevelt is wrong. Whatever, whoever, contradicts Roosevelt is a lie and a liar.

That's all.

A procession of dead Roosevelts stalks past the hell-hounds of Hades, but the Man of the Iron Jaw says, "Look at Me now!" and we look at him now. Nothing more is necessary.

Roosevelt never looks backward. He is untrammeled by the past. To kill this lion and have himself photograped with his foot on its neck is the one supreme concern of the moment. Therefore, no force is wasted and all has the concentration and impact of an express bullet.

And this man has the instinct of the opportune; he was born with the politician's finger for the public pulse.

But the Iron Jaw is a tool. We are all tools, and a Great Hand Presses Egotism and humility alike cut; crime and comradeship cut. We make or mar and wonder at each other and at ourselves, but Kismet cuts on. There is a change coming over the world, and this Iron Jaw must, willy nilly, bite and chew for it.

The red oriflamme floats over an ever-increasing phalanx of those who march in uniform step with eyes fixed on the high ideal of Socialism, but the Man of the Iron Jaw is breaking in an Awkward Squad of those willing enough and patriotic enough, but who do not yet know what the enemy looks like or what their pieces are loaded with.

Some day they will march with us.

Thanks to the Iron Jaw.—New Review.

MINERS' CONVENTION AT NELSON PASSES VERY IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS.

District No. 6, W. F. of M., Will bring Matters of Serious Interest Before Legislature.

The convention of District 6 of the Western Federation of Miners' which concluded its deliberations at Nelson, on January 10th, has resulted in the advocation of some very important amendments being adopted with a view to their enactment, regarding the Workmen's Compensation Act and the Eight Hour Law. Legislation providing that workers acquiring miner's phthisis and other diseases resulting from employment under unhealthful conditions may secure compensation as under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that the B. C. Workmen's Compensation Act be brought in conformity with the Alberta Workmen's Compensation Act. The extension of the Eight Hour Law to cover carpenters Machinists, Boiler makers, helper and chain gang workers working around smelters was submitted by Trail.

It was explained that this class of workers had to work under the same conditions as regards smelter fumes, etc., as the regular smelter workers, and yet had to work nine hours. President "Bill" Davidson explained that such proposed legislation had been presented ineffectually on several occasions by the Socialist members in the House at Victoria. The resolution was adopted, and the delegates to the Federation of Labor convention at Victoria, Messrs. Percy W. Johnston and James Cuthbertson, instructed to bring this matter to the attention of the delegates from all over the province. Owing to an accident at the Mother Lode mine, Mr. W. B. McIsaac of Ymir was unable to be present. Mr. A. J. Carter, secretary-treasurer of District 18 of the United Mine Workers of America, conveyed to the convention fraternal greetings from the coal miners.

In his address to the convention he spoke in regard to the conditions existing, as follows: The strike of the coal miners in the Crow's Nest Pass during 1911 was a fight against tremendous odds. The cost to the mine workers was $550,000, and the results, taken as a whole, were a credit to the organization.

The membership of District 18 at this time was equally as strong as in any previous year at this season, and was about 6,000. With regard to the "compensation act," he declared that it appeared that the operators were using the "workmen's" compensation act to bring about dissension among the membership of the unions. It was up to the workers to compel the Legislature to make the amendments desired by the unions.

Mr. J. W. Bennett, representative of the miners on the conciliation board, was present by inviation and was introduced by President Davidson, who made it clear that Mr. Bennett was not present in his capacity as a member of the conciliation board.

Mr. Bennett, in referring to the growing need for solidarity among the workers, said: "The spirit of solidarity, of putting aside little sectional differences, was growing steadily. There was no body of men doing more for their fellow workers than the Western Federation and the United Mine Workers. Mr. McNiven, fair wage officer for the western district of Canada, also spoke. Mr. James Cuthbertson of Greenwood was elected president —Mr. W. Davidson, retiring president, not being eligible, owing to his position as member of the international executive board "As long as honesty wears a rag and rascality a robe, there is only one goal at which labor should aim," declared President-elect Cuthbertson, who described that goal as control of the means of production.—B. C. Federationist.

THERE MUST BE SOMETHING WRONG.

(By Alfred Houghton).

While soft Te Deums echo o'er the fields of ripened grain,
While burdened orchards join the chant of nature's grand refrain,
While fruits and flowers, ears and sheaves, from our prolific soil,
Proclaim the great Creator's power to fill the hands that toil.
If little children droop and die 'mid pestilential want,
If stalwart men parade the streets with aspects grim and gaunt,
If graceful women bend and break o'er shirts without a song,
If plenty elbows poverty there must be something wrong.

While looms and forges, steel and steam increase the nation's store,
While grand inventions, genius, art, are adding more and more,
While science man's producing power doth many times augment,
While warehouse rooms are crowded full and shelves with goods are bent.
If strikes and lockouts multiply, if want and failure spread,
If greedy robs the needy ones of fuel, clothing, bread;
If hungry children, idle men, and weeping women throng
The city's cheerless tenements, there must be something wrong.

While marble sanctuaries bear the blest Redeemer's cross,
While altars flame with sacred fire and gleam with shining dross,
While pews with shining silk adorned blaze out with diamonds rare,
While richly cushioned floors support the wealthy while at prayer.
If in the crowded, filthy dens, where service labor dwells,
The anthems sung are vengeful threats, the prayers are funeral knells,
If grief is drowned in drink and joy is sought in liquor strong,
If love is lost, if hate is found, there must be something wrong.

To right these wrongs, to make this earth a paradise indeed,
To feed the hungry lambs of God, to succor those in need,
To rescue those whom grim despair is driving to the wall,
To lift the prostrate to their feet, to strengthen those who fall,
To help the weak, to curb the strong, to plant upon the soil
The reign of justice till no man shall ask for leave to toil;
This is the work we're pledged to do, united now we stand,
Opposed to tyranny and wrong, a valiant comrade band.

IN MEMORIAM.

South Porcupine, Ontario, Canada, Jan. 25, 1913.

The following resolutions of condolence re the death of one of our brothers who came to his death in one of the mines in Cobalt, with a crosshead hitting him on the head and fracturing his skull and knocking him in the sump, where he stayed some time in water—long enough for the Coroner's (?) jury to declare that deceased came to his death with PNEUMONIA.

Whereas, Death has again visited our ranks and removed from our midst Brother J. P. Colterman, and

Whereas, By the death of Brother Colterman, Porcupine Miners' Union has lost a true and faithful member, therefore be it

Resolved, That we drape our charter for a period of thirty days; that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this local and that a copy be sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication.

WM. THOMPSON,
THOS. COLLINS,
SAM BIRCE,
Committee.

(Seal)
JAMES DOGWE, Secretary No. 145.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, Death has again invaded our ranks and removed from our midst Brother Thomas Murry, and

Whereas, By the death of Brother Thomas Murry Tonopah Miners' Union has lost one of its most faithful and loyal members and the community a staunch and loyal citizen, be it

Resolved, That Tonopah Miners' Union No. 121 extend to the relatives and friends of the deceased brother our heartfelt sympathy in their grief and a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our late brother, and a copy be sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication and our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

CON SULLIVAN,
JOHN HAGGERTY,
G. M. BENN,
Committee.

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintie mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

THE COMING NATION, which was formerly published at Girard, Kansas, has been moved to Chicago.

THE BOY SCOUTS of the United States now number 300,000. These boys, inoculated with the military spirit, will become the future soldiers of America. Capitalism needs soldiers to perpetuate its reign of robbery.

THE NATIONAL CIVIC FEDERATION has had another annual convention. The members met at the Hotel Astor and had the usual annual banquet. All laboring men when visiting New York usually put up at the Hotel Astor, as the management is always pleased to welcome the horny-handed son of toil as a patron of the fashionable hash factory.

THE EXPENDITURES of the United Mine Workers of America during the year 1912 reached the sum of $1,108,901.40. Of this amount, nearly $750,000 was expended on strikes, the most of which went into West Virginia. Regardless of this vast amount of money expended by the United Mine Workers, the organization has nearly a quarter of a million dollars in its treasury.

IN THE STRIKES of the garment workers of New York, the strikes of the miners of Porcupine, Ontario; of Bingham Canyon, Utah; of Owingsville, Kentucky; of Minesville, New York; of Wharton, New Jersey, and of West Virginia, we do not find the priests and preachers standing shoulder to shoulder with the oppressed, giving battle to Privilege, and yet these saintly gentlemen are asking why the laboring man does not attend the church!

MISS FOLA LA FOLLETTE has been in New York aiding the garment workers in their strike. She has been working as an organizer and doing picket duty, and while many of the most active and prominent strikers were arrested for performing the same work as Miss La Follette, yet the policemen side-stepped the daughter of a United States senator.

The "chestnut" that "we are equal before the law" touches the risibilities of people who are not as yet eligible for an asylum for the feeble-minded.

THE ELECTRICAL WORKERS of Keokuk, Iowa, have sent out a circular letter requesting union men of all trades to stay away from Keokuk, Iowa. The Stone and Webster Engineering Corporation has locked out their employés, refusing to meet a committee from the electrical workers. This corporation, like the Utah Copper Company, has declared that they would deal with their employés as individuals only, and when their employés insisted that a committee from the union should be recognized, the lockout was launched as a means to crush the union.

PRESIDENT RYAN of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers has gained his liberty through a bond of $70,000

Had he been a banker and impoverished thousands of depositors, a bond of lesser magnitude would have satisfied the court. But Ryan is a labor official who has aroused the enmity of the steel trust, and the man who incurs the displeasure of multi-millionaires must be an anarchist.

Anarchists are only found among workingmen and labor officials. Moneyed men who corrupt courts, debauch legislative bodies, steal franchises and plunder the public domain are gentlemen, for money, like charity, "covers a multitude of sins."

IT IS NOW ANNOUNCED that William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Company, Fred E. Atteaux of Brookline and Dennis J. Collins of Cambridge, are to be placed on trial in March on the charge of conspiring with John J. Breen in planting dynamite in Lawrence, Massachusetts, during the strike of the textile workers.

Breen was convicted on the charge and fined but $500. Had Breen been a labor official he would have been sent to the penitentiary, but being a business man and a politician, a fine was sufficient to satisfy the demands of justice.

When Wood, Atteaux and Collins are tried in March the people will be given another demonstration of that glaring fallacy: "We are all equal before the law."

WE HAVE BEEN REQUESTED to publish the following: "The Philadelphia School for Nurses is a benevolent institution and has been in successful operation for sixteen years, and is one of the largest, if not the very largest school for nurses in the country. It gives a course in nursing, which leading physicians and experts in nursing education concede to be of superior excellence.

"The students and graduates of this school are young women of the highest character and ability. They are regularly employed by over one thousand of the best physicians of Philadelphia, who have testified in writing to their skill and ability.

"Graduates of the school are holding positions as superintendents of hospitals, sanitariums, teachers of nursing, leaders in nurse missionary service and other important places of trust.

"Free scholarships in the Philadelphia School for Nurses are provided for many young women of all sections of the country who would not otherwise be able to secure this valuable training and excellent means of livelihood."

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL, in its issue of January 27th, had the following comment on the strike in Porcupine, Ontario:

"Latest news from Porcupine is to the effect that the miners' strike still presents a serious aspect. Two organizers have been convicted of inciting the employés of Hollister mine to go on strike. The miners are incensed at some of the strikers being held in custody for several days without the option of bail, and a protest has been sent to the Ontario government."

The mine operators of Porcupine did not entertain the opinion that when the miners were forced to declare a strike against a reduction of wages that they were dealing with men who were determined to resist such reduction to a finish.

The strikers at Porcupine have been subjected to almost every outrage which the brutal ingenuity of professional thugs could suggest, but the strikers have never faltered in their determination to win the victory.

The strike has been an expensive one to the operators, and the end is not yet. The strikers are still full of confidence and courage and declare that they know no such word as surrender.

LEARN TO BE A FIGHTER.

Not with fists or clubs or swords, but through the noble mastering of the forces at your command, generaled by your own brain.

For great are victories gained from the everyday battles of life over the endless difficulties that almost hourly face such a force.

Learn to be a fighter.

Then fight! Fight face to the front—fiercely yet fairly. And when everybody looks upon you as a loser and calls you licked—that's your cue to finish the fight—and win!

Learn to be a fighter.

You won't always win, but never admit it. Half the so-named failures of all time lie in conquerors' graves. And the flowers of God and the winds of undying fame cool and soothe the sleeping souls that didn't know how to die!

Learn to be a fighter.

What is your work today? Make it a battle front! Muster the best that is in you and go out to meet and vanquish every obstacle that seeks to keep this day from being the one you will most prize as the one of all your days most worth while—to other people and to yourself. Fight every inch of the way. Give no quarter, and accept none. Go to your bed with the spirit and satisfaction of a conqueror.

Learn to be a fighter.—George Mathew Adams.

THE PEOPLE of this country are now observing Lent. Many of our people will offer up a few extra prayers during the Holy Season, while others will observe the dictum of the church to abstain from satisfying their appetites with the good things of life.

It will be comparatively easy for several millions of people to render obedience to the mandates of the church, as the emaciated appearance of their pocketbooks will not permit of the slightest extravagance. In fact, it is Lent for 365 days in the year for a vast army of people who are being slowly but surely starved to death.

There is no danger that the mill workers of Massachusetts will grow corpulent during the forty days that members of churches are supposed to fast and pray.

It is a foregone conclusion that the garment workers of New York will not break the laws of the church by becoming gluttons from now until Easter Sunday.

There is a strong presumption that the miners of West Virginia, the miners of Bingham Canyon, Utah; the miners of Porcupine, Canada; the miners of Owingsville, Kentucky; the miners of Mineville, New York; the miners of Wharton, New Jersey, and all the other strikers and victims of lockouts, will not suffer from the gout on account of overloading their stomachs during those sacred weeks, when churches are reminding their communicants of their duty to God. Pulpits will exhort the people to prayer and fasting, but the question arises, will fasting and prayer soften the unfeeling hearts and callous souls of economic tyrants to whom profit is God?

After forty days of fasting and prayer, industrial conditions will be no better, for dividends on earth seem far more preferable to exploiters than promised harps and crowns in the realms of an unknown world.

THE FOLLOWING is taken from the Salt Lake Tribune: "Should it transpire, as reported in the East, that the Utah Copper Company during the fourth quarter of the past year did not make any profits whatever on account of the loss in production and expense incident to the strike, the shareholders still have no cause for concern, as the earnings during the first three quarters of 1912 were far away in excess of the whole year's dividend requirements.

"During the past year the Utah Copper Company paid a total of $4,933,282 in dividends, or $3 per share, and during the first three-quarters of the year the total net earnings were $7,346,821, or $2,413,539 in excess of the dividend. Had the fourth quarter been free from difficulty, and the earnings reached $3,000,000, as many had anticipated, there would be small reason to doubt that the dividend rate for the first quarter of 1913 would have been materially increased. The earnings for the first three-quarters of last year were respectively as follows: $1,797,562, $2,622,699 and $2,925,470."

The above extract from the Tribune will scarcely reconcile the stockholders to a loss of dividends during the last quarter of the year 1912.

A stockholder, as a general rule, is not satisfied with living on the memory of dividends that he has drawn in the past, but he wants dividends now, and when his investment fails to bring the usual profits, the stockholder makes a noise that cannot be silenced by truckling sheets that pander to economic czars who wage relentless war upon the labor movement. The Utah Copper Company is a rival of the steel trust in its arrogance and despotism, but a time is not far distant when the solidarity of the labor movement will break the brutal spirit of industrial tyrants.

THE REPORT comes from Washington that the United States Supreme Court has decided that Chicago's "bread ordinance" is valid. This ruling gives to the city the right to regulate the size and weight of all loaves of bread.

How is this for invading the sacred rights of individuals? The capitalist employer used to tell us that he had a right to do as he pleased with his own. This sounded very plausible and generally knocked out the argument of the Socialists—or at least the crowd thought it did. But now it comes to pass that the Supreme Court holds a law valid which empowers a city government to decide exactly what shall be the size and weight of a loaf of bread, and if the employer who has always claimed the right to do as he pleases with his own bakes a loaf, or rather has a loaf baked, out of his own dough and offers it for sale from his own wagon which does not conform to the weight and measurement prescribed by the community, he is arrested and fined, and if he persists in it he is sent to jail. This was once called "paternalism" and was so offensive that it was supposed to be a complete knockout of any argument that could be advanced in behalf of Socialism.

The decision is a pregnant one. It shows that the individual desire or whim or caprice, when it interferes with the public interest, must give way. It means, moreover, that whatever is necessary to the public welfare is paramount, good in law and sound in morals.

Finally, if the community can prescribe the weight and measurement of a loaf of bread it can prescribe anything and everything that may be necessary to give every human being the equal chance with every other to earn his bread and to enjoy all the freedom and other advantages made possible by modern civilization.—Free Press.

THE FOLLOWING is taken from one of the daily journals of Salt Lake and shows once more the type of men that are hired as thugs by corporations to maintain "law and order":

"T. Herman, a guard at the Utah Copper Company's property at Bingham, was arrested and brought to Salt Lake by Deputy Sheriff Otto Witbeck yesterday, a grip full of dynamite, fitted with caps and fuse had been found in Herman's room. The arrested man is alleged to have planned to blow up a building on the company's property to justify the further continuance of the guard system, in effect since the strike, thereby insuring his being retained on the company's pay roll.

"Herman was charged with petty larceny, on evidence, it is alleged, that he had stolen the dynamite from the company. He is being held at the county jail and will be examined for his sanity. The dynamite was discovered by the room-mate of Herman, who objected to sharing his quarters with the explosive. Herman is said to have told conflicting stories about his plans concerning the dynamite, at first giving the explanation that he intended to take it to Cleveland, Ohio, where he had contracted to blow up a bridge."

Herman, the hired thug of the Utah Copper Company, according to the above, is now to be examined as to his sanity.

It is probable that the agents of the Utah Copper Company who canvassed the country for bad men to suppress a strike had examined Herman as to his degeneracy and found him fully competent to serve as a guard.

If one of the strikers had been uncovered with a "grip full of dynamite" there would have been no question raised as to his sanity, but the daily journals of Salt Lake would have immediately denounced him as a cold-blooded conspirator who had contemplated not only the destruction of property, but the taking of human life.

When more than thirty men charged with transporting dynamite, contrary to law, were brought before a federal court and convicted, there was none to raise the question of sanity, simply because these men were identified with the labor movement. But when a thug, willing to carry a gun for a corporation to suppress strikers is caught with dynamite his mental condition must be inquired into as a cloak to cover up the villainy of a corporation that recruited criminals and had them deputized by a sheriff so that they could kill under authority of law.

THE CLEVELAND CITIZEN, edited by Max Hayes, had the following to say editorially relative to the Germer article exposing the dishonesty of William D. Haywood:

"Adolph Germer, one of the best-known members of the United Mine Workers, has issued a statement containing a bitter attack upon W. D. Haywood. Germer charges that Haywood is not only an ingrate and hypocrite, but is also crooked financially and that he has the evidence to prove his assertion. Germer declares that he was one of those who looked upon Haywood as one of the greatest men in the American labor movement, that through his efforts and those of others thousands of dollars were raised among the miners to defend Haywood, Moyer and Pettibone in the famous trial. Upon securing his freedom Haywood came to the next A. M. W. convention and thanked the members for their support, saying it was largely due to their efforts that "my body is not lying in a bed of quicklime in the state of Idaho," or words to that effect, which he repeated to union men all over the country. Last year Germer met Haywood in New York, where Big Bill took occasion to belch forth a tirade against the U. M. W., using the same old Deleonistic twaddle about the "check-off" system and that the union wasn't entitled to any more members that are "willing" to pay dues, which view he failed to express while he was in the Idaho jail and these same "coerced" members checked off money for his defense. Germer charges further that when Haywood was released from jail the Western Federation of Miners sent him through the country to collect funds for the defense of Steve Adams, who was still in prison, an innocent victim of a foul conspiracy. Haywood collected $17 in Collinsville, $31 in Belleville and $75 in St. Louis within two days, "but up to this day not a cent of that money, according to information from their headquarters, has been turned over to the office of the Western Federation of Miners." While Haywood is no longer a member of the W. F. of M., if Germer's charges are true, the latter organization ought to verify them or take steps to vindicate Haywood. This fight has reached a point where a showdown is necessary."

The statements made by Germer are based on the records

The records of the Western Federation of Miners show that Haywood made no returns for the funds which were turned over to him at Belleville, Collinsville or St. Louis. Haywood can now vindicate himself or stand charged with dishonesty.

Slightly in Error

THE MONTANA SOCIALIST, under the heading, "Costly Whistling," had the following:

"A few weeks ago a man entered one of the swell restaurants of New York city, took his seat at a table and scanned the bill of fare. Everything was apparently working smoothly there. The musicians were discoursing sweet music, and the waiters in dress suits were carrying viands to the guests. Suddenly as the clock indicated a certain hour, the man leaned back in his chair and whistled.

"At once confusion and disorder took place. The waiters all ceased their labors and walked out of the restaurant. The musicians stopped in the middle of a phrase, packed their instruments and walked out. But around the man who whistled a rough house broke loose. Plug-uglies in the employ of the proprietors of the restaurant rushed upon the whistler and beat him up. The police were called in and he was hustled off to the calaboose. Next morning a heavy fine was imposed on him for disturbing the peace. It was proved that whistling in this swell hostelry was unusual and a violation of the respectable decorum of the place.

"The fact is that he was the business agent of a working class economic organization. His whistle was the signal for a strike.

"It is expensive business for a workingman to whistle in the sacred precincts of establishments patronized by the upper class. But suppose Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Morgan, or Mr. Astor, or any other of the representatives of capitalist economic organiations should venture to whistle in such a place, we wonder, would he have been beaten up, arrested, imprisoned and fined?

"We trow not, Mabel."

The business agent of the Hotel Workers, who was slugged and fined, was not visited by such penalties simply because he whistled, but because his whistle was the signal for a strike, was the reason that he met with assault and a fine.

Had this business agent whistled in the "swell restaurant" and his whistle had not been followed by a walkout of the cooks and waiters of this hostelry he would not have been molested. He was slugged and fined, not because of his whistle, but because of the results of that whistle.

Any other signal used by this business agent would have met the same outrage, providing such signal conflicted with the interests of exploiters. Had this business agent warbled the hymn, "Come to Jesus" or sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and the hymn or national anthem was used as the signal for slaves to throw down their tools and leave their masters, the business agent would have been visited with the same vengeance from that class and their hirelings, who will continue to assault labor until labor as a class becomes an army to protect its own interests.

The Cardinal Should Study the Industrial Problem

CARDINAL GIBBONS, in one of his recent addresses, expressed the hope that "capitalists and workingmen will work in harmony and strive for an era of complete industrial peace."

Instead of the cardinal expressing such a hope he could far better employ his time in an honest endeavor to ascertain the cause that breeds continual strife between the capitalist and the laborer.

Expressing hopes for harmony between exploiter and exploited will not usher in the reign of industrial peace. That there is strife between employer and employé cannot be denied, and that this strife is the effect of a cause will not be disputed by any individual who lays claim to intelligence. The question naturally arises as to the cause that gives birth to conflicts between the capitalist and the workingman.

Advocates of a false philosophy endeavor to impress upon the minds of the people that there is an "identity of interest" between employer and employé ,but men of intelligence can scarcely comprehend this "identity of interest when they behold the exploiter living in a mansion and the exploited in a hovel.

The slave in rags must not have realized on that "identity of interest" that puts a master in a palace.

The very fact that strife rages, even sometimes fiercely, between employer and employé, is due to their interests not being identical, but diametrically opposed to each other.

Interests that are identical could not breed conflicts and strife. Opposite interests produce strife, and because of the opposite interests between employer and employé, we have the strike and lockout, the boycott and the blacklist.

It should be apparent to the cardinal that the less wages paid by an employer to an employé the more profit is added to the bank account of the employer, and the more wages paid by an employer to an employé the less profit is added to the wealth of the exploiter.

The employer insists on the cheapest labor and the greatest production from such labor, while the employé is demanding the highest wages that his services can possibly secure through the aid of the organization to which he may belong.

Under such an industrial system it is not possible for harmony to exist between employer and employé, and it is not possible to establish industrial peace. It is true that at times there seems to be harmony between employer and employé, but such harmony is only temporary, as employer and employé are continually endeavoring to strengthen their position so as to advance their respective interests.

Fallacies that were accepted as sound philosophy by the working class a generation ago are repudiated today, because the workingman has learned some lessons in the school of experience that have exploded the sophistry of the "friends of labor."

Modern Miracle Humbugs

HELL IS PAVED with good intentions, and our capitalist world, after which hell is undoubtedly patterned, is paved largely with the same unsatisfactory material. The good intentions invariably lie around loose and serve as stumbling blocks, making slow travel on the road to progress.

Here, for instance, we have John D. Rockefeller, Jr., tackling the "social evil problem" amid the enthusiastic plaudits of journalistic rogues, who call upon the unthinking multitude, and especially the pious fools among them, to admire the good intentions of one of their own kind attempting to lift himself with his bootstraps. The roar of applause which they desire to excite seems deliberately calculated to divert attention from any consideration of the possibility of the task.

Here is a social phenomenon which has existed for ages, and which grows and extends with the passing years and the development of capitalism, and has become such an integral part of society and so closely interwoven with all human efforts and activities, that the fact is unconsciously recognized in the very name given it—"the social evil"—and here is a person whose intellectual power never rose above the flat mediocrity of a Y. M. C. A. gathering or a Sunday School Bible class, a man who has never shown anything but money and who, even for that, is indebted to piratical activities of his father; yet this person is paraded as the accredited champion of social morality, a moral superman for whom the world has waited for centuries to cleanse it of the "social evil"—a miracle worker with the one thing needful—sufficient dollars.

And these dollars will hire "brains" which will set to work on the "problem," and, after a long series of surveys, investigations, probes, commissions and reports, will bring in findings which everybody knows and has long known, and which will at least serve as a starting point to begin all over again as long as the dollars hold out.

And in the meantime, the godly young man, supposedly drawing on his own vast intellectual resources, has made public the startling and astounding discovery that poverty is mainly responsible for the "social evil." "It is my belief," he is quoted as declaring to his Board of Social Hygiene," that less than twenty-five per cent. of the unfortunate women in this country would have fallen if they had an equally good chance to lead a pure life. That they have been dragged into the mire in such large numbers is due to a variety of circumstances, among which are poverty, low wages, improper home conditions and lack of training," etc.

All this is touted as a most remarkable discovery for Young Rockefeller to make. Which, perhaps, considering his intellectual caliber, it is.

But will Rockefeller start with the attempt to abolish poverty? All the other things he speaks of are but manifestations of poverty. He will not. To do that, he would have to efface himself and his class, to abolish the system which brought him the dollars and the others the poverty which is the cause of the "social evil" which he seeks with the aid of those dollars to suppress. And the public are called upon to witness this plutocratic ass trotting around this vicious circle and heed his pious braying, and imagine as best they can that somehow, in some way, he is getting somewhere, because of his "good intentions."

Rockefeller and his ilk are the real "social evil" of the day, yet by some hocus-pocus the belief is generated and maintained that they can abolish it without abolishing themselves and the system that made them what they are and the prostitute what she is.

If there were no Rockefellers we should have no prostitutes—either in the pulpit, on the press, on the streets or among the ranks of the politicians and professional reformers.

It is not likely that a "Bureau of Social Hygiene" established and financed by Rockefeller will ever find that he and the system he represents constitute the real "social evil." But there is one in existence that has already discovered that fact and is slowly gaining power for the purpose of abolishing the poverty that is the cause of the "social evil." It will start with Rockefeller and his class, and its name is the Socialist party.—New York Call.

Wasted Efforts

AN EVANGELIST in the shape of a representative of the gentler sex, has come to Denver, probably brought here through the sham-battle that is being waged by skim-milk reformers on the "social evil." A daily journal of Denver announces the coming of the evangelist in the following article:

"DEAN H. MARTYN HART, who advocates the segregation of Denver's tenderloin district, has met an able opponent in Mrs Eugenia F. St. John, a National Evangelist for the W. C. T. U., who has come to Denver to take part in the campaign against white slavery that starts with two big mass meetings this afternoon. Mrs. St John will speak at the Central Christian Church at 3 o'clock today, and at the Y. M. C. A. tomorrow night.

"I don't doubt Dean Hart's sincerity," said Mrs. St. John, "but his arguments do not stand the test. The tenderloin should not be segregated. There should be no tenderloin—either in Denver or any other city in the world. Scientific investigation has established this fact Segregation of District Wrong, She Says.

"The National Anti-White Slavery Association has conducted studies of this problem in all the countries of the world for a score of years. We have called in police officials, physicians, prison wardens, matrons of jails, saloonmen and every other person who might shed the faintest ray of light on this matter. We have come into personal contact with the painted women of cities everywhere. We have studied cities that had redlight district and cities that did not. Taking the result of all this work, we are prepared to show to any public of average intelligence that a segregated tenderloin is a bad thing. Segregated saloons are a bad thing.

"We are after three things in our campaign against white slavery—education, prevention and law enforcement.

"We believe sex hygiene should be taught in the public schools and in the homes. Investigation has shown this the only safe way to preserve the morals and health of this nation. We are going to start classes in Denver where mothers can be taught sex matters by experts, and then we will endeavor to get the mothers to communicate this information to their daughters.

"Then we will try to prevent the spread of the evil by keeping young girls out of such places as the Curtis street cafés of Denver and by closing the tenderloin.

Present Laws Should Be Enforced.

"The enforcement of existing laws would remedy most of the trouble. There are plenty of laws on this question, and we want the proper authorities to see that they are observed.

"The closing of Denver's redlight district would not spread crime and disease all over the town. Dean Hart says the painted women would move into the hotels and apartment houses. That is true, but we would go on and drive them out of there, also. We would keep driving them around until we got them all out of town and kept them out. A redlight district is not a necessity."

It would be somewhat interesting to know of the work accomplished by this woman, who as an evangelist, proposes to abolish the "redlight" district of Denver.

What cities, towns or hamlets can she point to as monuments of her work?

Where has she wiped out the "redlight" district or where has she abolished prostitution?

This evangelist is a member of the W. C. T. U. and as a member of that organization, it is presumed that she has annihiliated the liquor traffic, and for lack of something to do, has now turned her attention to the wiping out of the social evil, that has reached such a magnitude that the giant minds of the nation are baffled as to the most judicious methods to be utilized in halting the epidemic that threatens the moral life of millions of people.

But this woman, fortified by the spirit of Christianity, is going to wipe out the "redlight" district and banish prostitution. How?

By closing the "redlight" district, and should these women move into hotels and apartment houses, then, according to her own words, she would "drive them out of there."

Where?

This woman should know that apartment houses and hotels are already crowded with unfortunate victims, whom a soulless industrial system has forced, through poverty, to barter their honor for bread.

She should know that while the "redlight" district has in its area 300 to 400 fallen women, that hotels, rooming and apartment houses have nearly 2,000 scarlet women, and this evangelist proposes to drive this army of women out of the city of Denver.

This Christian woman, who is hailed as an evangelist, is to use a club to drive out members of her sex.

This imported apostle and disseminator of Christian teachings is to use force and drive them out, and where they are to be driven is an enigma even to the evangelist, who is presumed to be permeated with the gentle spirit of a Christ.

But let us suppose the "redlight" district is closed and the fallen women driven out of Denver, what will this evangelist do with the department stores, laundries and other places where women are employed, where low wages recruit the victims for the "redlight" district?

Had this evangelist been forced to work for $5 or $6 per week it is probable that she might be found among that army of women whom she proposes to drive from the "Queen City of the Plains."

This evangelist, instead of wasting her time talking about driving out fallen women from Denver, should focus her vision on the economic wrongs that breed prostitution and build "redlight" districts

The evangelist should deal with the cause and then her efforts will not be wasted.

They See the Coming Storm

UNDER THE HEADING "The Mourners' Bench," the Rocky Mountain News had the following:

"Each day sees repentant reactionaries forcing their way to the mourners' bench. Last week it was 'Tom' Taggart, yesterday it was Seth Low, and now we are called upon to listen to the 'experience' of Justice Howard, a great New York jurist. In an address that any radical might envy, he declared that unless the courts 'reformed' themselves, the people would do the job for them in a way that might not be pleasant.

" 'All men are supposed to be equal before our laws,' he said, 'but that seems not to be so. The road to justice should be straight, short and simple. There should be no tollgates on the way, no brigands, no false guideboards. The suitors traveling in automobiles should have no precedence over those on foot. It is not well to scoff at the mutterings of the people; there is much reason for it.'

"Many decisions today, according to Justice Howard, record the views, 'not of the judges who sign them, but of judges who lived before the Renaissance.' The rule of precedent, he declared, dominated the rule of right. Expert testimony he characterized as 'that hideous farce.' It was not dishonesty, he said, but conservatism that weakens the bench—'not venality, but timidity.'

" 'The hugest fortunes and, in many instances, the most abject poverty of all ages exist in this country; colossal corporations more powerful and wealthy than ancient kingdoms were, are among us: gigantic combinations and trusts, under the command of one individual, with more men and money than Athens had at the battle of Marathon, are in our midst; and children are toiling in canneries and families are huddled in dark basements; farms go uncultivated, and the cost of living becomes appalling. And our laws tolerate it all.

" 'Brandt, the obscure valet, not guilty of all of the crime of which he was accused, so the attorney general states, is sentenced to state prison for thirty years—practically for life; Robin, the millionaire, the alleged wrecker of banks, houses and homes, goes to jail for one year. Morse, who pyramided banks and juggled with millions, gets out of prison because he is sick, while the convict in the next cell, who stole a coat perhaps, remains there languishing with sickness till he dies.'

"'The movement for reform,' concluded the justice, 'must begin from within. It is well for the great jurists of the land, the judges of last resort, to take heed of the temper of the times, unbend from their conservatism and work out the reform themselves. Let us not deceive ourselves. Something will happen. Unless the judges act the people will act; if they do not resort to the recall they will revise the constitution and create new courts.'

"Who will be the next one to 'come in out of the wet?'"

The above extracts taken from an address delivered by Justice Howard of New York are clothed with vigorous language and shows that even a judge upon the bench can hear the rumblings of the coming earthquake.

There was a time when the wronged man, even though comparatively poor, entertained the opinion that he could secure justice in the courts, but developments of late years have proven that the man in cotton has but little standing against the aristocrat in broadcloth. The lawyer garbed in the ermine of the judiciary has pandered to the influences that have made it possible for him to reach a seat in the temple of justice. The judge upon the bench has been taught to see things in the same light as the oppressors of the poor, and those who suffer from wrong and injustice can be heard giving expression to those sentiments of rebellion that presage an uprising against the defenders of Privilege.

From ocean to ocean the people are awakening to the fact that courts are but the bulwarks behind which economic masters seek protection, and the time is but short when the oppressed will demonstrate that their dictum is far more powerful than the mandate of a judicial tribunal.

The General Strike

IX. A MENACE TO ORGANIZATION.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

"THE WORDS, GENERAL STRIKE," says Jules Guesde, "have already done much harm. General strike! And they organize no more. General strike! And they vote no more."

The explanation of much of the ill temper and bitterness which arises whenever a discussion of general strike takes place in labor circles, lies in that brief statement of Guesde. Both Socialists and Trade Unionists are genuinely tolerant upon all creeds as to the future society. One may believe almost anything concerning the New Time, and yet find himself acceptable to his comrades. One may be a State Socialist, a Communist, an Anarchist, indeed almost anything that stands for a change in the existing order, but no one will fly into rage at the mention of his faith. If one seeks discussion, one can always find it without heat and without bitterness. But the moment men in the world of labor differ as to tactics, they fight, often with violence and malice that seem incredible.

Yet this is exactly what must happen. The future will not be determined by our controversies of today. Whether or not man will have money then, or a government, or a two-hour day cannot be decided by us now. But the path we are to take to reach our destination is an immediate, pressing matter that must be decided now. None of us wishes to lose time, or to take the wrong road. None of us wishes to see the armies of labor helplessly floundering about in roads that lead nowhere. Whether or not, therefore, we shall organize political parties, trade unions and co-operatives is a vital matter. The outlines of the future state which we make today we may amend tomorrow. But the tactics which involve today's march cannot be put off. Necessity forces us to make a decision. It is not strange, therefore, that Trade Unionists and Socialists quarrel when one group underestimates the value of the other, and that both Unionist and Socialist turn with rage upon the Syndicalist, when the latter says: "You are wasting your lives. The craft union and the parliamentary party are both bulwarks of capitalism. Let every man lay down his tools and we can lock out the capitalists."

Those who advocate the general strike consider it a panacea. It will solve everything. It is of little consequence whether or not the working class abandon its unions, its parties, its co-operatives, its strike funds, its insurance funds, its press—these things that have been built up by the most stupendous effort and sacrifice—if it will only see that all the working class needs to do to bring reform or revolution is to stop work. Now, to stop work sounds about as simple a program of action as one could imagine. And many men believe that the world could not exist a week if the workers could be induced to try that simple plan. Why, then, bother to organize, to vote, to fill treasuries with money, to build co-operative stores, to buy printing presses, when the entire problem of wage slavery can be instantly solved by the general strike? The argument is seductive. And those who come under its hypnotic influence are impatient of all the tedious, worrisome work of organization. Here is a panacea that makes even labor unnecessary. And, indeed, the general strike acts upon its adherents like a drug. It inflames agitation, but it paralyzes organization.

During the last fifty years the labor movement has developed gigantic organizations of the working class. Approximately 10,000,000 toilers belong to trade unions and about the same number of toilers vote for the Socialist parties. These organizations involve the well-being of not less than 50,000,000 men, women and children. Alongside of the unions and the party, there has also developed a co-operative movement that owns property valued at hundreds of millions of dollars. Labor temples, houses of the people, schools, colleges, theaters, printing plants are rising in a multitude of industrial centers Thousands of weekly papers and hundreds of great dailies have been brought into the world to voice the aims of labor. Miners, dockers, machinists and other laborers have left the pit, the wharf and the factory to enter the Parliaments of Europe to fight there the battle of labor. These are the magnificent accomplishments of the labor movement; yet they seem to impress the Syndicalist as they impress the Anarchist as wholly futile and ineffectual. Indeed the Syndicalist and the Anarchist are almost always found in opposition to the steady, constructive and practical work of organization.

Imagine for instance the effect upon actual organization of some of the cardinal doctrines of the Syndicalists. They advocate low dues, or no dues. They have no use for strike funds, death funds, sick funds, or indeed any form of trade union insurance. They believe that large treasures lead to conservatism, while no treasuries lead to revolutionary action. They oppose the policies of the trade union movement no less bitterly than the form of trade union organization. Nor is their criticism limited to the economic organizations of the working class. They are opposed no less to all forms of parliamentary action. As the trade union leaders are bound to become conservatives, so the political leaders are bound to become reactionaries. The co-operatives also come in for their share of blame. Their sole work, declare the Syndicalists, is to make the working class a small capitalist class, thus helping to perpetuate the system. And opposed to all this creative and constructive work of the modern labor movement, they place the single battle cry, "The General Strike!"

Now, the accomplishments of the modern labor movement have not been the result of accident. The workers have pursued certain definite, well-defined paths of agitation, education and organization. Certain rules or tactics have governed the action of the working class and have been the means of creating a fairly extensive solidarity. The end and aim of the movement has played its part. Without a goal, no direction is possible, but more effectual even than the goal has been the patient and continuous labor of countless agitators and administrators. Amid quarrels and dissensions, in spite of criticism and even violent antagonism, in the very face of all those who were forever shouting that their work led nowhere, the leaders of the Socialist, Trade Union and Co-operative movements have doggedly pursued their great task. It is an historic fact that no action of the enemy has ever seriously troubled the march of the working class. Whether fought or flattered, whether denounced or fondled by the enemy, the movement has gone forward step by step. The chief obstacles in the paths of the labor movement have ever been the quarrels and dissensions that have arisen among the workers themselves.

The Syndicalist of today bears a striking resemblance to what used to be known as the Impossibilist and the career of the Impossibilist is one of the most devious and intricate known to history. Whoever invented the title deserves the name of genius. The Impossibilist is the very essence of inconsistency. At one period he is an Anarchist, at another a fanatical Political Actionist, at still another he is a fanatical Direct Actionist. In this country, the early ones fought industrial action. They urged the workers to abandon their unions and to stop useless and ineffective strikes. At that time they argued that political action alone had revolutionary possibilities. Today the Impossibilists fight Political Action. Nothing but strikes will avail anything. In England, where the workers have developed three forms of struggle, the Trade Union, the Labor party and the Co-operative, all three are opposed by the Impossibilists. They are anti-Trade Union, anti-parliamentary and anti-Co-operative. On the other hand, the Impossibilists of France are anti-parliamentary, but not anti-Trade Union nor anti-Co-operative. In Germany they fight the Socialist party with the same venom with which in Belgium and England they fight the Labor parties. In America, they now fight both the Trade Unions and the Socialist party. It matters not what form of organization the working class adopts, the Impossibilist is found fighting that organization. It seems to be a part of their temperament to dread "the conservation of institutions." The very fact that any work in the labor movement is quiet, persistent and methodical seems to arouse their deepest ire.

It is only for these reasons that their new cry, "The General Strike," has already done, as Guesde says, much harm. "They substitute," as Marx once said, "revolutionary phrases for revolutionary evolution." The general strike idea is not in itself a menace to organization. Men might discuss it calmly and even seriously work toward the day when a general strike might be declared. The idea is only alarming when it is associated with the tactics of vote no more, organize no more, build no more.

Napoleon once declared that an army moves on its belly. For fifty years or more the working class has been forming great battalions of labor. It has been welding powerful weapons of battle. It has been filling its war chests and stocking its commissariat. It has been laying the economic foundation for the coming struggle, and he who threatens the material basis of the movement touches the most sensitive spot in the life of Labor. The workers will at any time argue tolerantly upon the outcome of the battle, upon the various phases of life that may exist in the future; but he who says "vote no more," "organize no more," infuriates the more intelligent, thoughtful and constructive in the working-class movement. The Impossibilists may change their views, as the idlers of another class change their garments, with every change of wind and weather, but the actual builders of the modern labor movement have learned the lesson that Napoleon taught. Anything, therefore, which menaces organization or threatens to undermine the material basis of the movement, menaces the very possibility of effective action.

The Syndicalist utters the words, "the general strike," as a finality. But the Trade Unionist asks, "Well, then what?" Even the most insignificant strike means the beginning of troubles and of problems Organization may seem of little importance in times of peace Leaders, funds and papers may then seem of little consequence. But let war break out, with multitudes of men looking for information, for food and for guidance from their organization, and not getting it. Then what? The problem does not end, it begins with the general strike.

A Resolution That Should Be Acted Upon

THE FIFTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of District Association No. 6 of the Western Federation of Miners, held at Nelson, British Columbia, passed the following resolution by a unanimous vote of the delegates:

"Whereas, The Miners' Magazine is the property of the membership of the Western Federation of Miners and espouses and expounds the principles for which we stand; and,

"Whereas, The greater measure of support we give it, the greater will be its efficiency; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the delegates in attendance at this convention, pledge ourselves to use our influence, not only in our local unions, but in every other way possible, to increase the circulation of our official organ."

The above resolution is to the point, and if only the delegates to the fifteenth annual convention, held at Nelson, British Columbia, will remember the resolution when they return to their respective local unions, the circulation of the official organ will be materially increased throughout British Columbia.

Every local union of the Western Federation of Miners should consider seriously the resolution adopted by the delegates in British Columbia and take such action as will give the Magazine a circulation second to none of the official organs of the labor movement.

The members of the local unions in every mining camp of the West have it within their power to make the Magazine a powerful journal, if they will only resolve to push the official organ by securing subscribers.

There is no valid reason why the Miners' Magazine should not have a large circulation in all the mining camps of the West, and if only a few of the members of local unions will take the necessary steps, the official organ can be made a far more effective weapon to fight the battles of labor.

We trust that every local union throughout the whole jurisdiction of the Western Federation of Miners will give favorable consideration to the resolution unanimously adopted at Nelson, British Columbia.

A Den of Thieves

AT THE RECENT ANNUAL DINNER of the New York Chamber of Commerce, November 21st, Elihu Root said:

"There are hundreds of thousands of people outside the great industrial communities who think you are a den of thieves; there are hundreds of thousands of people who think that the manufacturers of the country are no better than a set of confidence men."

The man who uttered these words is not a demagogue; he is not a radical; he is not an agitator. He is the ablest corporation lawyer in the United States, and so far as intellectual powers go, he is probably as able a man as has appeared in public life since Alexander Hamilton

Continuing, Senator Root told the members of the Chamber of Commerce that the men who understand finance, the bankers and merchants, are "under suspicion. Great bodies of people," he said, "will not accept what they say regarding the subject of finance; they will not accept what the experts say, because they do not believe their motives are honest."

Senator Root was not justifying these suspicions; he was describing the popular state of mind and pleading for a better understanding. He was trying to do in his Chamber of Commerce speech what Governor Wilson was trying to do in his Chicago speech, except that the senator was less tactful and less heedful of the feelings of his audience.

Is Wall Street determined to prove that the popular suspicion to which Senator Root referred is wholly warranted by the facts?

Certainly there is nothing to show that Big Business learned anything from the recent presidential campaign. It is still fighting desperately to retain all its opportunities for privilege and plunder. It has fought the Pujo investigation step of prosperity. It is preparing a new campaign against the democratic program of financial and economic progress. It is shaking the threat of panic before the American people.

There are two courses open to Wall Street's eminent financiers and captains of industry—one of co-operation and one of resistance. If they accept Governor Wilson's invitation to co-operation, all important national problems can be solved with no great interest. But if Wall Street is to unite on a policy of resistance to every reform that touches its pocket, it must except to be branded as "a den of thieves." And it must expect to be dealt with as a den of thieves deserves to be dealt with.—Douglas (Ariz.) International.

The above should be read more than once and given serious thought.

Elihu Root, who is probably one of the ablest lawyers of America, and whose loyalty to trusts and corporations has never been questioned, said a few things before a body of men who are looked upon as giants in the commercial and financial world.

Root did not give expression to such statements with a view of wounding the feelings of his auditors or arousing their indignation, but as a warning that a storm is approaching. Root has not been deaf to the murmurs of rebellion, and he knows that mutterings of discontent may culminate in a revolution, where Justice shall be King.

The International of Douglas, Arizona, has commented on the address of Root, and holds that Big Business has not learned anything from the results of the last national campaign.

The International takes the position that there are two courses open to Wall Street—"one of co-operation and one of resistance." The International contends that if Wall Street accepts the invitation of President-elect Wilson to co-operate that all national problems can be solved.

Let us think for a moment of a President of the United States in partnership with Wall Street, to solve problems that seriously affect ninety millions of people.

Wall Street has been looked upon as a den of pirates and brigands, and yet, it seems that a President-elect making the pretense of believing in democracy, has invited the buccaneers to co-operate with him to solve the problems that confront the victims of trusts and corporations.

Let us pray!

A Caustic Letter

J. STITT WILSON, the mayor of Berkeley, California, was extended an invitation by the Associated Charities of San Francisco to attend a banquet at the Palace Hotel, where the invited guests of the banquet were expected to disgorge themselves of $3 in exchange for the feast. Mayor Wilson wrote the following letter in answer to the invitation:

"City Hall, Berkeley, California, January 29, 1913.—Mr. O. K. Kushing, President of the Associated Charities of San Francisco.—Dear Sir: I beg to thank your committee on entertainment for the invitation to me to be present at the annual banquet of the Associated Charities of the city of San Francisco. I presume that this invitation is sent to me, either because of my interest in the problem of the poor, or because of my official position as mayor of a sister city, whose public charities are more or less linked with those of San Francisco.

At Three Dollars a Plate.

"Your invitation advises me that this banquet of charity workers and sympathizers is to be held in the ballroom of the Palace Hotel, and the price is $3 per cover. The program of the evening—speeches from reverend gentlemen, rabbis and charity workers—is one that would elicit my intellectual interest and stimulate my moral sympathies. But I am led by a sense of propriety and Christian consistency to decline the invitation, and to state to you my reason.

"In the first place the mayor of the city of Berkeley does not receive sufficient salary to dine with the social class that can squander $3 on one meal. The high cost of living and my monthly contributions to exacting trusts and public monopolies leaves me no money for such sybartic living, and I prefer to give this $3 to some needy family. Three dollars will buy three suits of children's underwear or keep a child for a week.

"Your invitation to this banquet of the Associated Charities becomes practically a subtle request to men of moderate means to stay away. In other words, like the vulgar 'charity balls,' this banquet is distinctly a 'class' or 'society' function. Common people, such as the mayor of Berkeley, cannot come through with the price, which, of course, is a mere bagatelle to the rich.

A Pagan Spectacle.

"But the supreme reason which I offer for not accepting your invitation to this banquet is that there is something positively vulgar and ostentatiously pagan in the spectacle of a group of citizens of a twentieth century city sitting down to a $3 banquet, while pictures are being shown displaying the hunger of the poor. As the press describes it, 'charity workers to see at dinner how needy families live;' 'pictures illustrating battle with poverty and sickness in the homes of San Francisco's poor will be shown to the banqueters.'

"I am not a very good Christian. I wish I were. But in the name of Christ, and his hungry people, I enter my protest against the word charity being used in connection with any such function. It is time that people, with an awakened Christian conscience, should cease to dine so ostentatiously with Dives, while Lazarus lies hungry at the gate.

"This picturing of the hunger and misery of the poor to over-fed banqueters becomes the more reprehensible since it is now acknowledged by every social thinker and worker of any importance that these poor are made poor by unjust social and economic conditions. They are victims of an un-Christian and irrational industrial system that robs the people and enriches the exploiters of the people.

A Public Concern.

"If you offer a rebuke to me for publicly declining this invitation, on the ground that if I did not wish to attend I could stay away and keep silent, I reply that if anything under Heaven should be open to the moral sense of the community it is the activities and functions of organized associated charities. The business of such a body in their dealings to the poor, and for the poor, is the business of every human being.

"I am no mere asthetic, and I don't want to be a mere crank, but I feel led, by what seems to me the spirit of Christ, to enter this protest, and I shall gladly repent this letter if I can be intellectually and morally convinced that my ethical and spiritual attitude is discourteous or wrong.

"This in behalf of Lazarus lying at the gate.

"J. STITT WILSON, Mayor of Berkeley."

The above caustic letter of Mayor Wilson must have caused some of the aristocratic celebrities who attend charity banquets to "sit up and take notice." Wilson, in the most courteous and dignified manner, flailed the hypocrites who assembled at a plutocratic hotel to enjoy a high-priced repast, and at the same time make it appear that they had gathered together to ameliorate conditions from which the impoverished suffered.

That element in society that launch banquets in fashionable hotels to discuss ways and means by which the victims of poverty are to be relieved are on the backs of the poor and are not willing to get off.

The work of charity organizations maintained by exploiters and parasites is a farce, and the letter of Wilson is a rebuke to that element, who in the name of charity, but mock the agonies of disinherited slaves.

Mineville Strikers Voluntarily Testify to Cruel Intimidation by "Deputies"

Joseph D. Cannon, Organizer of the Western Federation of Miners. Presents Affidavits Showing How Armed "Guards" Attack Families in Their Homes in Effort to Force the the Men Back Into theMines.

(Special to the Call.)

Mineville, N. Y., Feb. 1.—As there is a well defined plan under way to smother the facts of brutality and murderous assaults being committed by deputies in the employ of Witherbee, Sherman & Co., on the striking miners and their families, and as the farcical investigation, the "findings" of which were reported to Governor Sulzer, shamefully misstate the facts, Joseph D. Cannon, organizer of the Western Federation of Miners, has collected affidavits which show the lawless entry into the strikers' houses and their forcible dragging of the men to the mines. The affidavits were made voluntarily.

Sulzer had previously been informed by Sheriff Poole that the statements of brutality were untrue and submitted several alleged affidavits which tended to show that all was peaceable in the town. The statements which Poole submitted to Sulzer were collected by ex-Constable Fitzgerald, who was dismissed from the office of Constable on charges of graft and conduct unbecoming an officer.

"When Sheriff Poole sent word to the governor to the effect that the statement by me that there were coercion and intimidation used by the deputies to force men to work is false," said Cannon today. "He knows that he is as far from the truth as he was from honor when he selected the grafter Fitzgerald to make the investigation ordered by the governor. Being a deputy sheriff and claiming familiarity with the conditions here as he does, his veracity is not of high standing when he claims to not know anything concerning the grafting for which Fitzgerald was removed.

"The affidavits speak for themselves, and Sheriff Poole and his supporting company lawyers cannot get away from the indictment of him and his associates in and out of the company's office here."

The following affidavits show to what extremes the company plug-uglies go in their campaign of intimidation and violence in the desire to drive the strikers back into the mines and to break the revolt against peonage through a reign of terror.

Threatened Two Women.

Mrs. Helena Markoska and Marianna Dastik, each for herself, being each for herself and severally sworn, deposes and says each for herself, that on the morning of the 24th of January, one William Coffee, foreman at the Witherbee, Sherman & Co., and an officer came to the dwelling house where both these parties live and into the apartments of the said Helena Markoska at the hour of 5 o'clock while the deponents and the others in the house were in bed. The said Coffee having a revolver in his hand and flourishing it about, threatened the occupants that if the men did not go to work they would put them out of the house. And again on the morning of the 25th the same officers came to the said house and forcibly took the husbands of both the said deponents to work.

Eight Armed Men Break In.

Emelia Fieodoruk, being duly sworn, deposed and says that on the 25th of January, early in the morning, while her husband was still in bed, one William Coffee, with seven officers, all of them armed, came to her door and began to knock on the door, which she refused to open, whereupon they began to hammer on it, and deponent fearing they would break it in, opened it, when they began to talk to her, and while she could understand very little of what they said, she gathered that they wanted to force her husband to go to work, or they would be put out of the house. Deponent further says that within the next six weeks she expects to give birth to a child, and the intrusion of strange, violent armed men on her at this time has had the effect of rendering her nervous and hysterical.

Pointed Guns at Woman.

Annie Karos, being duly sworn, deposes and says that on Jauary 24, 1913, being the day after the strike in Mineville, New York, went into effect, two officers claiming the authority of law, and in the employ of Witherbee, Sherman & Co., made forcible entrance into her home, telling her and her husband that if he did not go to work they would immediately put them out of their home, and by threats and intimidation they did force her husband to go to work, and that again on the evening of the same day, several officers in the same day, four of them being mounted and about eight on foot, came to her home, and some of them made a search of the house. Deponent ordered the men to leave her home, whereupon at least five of them pulled guns and pointed them at the head of deponent and threatened that if their wishes were not carried out they would be punished. Again on the morning of January 25th, more officers in the same employ came to her home and found one man on the porch of the house whom they tried to take to work or to jail, whereupon many women rescued the man from the officers. The officers then discharged their guns and made sundry threats of what dreadful things they would do if the men did not go to work, whereupon one of the officers pointed and pressed a gun against her belly, threatening to shoot if they did not let them take that man with them.

Facts Known to Poole.

"The facts set forth in the foregoing affidavits are known to Sheriff Poole and to Mr. Owens and to Mr. Stokes, the Witherbee, Sherman & Co. attorneys, who conducted the 'investigation,'" said Cannon, "and if the governor accepts the findings of these corporation agents, he will only do so because he does not know better. On his conduct in this case will be determined whether he is in the control of these iron mine owners, as was his predecessor; whether this administration will be used to shield these operators, and whether the Department of Labor shall be merely a sepulcher for the buried complaints of grafter and thoroughly exploited workers, as it was during the regime of Dix.

"Sheriff Poole claims that he deputized all officers commissioned here since the inception of the strike," continued Cannon, "and that he does not know of any who were deputized while intoxicated. To give him an inkling of what is really doing in the field where he claims sole activity, I give another affidavit. This is merely one instance of the force under which the people of this community must suffer."

Drunken Man Made a Deputy.

Daniel W. Haves, being duly sworn, deposes and says that on the 24th day of January, between the hours of 6 and 7 p. m., he was on his way by the Memorial building, where he met one K. Jiner and three other young fellows. Said Jiner was under the influence of liquor and almost helpless, and he attempted to quiet him and stop him from swearing, as there were five men with guns and clubs near by who would arrest him and throw him into jail, as they were acting as police for Witherbee, Sherman & Co. He told me that "they could all go to h—," that he "did not give a —— for any of them," and, as we passed the building in which the jail is located, we met one Jack Howe, a deputy police officer for the Port Henry Iron Ore Company. Jiner took a bottle of whisky out of his pocket and offered me a drink, which I declined. He then asked Howe if he wanted a drink, and Howe replied, "Yes, by G—, I'm cold," whereupon he took the proffered drink. Jiner then, instead of coming home with me, went to the Memorial building. His condition was such that he was just able to walk. Deponent further says that in a couple of hours after this, when he got home, he was informed that Jiner had been commissioned as an officer and was armed with a gun and club, and the following morning I met him and he had the badge of the officer on his coat.

"There are dozens of these affidavits," said Cannon, "and it is possible to get them by the hundreds. They will be collected and published, and, until there is relief from the damnable conditions in this place, the red glare of publicity will be kept turned on to the 'benevolent philanthropy' of the hypocritical grafters in Essex county."

Found Extortion and Intimidation.

The strikers declare that the following clipping from the Rochester Herald fully verifies their claim of violence and intimidation:

Albany, Jan. 15.—A woman first brought to light the shocking industrial conditions alleged to exist in the iron mines of Witherbee, Sherman & Co., at Mineville, Essex county, where peonage in its worst form is said to enslave between 1,000 and 1,200 workers, and which led to Senator A. J. Griffin's determination to bring the matter before the Senate.

Frances A. Kellar, chief investigator of the State Department of Labor, went to Mineville on May 17th last, and upon her return told of conditions that equaled in horror the worst that were discovered in the Florida turpentine camps. Intimidation, cruelty and extortion were among her findings.

Miss Kellar demanded the resignation of Justices of the Peace John Navin of Mineville and Fred Ring of Port Henry, whom she charged with swindling foreign laborers by fake complaints. They have not resigned, and suit is to be brought against them in the Supreme Court.

She also learned that it was the common practice for workers to be forced to pay a bonus to Superintendent Dugan for the privilege of living in miserable shacks of Witherbee, Sherman & Co. This was in addition to their rent, which was exorbitant. Fifteen of these men had paid a total of $785 to Dugan.. Twelve other men had paid $211 to Foreman George Hughes to save themselves from being discharged and twelve others had paid Hughes' brother Mike $43 for their jobs. Two of these men paid $100 each for jobs as machine runners.

Albany, Feb. 1.—John Williams, state commissioner of Labor, today received a report of conditions at Mineville, Essex county, and turned it over to Governor William Sulzer. It will be made public Monday.

Commissioner Williams ordered the examination made at the request of Governor Sulzer, who was informed by Joseph D. Cannon, organizer of the Western Federation of Miners, that conditions in Mineville are intolerable, as laborers were being mistreated by the peace authorities.

Progressive Legislation Proposed in Nevada

MR. DAVIS of Nye county, Nevada, has introduced the following bills in the Assembly of Nevada, and entertains a strong hope of their passage:

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE SPRINKLING OF DRY ORES IN MINES OF NEVADA AND SPRINKLING ATTACHMENTS TO DRILLS OPERATED BY POWER IN THE MINES OF NEVADA IN THE INTEREST OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

The People of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly do enact as follows:

Section 1. In all mines in the state of Nevada, where dry ores are handled and mined, there shall be attached at the first or second set of timbers at the bottom of every ore chute a sprinkling device so arranged as to be capable of operation by the workmen loading cars from such chute and shall sprinkle all dry ores. Each and every mine corporation, company, owner or operator shall install such sprinkling device within three months from and after the passage and approval of this act.

Sec. 2. In all the mines of the state of Nevada a sprinkling device shall be attached to all drills operated by air or electricity, which said sprinkling device shall be adapted to control the dust arising from the operation of such drills, and the owner or operator shall supply water therefor at point of use. All mining corporations, companies, owners or operators shall install such sprinkling device upon such drills within three months from and after the passage and approval of this act.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the state mining inspector to inspect all of the sprinkling devices provided for in this act, and such said mining inspector shall inspect and approve or condemn if such device is inadequate, all such sprinkling devices, and if said mining inspector shall condemn any such sprinkling device, he shall notify, in writing, any such corporation, company, owner or operator of the property in which such sprinkling device is condemned, such corporation, company or owner or operator shall within thirty days install another and suitable sprinkling device which shall also be subject to inspection by the said mining inspector as herein above provided.

Sec. 4. Any corporation, company, owner or operator of any mine in this state, who shall neglect, fail or refuse to install the sprinkling device herein above provided for within the time herein above provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in the sum of not less than one hundred dollars and not more than five hundred dollars, for each and every infraction of this act.

Sec. 5. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

AN ACT TO PROHIBIT THE GRANTING OF INJUNCTIONS IN STRIKE TROUBLE UPON EX PARTE APPLICATIONS AND TO PROVIDE FOR JURY TRIALS IN ALL CASES IN WHICH VIOLATIONS OF INJUNCTIONS SHALL BE CHARGED.

The People of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. No injunction or other order of court to restrain the liberty of laborers and workmen who are out on a strike, or who shall declare their intention to go out on a strike, shall be issued except by a court or presiding judge thereof, and in all such cases at least five days' notice of such application shall be given to the adverse parties, except that where the plaintiff shall satisfy the court that overt acts of violence or unlawful boycotting have already been committed, the court may in its discretion issue an order prohibiting the further commission of such overt acts of violence or unlawful boycotting until the time of hearing fixed for the application for such injunction.

Sec. 2. If in any case arising under the provision of the next preceding section any workmen shall be charged with contempt for violating any injunction or court order, he shall, upon demand, be entitled to a trial by jury under the same rule and proceedings which govern the trial of felonies.

Sec. 3. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

M. J. Scanlan, a member of Tonopah Miners' Union, and who has attended several annual conventions of the Western Federation of Miners, has introduced the following bills in the Senate of Nevada, and Senator Scanlan feels hopeful that they will receive favorable consideration:

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE VENTILATION OF MINES AND ALL UNDERGROUND WORKINGS IN THE STATE OF NEVADA.

The People of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. All persons, corporations, owning or operating mines in this State in which natural ventilation fails to supply at least 150 cubic feet of air for each person working in such mine shall provide and maintain the necessary artificial means of capacity and power capable of supplying the ventilation required by this Act and shall maintain a sufficient volume of air, not less per minute than 150 cubic feet for each person working in such mine: measured at the intake and distributed so as to expel or dilute and render harmless all explosive, poisonous or noxious gases.

Sec. 2. At each mine in the State where the ventilation is not continuous, it shall be started a sufficient length of time prior to the appointed time for each person or persons working therein to enter, to clear the mine of all explosive, poisonous or noxious gases, and shall be kept in operation a sufficient length of time after the appointed time for employés to leave their working places, for all persons to be out of the mine.

Sec. 3. Any person, corporation, owner or operator of any mine in this State who fails, refuses or neglects to comply with the provisions of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars for each infraction of this Act.

Sec. 4. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE EMPLOYED ELECTORS OPPORTUNITIES TO VOTE.

The People of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. No person entitled to vote at any election held in this State shall, upon the day of such election, be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, except such establishments as may lawfully conduct their business on a legal holiday.

Sec. 2. Every person entitled to vote at any such election held in this State who is employed in such an establishment as may lawfully conduct its business on a legal holiday and on election day, must be given on election day a leave of absence for a period of three consecutive hours after the opening and before the closing of the polls in the voting precinct or town in which he is entitled to vote, if he shall make application for leave of absence during such period.

Sec. 3. Any owner, superintendent or overseer, or other person, in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, who employs or permits to be employed, any person therein on the day of any election held in this State in violation of the provisions of section 1 of this Act, or who violates the provisions of section 2, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than twenty-five days nor more than fifty days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 4. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

AN ACT TO AMEND AN ACT CREATING THE OFFICE OF INSPECTOR OF MINES, FIXING HIS DUTIES AND POWERS; PROVIDING FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A DEPUTY AND FIXING THE COMPENSATION OF BOTH; REQUIRING CERTAIN REPORTS AND NOTICES OF ACCIDENTS TO BE MADE TO SAID INSPECTOR AND DEFINING THE DUTIES OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND DISTRICT ATTORNEYS IN RELATION TO SUITS INSTITUTED BY THE INSPECTOR OF MINES, APPROVED MARCH 24, 1909.

The People of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Section 4 of an Act creating the office of Inspector of Mines; fixing his duties and powers; providing for the appointment of a deputy and fixing the compensation of both; requiring certain reports and notices of accidents to be made to said Inspector, and defining the duties of the Attorney General and District Attorneys in relation to suits instituted by the Inspector of Mines, approved March 24, 1909, being section 4201 of the Revised Laws of Nevada, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the Inspector of Mines at least once a year, to visit in person each mining county in the State of Nevada and examine all such mines therein as in his judgment, may require the examination for the purpose of determining the condition of such mines as to safety, and said Inspector of Mines shall post or cause to be posted, in a prominent place upon the gallows frame or other superstructure at the collar of the main workings of such mine, a copy of his report of the condition of the said mine within twenty days from the date of such examination, and it shall be the duty of the Inspector of Mines to collect information and statistics relative to mines and mining and the mineral resources of the State, and to collect, arrange and classify, mineral and geographical specimens found in this State and to forward the same to the State School of Mines, and it shall be the duty of the Inspector of Mines to establish a uniform code of signals.

Sec. 2. Section 17 of said Act, being section 4214 of the Revised Laws of Nevada, shall be amended to read as follows:

Sec. 17. All hoisting machinery using steam, electricity, gasoline or hydraulic motive power, for the purpose of hoisting or lowering into metalliferous mines employés and material, shall be equipped with an indicator to be placed in plain view of engineer. In every mine where electric signals are used, there shall also be installed a bell-cord and signal bells, which bell-cords shall be so installed as to be always within reach of the cage while operated in the shamt thereof. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

AN ACT RELATING TO CONDUCT OF MEMBERS OF LABOR UNIONS DURING STRIKES, LOCKOUTS OR TRADE DISPUTES, PROVIDING FOR PEACEFUL PICKETING.

The People of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. It shall be lawful for any person or persons acting either on their own behalf or on behalf of a labor union or other association of individuals, incorporated or unincorporated, in contemplation of any strike, lockout or trade dispute, to attend for any of the following purposes at or near a house or place where a person resides or works, or carries on his business, or happens to be:

First—For the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information.

Second—For the purpose of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working.

Sec. 2. An agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation of the furtherance of a strike, lockout or trade dispute shall not be ground for an action, if such an act when committed by one person would not be ground for an action.

Sec. 3. An action shall not be brought against a labor union or other association aforesaid, for the recovery of damages sustained by any person or persons by reason of the action of a member or members of such labor union or other association aforesaid.

Sec. 4. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

NEED OF THE CAPITALIST.

"My son," said the distracted millionaire, "you should pay more attention to your studies. Some day you will have great responsibilities as head of this wealthy house."

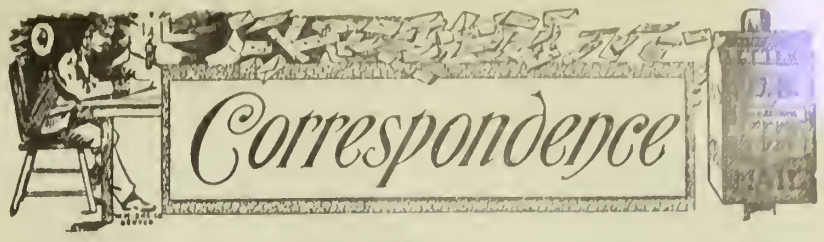
"That's all right, dad, I can hire a typist for about thirty shillings a week, who will have to know how to spell, or I will sack her. Then I can get a manager for about £5 a week to see that no one beats me or shirks his work, and there won't be much of anything for me to do, as I see it."

"But, my son, your position in life will call for the highest grade of culture, don't you see?"

"To be sure, I do, and I can also hire that. I know a lot of university graduates who are grafters who will be pleased to furnish all I can use for $300 a year."

"My boy, you are hopeless."

"No, dad, only practical."—Socialist, Melbourne.



$25.00 REWARD.

A reward of $25.00 will be paid by Mrs. Linnie Lankford for information leading to the present address of her father, Duran Cheesman, who left Centerville, Iowa, about thirty six years ago. He is now about 64 years of age, and it was rumored that a man answering his name resided in Idaho Springs, Colorado, a short time ago. Anyone knowing his present whereabouts will please write to George Duckworth, Centerville, Iowa. 4t

LABOR FACTS AND FIGURES.

A veritable arsenal of facts and figures is The National Socialist Handbook No. 2, just off the press. This pamphlet is "chuck full" of valuable information and statistics for the student of Socialism and the labor movement. The handbook was compiled by W. J. Ghent, the well-known statistician, of Washington.

It is expected that Handbook No. 2 will receive the same large sale which Handbook No. 1 received. The latest handbook has many advantages over the former. It contains more labor statistics based on the 1910 census than can be found in any similar work now on the market. In it will also be found many interesting tables on railroads and farming.

National Socialist Handbook No. 2 is published by The National Socialist, 423 G Street N. W., Washington, D. C., and sells for 10 cents a copy, postage prepaid.

SOCIALIST VOTE OF THE WORLD.

Based on the table (1910) issued by the International Socialist Bureau. Revised by W. J. Ghent, January, 1913:

Country	Year.	Vote.	Total.	Soc. Seats.	Pct.
Finland	1911	321,000	200	87	43.50
Sweden	1911	170,299	230	64	27.82
Germany	1912	4,238,919	397	110	27.71
Belgium	1912	483,241	186	40	21.51
Denmark	1910	98,721	114	24	21.06
Luxembourg	1909	(?)	53	10	18.87
Norway	1912	126,000	123	23	18.70
Austria	1911	1,060,000	516	82	15.31
France	1910	1,106,047	597	75	12.56
Italy	1909	338,885	508	44	8.66
Switzerland	1911	105,000	189	16	8.46
Holland	1909	82,494	100	7	7.00
Great Britain	1910	373,645	670	41	6.12
Russia	1912	200,000	442	13	3.62
Greece	1910	(?)	177	4	2.26
Turkey	1908	(?)	280	6	2.14
Argentina	1912	18,844	120	2	1.66
Servia	1912	9,000	160	2	1.25
Bulgaria	1911	13,000	213	1	.47
Spain	1910	40,000	404	1	.25
United States	1912	930,000	435	..	..
Roumania	1912	2,057	(?)	..	..

In addition: Senators, Belgium, 15; Denmark, 4; Sweden, 12. State legislators: Austria, 31; Germany, 224; United States, 21. In the French chamber of deputies are also 34 "independent" Socialists. In the Bulgarian chamber are also five representatives known as Socialists, elected through a coalition with a peasant party.

The vote of the United States includes: Socialist party, 901,000; Socialist Labor party, 29,000. The vote of Great Britain includes: Independent Labor party, 370,802; Social Democratic party, 2,843. The Canadian, Turkish and Greek vote, as well as that of Luxembourg, is not available. The figures of the Australian and New Zealand labor parties are omitted as not being strictly Socialist.

As the term of the one Socialist representative in the United States expires on March 4, and as the figures for the latest election are included, no representation is given in the table.

The popular vote of Belgium of 1910 is retained above, because in the election of 1912 it is impossible to separate the Liberal and Socialist vote. In twenty-three districts the Socialists and Liberals voted the same ticket, on the issue of franchise reform. The number of Socialist deputies is based on the election of 1912.

WHAT WOMEN ADMIRE IN MEN.

Agnes Thecla Fair.

Every man would like to have the friendship of a womanly woman and what is more he wishes to retain such friendship because it is worth more than pieces of pop bottles or rings of gold. Women dislike a show of artificiality. The man with a ring on his finger seldom appeals to a woman of brains, because of the fact he has nothing in his head, and rings are but a relic of barbarism.

She knows that cleanliness does not consist in white collars, for as a rule men who are all dressed up to their neck seldom take a bath, and usually have dirty minds.

They spend most of their leisure hours standing in front of a cigar store with a scab-made cigarette in their mouth, oogling women and girls.

Bye the bye, most all cigarettes are made by scabs or child labor.

Women admire men who have noble characters, whose whole life record can prove their kindness to women and little children.

Courage is a quality men admire in women and that women like to find in men, the kind most common should be spelled "curage" as real courage is as rare as radium.

Women like the unselfish man and he in the last analysis wins out over the selfish fellow every time.

Kindness is the most admirable trait of character in any human being and blazes the way for one into the most intellectual circles (that is among thinkers) and those who have been to college or write professor after their name are barred, because they are as a rule scabbing the monkey family out of existence by their senseless chatter.

Women who are of an affectionate nature like the man who gives largely of his caresses and these are more important than dresses.

We sadly need in our life today deeper and richer affection and less sex.

Many men and women exhaust their finer qualities, their inner selves in sex. Others live so much to themselves they bore each other after a few years of friendship and wedded life.

Life is one continuous honey moon for those who are big enough of mind and clean of body, who serve their fellowman instead of being served by them.

Servants, like the "Sissy" in male attire, are no more.

The woman of today is very exacting. She demands, first, cleanliness of mind and body, then the heart qualities and last, but not least, the power of self-control, which, as Emerson says, is the key to Heaven on earth.

Whether he eats with his knife or says "Oh! Damn," makes very little difference to the woman worth while.

For while these things may offend the pious brigands, the thinking woman knows all true culture ever comes from the common people. The only thing the aristocracy has ever given the workers is disease and that they can take back any time they want to.

AGNES THECLA FAIR.

CONDITION OF THE MINES IN BINGHAM, UTAH.

We have repeatedly been told through the capitalistic Guggenheim-owned newspapers of this state that the Utah Copper Co. was running normal again since the strike. Even the dirty excuse of a newspaper—the patent-inside sheet that is published in this camp—came out with flaring head lines a couple of weeks ago and gave us the startling information that the Utah Copper Co. is shipping 20,000 tons of ore per day and that the strike is a thing of the past. Last week the monthly statement from the Uath Copper Co. office for the month of December also appeared in the papers, but it told a different story. The production of copper for that month was only 175,000 pounds in excess of the month before, or in round figures, 5,900,000 pounds of copper for the month. Every monthly statement that has been sent out from the company's office has been accompanied by the assurance that the next month will be better than the previous one, but when we analyze the December report we find that the Utah Copper Co. did not do as well in the month of December as they did in November. As the month of November has only thirty days and December has thirty-one days, the excess should have been more than 175,000 pounds of copper for the month of December. Consequently, we prove that the Utah Copper did not hold its own, not mentioning the irreparable damage done to the mine itself. The smaller mines are even worse off, as they are getting their mines utterly ruined by the unskilled "riff-raff" they have accumulated from the four corners of the earth who came here to take the places of the good old sturdy miners that knew the treacherous porphyry rock of this district and who can take advantage thereof in time and in such shape as to protect themselves and their fellow miners. We hear every day of accidents of men being taken out of the various mines with broken limbs, cracked skulls, broken backs and often death outright, caused by the unsafe condition that the mines are in through the incompetent labor that is being employed.

We are told that in the U. S. mine they have three Greeks to every machine, and yet, the work is progressing slowly that in order to accomplish anything they have hired eighteen white (?) men to act as bosses over the Greeks.

In the Ohio Copper mine we are told they are so short of ore that they are running waste that has accumulated in the old stopes out to the mill, just to make a showing. That we are correctly informed is proven by the action of the price of the stock, which has dropped down to 85 cents a share. The stockholdres of that mine who recently put up one dollar a share assessment ought to be pleased to know how their good money is being spent by Mr. Heinze and his crowd. He who posed as a friend of labor in another state, but now he does not hesitate to spend the widow's hard-earned dollars on five-dollar-a-day deputies and degenerated scabs, just to beat organized labor and to stand in with the Guggenheim interests, the blood-suckers of the whole nation, who would rather spend milions than give labor one penny of the just dues and compensation it is entitled to.

We are informed that the Utah Apex mine is in such bad shape that the men had to be called out from the mine for fear of a repetition of the disaster that happened in the U. S. mine recently, when four men were buried and killed by the caving of the stope. It has been freely predicted by people who are acquainted with the conditions in the mine that there will be a holocaust there unless some precautions are taken very soon.

The Highland Boy mine has now been working with scabs for three months and sending its ores over to the Tooele side ,but it has not accumulated enough ores to run one furnace for a month.

It is an expensive lesson these thick-headed mine managers are learning. It may work a little hardship on us temporarily, but we are gaining a victory slowly but surely from which future generations will be benefited immensely.

"EVERY TUB MUST STAND ON ITS OWN BOTTOM."

J. G. Schwalm.

The above appeared as the closing line of an editorial in a local paper a week ago, which took to task some of the statements made by a leading union man regarding the needs of the man who has only his labor to offer in the struggle for existence. It was set forth that if a man had character, he could get all the backing he wanted. I think the expression is plainly misleading, because there are men of the best character and of undoubted skill by the thousand and hundred thousand who can not even get a job or position to work, let alone backing to start farming or a business enterprise. The editor did not go to the class of men that are in the greatest need of help. He makes excuses and thinks that men can coin their character like a tailor makes a garment or a painter selects his colors. It has been the habit of people to regard those who are not thrifty or who have not accumulated a bunch of money or property as unworthy and responsible for their poverty. But it is becoming pretty evident that people are not rich or poor according to their love of man or charitable disposition or of their skill, knowledge or sobriety, but that like the color of their hair, riches and poverty is a matter entirely of conditions which are accidental and not determinative. Men are good, bad or indifferent by nature and so they are rich, poor and of every variety of condition, not from choice, but as victimes and peers of an inevitable fate, which if they had the power they might regulate, but not having the power to overcome they must submit and suffer or enjoy according to their destiny.

If a man has health and skill and a job he can work, and if a man has character and some one with a useless surplus of money is so disposed, he can get backing; but what about the feeble, the unskilled and the man without character?

If we could with some super-knowledge select our capacities and if those who are weak in mind and body could be cunning and strong by the magic of a wish, then it might be said of them that they were at fault if they were weak and deficient. But since strength and weakness are not of our making but the result of conditions over which we have no control, we are by no means the masters of our destiny, but like a straw in a stream, the victim of conditions. As to "tubs standing on their own bottom"—the tank has a great advantage over the common tub, and just as absolutely as tubs are not of their own making or responsible as to whether they stand, lean or fall, so with man.

As to the idea of "misspent youth," one might as well speak of misspent showers, or misspent religion and politics—matters shaped by the course of events entirely beyond personal control.

J. P. Morgan is as truly an accident as is the blind-born babe or the seven-foot giant, and you and I are what our environment has made us. Character is, then, a matter of geography, of race, of conditions, and not of choice. This being the case, the "tub" standing on its bottom is entitled to not a whit more of credit or praise than the tub standing on its top.

In the jungle and savage state of life the law of each for himself is the only way, but in our time the principle "each for all and all for each," is becoming to be a widely accepted standard. The blind, the sick and insane are not left to "stand on their own bottom," and it is as stupid to say that an untrained man should be as efficient in the battle for wealth and character as to say that an untrained or sick man could win a Marathon. What is a man to do when he has neither character, money or employment? The jungle law says let him starve, and if he will not starve but rob his neighbor, then put him in prison at hard labor. Is it not possible that if the state had given him the necessary things for life—an education and an income from a useful occupation, he would have escaped the temptation of robbing his neighbor and the punishment and shame of a convict? It is evident that as the true paternity of the family must provide for the weak as well as for the strong, so the administration of society, if it is civil and humane, must provide for the deficient and improvident under its control. The law of each for all and all for each, and not each for himself, is the basis upon which all truly civil and humane improvement must be founded.

Not what a man may grasp and hoard, but what service he renders, is the measure of character, and nobility and some time the standard of worth will be neither strength, skill or cunning; but faithfulness and the wages of prince and pauper will be according to the number of hours or days he carries water, and not to the swiftness of his feet or the largeness of his buckets.

POETICAL

"WHY?"

H. L. Allen, Butte, Montana.

Why don't the waiters in a café put an oyster in the stew?
Why don't these self-same waiters never cut the bread in two?
What makes him fill your butter dish about the time you're through?
What makes him say, "We're out of fish, will not a beefsteak do?"

What makes a politician whoop and holler 'bout the flag?
When he well knows and we know, too, he'd holler for a rag
If he thought by thusly doing, we'd bite at the same old gag,
An elect him to an office where he could pocket all the "swag?"

What makes the daily papers lie on every page you read?
What makes 'em set up head lines, saying "all the slaves are freed?"
The Democratic papers told us that "Wilson's all we need,"
And the Republicans swore up and down, Taft's was the only creed.

What makes the butcher weigh his hand when you go to buy a steak?
He knows and so do we know, that his weighing is a fake.
If the weight of meat we guessed with him, we'd have an even break,
But he always somehow gets our dough; in so doing takes the cake.

What makes a tailor smile and say, "It surely fits you fine,"
When you've only got a "forty" chest and the coat's cut "forty-nine?"
He pats your back, buys you a drink—both only cost a dime;
And says to Ikey, "Vat a choke; it really was a crime."

What makes a "selling plater" run just like a thoroughbred
Today, and on the morrow "lose a slow one by a head?"
And why does "horsie's" owner bet on another plug instead?
Can you answer, Mr. Sucker? Do you see now how you're bled?"

Yes, the politician, butcher, tailor, horseman—all have laughed.
They've got a smile on them right now like "pre-election" Taft.
Do you want these questions answered? You all who have been gaffed—
Well, then, my friend, the answer's this: G-R-A-F-T.

THE WORLD WILL.

Covington Hall.

Hear me, ye who sit in purple splendor 'round old Mammon's throne!
Hear me, all ye sons of Moloch, ye who make the race to mourn!
Hear me, too, ye pand'ring statesmen guarding where their black flag waves!
Hear me, all ye hireling teachers, all ye priesthoods who have sold
Truth, the Holy Spirit, and have turned Love's glowing words to gold!
Hear me, all ye House of Mammon, all who bend at Moloch's shrine,
We, the workers, soon are coming in a fury all divine!

Heart a-flame and by love driven, nation-parted now no more
We are gath'ring for the battle that the seers foretold of yore;
From all peoples we are coming, far and wide the world around,
And the fight shall not be ended 'till the last slave's freedom found,
There shall be, when we have finished, for all children home and hearth
And the songs of happy mothers shall be heard throughout the earth;
There shall be no fallen women, there shall be no broken men,
There shall be no homeless outcasts on the broad earth's bosom then!

All the steel that now surrounds you, naked-handed we shall break;
All the laws that now protect you, these as nothing we shall make;
All the words of your false prophets unto you shall be as dust;
And the spider seal the temples where your stricken idols rust;
All your gilded, glitt'ring savagery our hands shall sweep away,
And the maidens ye have ruined shall demand of you their pay;
All your monstrous art shall perish from the earth's insulted plain,
All your reeking hovel cities shall go back to hell again!

There shall be no king above us, there shall be no slave below,
There, in Labor's grand Republic, only freedom we shall know!
We are gathering, we are coming, far and wide the world around,
Truth, the north star of our legions—all the earth our battle ground!
Arming, coming in love-anger, marching forward by its light,
Coming, coming hungry-hearted for the long expected fight!
Coming, coming from our thralldom, coming victors over all!—
We have heard the World Will speaking, we have heard the Race-Soul call!

"NULLIS VERBIS."

William E. Hansen, Butte, Montana.

"Oh, celibate priest, how do you know
There's a Heaven above or a Hell below?
Why do you preach submission to me,
Command me to pray on bended knee,
And ask of the so-called Father in Heaven,
That a crust and water to me be given
To quench my thirst and my hunger still,
And never lose faith in that Father's will?
You say, 'If my cross be heavy here,'
My crown will be brighter 'over there'—
Your lying lips say, 'God wills it so';
Enslavers of mankind, 'How do ye know?'

"You suffer no hunger, you feel no cold;
You gather and garner sweat-covered gold
To further enslave, enmesh, ensnare—
And say to the ignorant dupes, 'Beware'—
We are the Vicars of God on earth,
We must rule you from the hour of birth;
In our hands is the power given
To doom you to Hell or dole out Heaven.
'God wills you to suffer, starve and slave,
And after this—a shallow grave'—
But—'trust in your priest, have faith in God,
After you're planted under the sod.'

"Perhaps, there's Heaven and wings to fly,
But don't expect it until you die;
But we, your priests, as we kneel and bow,
Have all the good things here and now;
We do not bank on this 'land of bliss,'
So we get and keep what we can in this;
But you must suffer, labor and give
That we, the Vicars of God, may live
And clothe our bodies in silk and lace,
When we gaze on the 'Crucified Savior's face';
And while we profess to fast and pray—
We sing this Litany, 'Pay fools—Pay.'

"Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes,
Their rattle is sweeter than vesper chimes;
Your toll you take when life begins,
And while life lasts for remission of sins;
And then, when life is over and past,
The souls of the dupes in limbo are cast,
Until the last dollar is paid for 'Mass'—
No one can escape your greedy class.
'Purgatory'—by priestcraft made—
The most valued asset in your trade—
'Tell me—"Vicar of God"—what do you know,
Of Heaven above—or Hell below?'

"Hell is real and Hell is here,
Whenever one of your ilk is near—
Ye suck the marrow from Labor's bones,
Your hearts are as soft as paving stones.
As selfish and narrow as is your creed,
So great and grasping is your greed.
The ignorant know, for the poor dupes feel
The mighty weight of your iron heel.
When you stand at God's judgment bar,
And your dupes are gathered anear and far,
What will you do then—what will you say—
If there is a God and a judgment day?

TOAST TO THE LADIES.

We are indebted to the Irish World for the following exquisite toast of Captain J. W. Crawford, poet-scout of the west. The gem is surely worth preserving.

Some time ago in Boston at a banquet, one of the young ladies passed a glass of wine across the table to him with the request that he "drink a toast to the ladies." The poet-scout's hand and voice trembled as he said, after taking the wine from the jeweled hand and looking into the laughing blue eyes of the young lady:

"Miss, this is a difficult task you have given me, but a soldier's duty is first to obey orders, and I shall try to drink a toast to woman—not in that, however, which may bring her husband reeling home to abuse where he should love and cherish—send her sons to drunkards' graves, and perhaps her daughters to lives of shame. No, not in that, but rather in God's life-giving water, pure as her chastity, clear as her intuitions, bright as her smile, sparkling as the laughter of her eyes, strong and sustaining as her love. In the crystal water I will drink to her that she remain queen regent in the empire she has already won, grounded as the universe in love, built up and enthroned in the homes and hearts of the world. I will drink to her, the full-blown flower of creation's morning, of which man is but the bud and blossom to her, who in childhood clasps our little hands and teaches us the first prayer to the great All Father; who comes to us in youth with good counsel and advice, and who, when our feet go down into the dark shadows, smooths the pillows of death, as none other can do; to her who is the flower of flower, the pearl of pearls. God's last but God's best gift to man—woman, peerless, pure, sweet, royal woman—I drink your health in God's own beverage, cold sparkling water."—Exchange.

INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE.

The idea of compulsory arbitration of labor disputes has cropped out among Mr. Gompers' associates in the Civic Federation, and he has been moved to renew his condemnation of legislation to interfere with the right of the workers to strike.

We can imagine that Mr. Gompers, who is disposed to look upon the strike as the only effective weapon that the workers can invoke in the class struggle, did not simulate the distress that he showed when he denounced with spirit the suggestion that strikes should be outlawed.

There really was little occasion for Mr. Gompers' heated denunciation of the "dilettantes and faddists" of the Civic Federation who want Congress or the Legislatures of the several states to compel the workers and the owners of industry to arbitrate.

Involuntary servitude is prohibited by the federal constitution. It is true that the constitution may be interpreted, but until the Supreme Court reverses the Federal Court of Appeals, which dissolved the Jenkins injunction on the ground that it sought to enslave the trainmen of the Northern Pacific, compulsory arbitration will be under the ban of the constitution.

Even if there were no constitutional prohibition of slavery, it would be extremely difficult to enforce a compulsory arbitration law in event of a strike of any magnitude. It was Burke, we believe, who said that "you can't indict a people," and it was Carl Marx who observed that the workingmen "have nothing to lose but their chains."

Australia's experience with compulsory arbitration gives no warrant for the fear that the workers will be enslaved. It operated successfully as long as the capitalists, who can be fined and the fines collected, refused to abide by the arbitration court's decrees, but when the workers became dissatisfied with the decisions, it was disclosed that the compulsory feature was not as effective as the author of "A Land Without Strikes" had assumed upon insufficient data.

If the worker will exercise his right to strike at the ballot box with the same unity of purpose that he strikes in wage disputes, he needn't fear that he will be forced into voluntary servitude, though there may be occasion for the leisure classes to be concerned lest, in such event, it may become necessary for them to be identified with some useful occupation.—Milwaukee Leader.

POIGNANT THRUSTS.

An Italian proverb runs: "He who spins has one shirt. He who spins not has several."

Future historians will record as the joke of the twentieth century the howl of capitalists against the "tyranny" of wage slaves.

Truth is the key of enchantment; it opens all doors that lead to freedom.

When the cause is found the remedy is near.

We know the root cause of poverty is production for private profit.

In ever-increasing numbers the people are recognizing that the remedy is collective control for the common good.

Capitalists become the "upper class" by mounting the backs of the workers.

Crime will remain so long as poverty, misery and unemployment last.

Falsehood has no such foe as truth; darkness no enemy so potent as light; liberty no such friend as Socialism.

Socialism means brotherhood; capitalism means fratricide.

More food per capita is produced than ever before; still the struggle among the wage earners for a bare existence is as fierce as ever.

Labor is able to produce more and better things, luxuries even, than it did twenty years ago, but Labor is fleeced of a greater proportion of the things it produces than it was twenty years ago.

The fault with wages nowadays is that the individuals who pay them pay short, while numbers of workers don't get any wages at all.

One of capitalism's excuses for war is that it provides employment.

When next you hear that argument, remind the user that burglary also provides employment.

One thinker says the matter with the poor is their poverty.

They suffer, not from original sin, but from contemporary sin.

Of the things that make for happiness, the love of books takes a front place.

A book, unlike any other friend, will wait, not only upon the hour, but upon the mood.

Christ was more severe on sins of greed than sins of passion.

The worker is now the slave of machinery.

The important thing is to make machinery the slave of all men, and so banish brutal toil.

Humanity can never make intellectual and spiritual progress when the greater portion of its existence is devoted to the struggle for a crust—a quite necessary struggle.

Socialism will deliver humanity from the dead-level of capitalism, which places 95 per cent. of the population on the dead-level of the daily struggle for a crust.

Under Socialism, none will loaf on rents, profits, interest, dividends, white-slave traffic, counter-lunches, etc.

It will be either work—or starve.—Maoriland Worker.

WHY THE WORKERS ARE POOR.

Why it is that those who create wealth are poverty stricken, while those who create poverty are wealth stricken may be seen by the following table showing approximately the number of idlers and useless parasites that labor must feed, house, clothe, and entertain under this crazy, competitive system of living. It is true that many of these men work (as does the bank robber) but under a sane system their labsr would be useful and productive instead of useless and destructive as now.

Labor creates all the wealth these parasites consume.

THE LIST.

Lawyers, 200,000; drummers, 275,000; land and house agents, 175,000; insurance, 350,000; flunkeys, lackeys, valets, modistes, 400,000; gold diggers, etc., 150,000; canvassers, peddlers, agents and doorknockers, 600,000; gamblers, brokers, race track bookmakers, 350,000; unnecessary preachers, 150,000; hoboes, 2,000,000; millionaire and non-millionaire hobbes, 1,000,000; unemployed workers, 3,000,000; soldiers and sailors, 125,000; unnecessary store keepers and clerks, 2,500,000; prostitutes, 600,000; strike breakers, scabs, detectives, pimps and politicians, 1,100,000. Total, 13,075,000.

According to statistics the average earnings of labor per day is approximately $10. This army of parasites thus, if properly employed, would produce over forty billion dollars worth of wealth per annum.

But this is not all the waste of the system. By far the greatest part of the labor of the productive workers is expended under conditions and by methods that are wasteful from lack of proper machinery and up-to-date system of handling the product. Then add to this the wealth destroyed needlessly: Battleships, forts, munitions of war, and many other such handiworks of labor that under the co-operative system would be useless.

Then there is the police, the courts and the thousand of petty officers that are necessary to this system that are absolutely useless and demoralizing.

Add to the above the following money cost of waste labor:

Unnecessary buildings, delivery wagons and book keeping, anually, $1,000,000,000. Cost of crime, police, courts, etc., $1,347,000,000. Army, navy, and pensions, 72 per cent. Unnecessary advertising, $2,000,000,000. Loss by preventable drought, $1,000,000,000. Three million sick people by preventable diseases, $1,875,000,000. Competing railroads, $900,000,000. Total, $8,122,000,000.

Add to this sum the labor lost of 13,075,000 parasites at $10 per day and we have nearly $50,000,000,000 wasted wealth, idle and useless labor lost per annum—fifty billions, mind you!

Now let us finish this sum and I want to assure you these figures are conservative and do not by any means cover all the loss by explotation by a long shot.

Divide fifty billion dollars between twenty million families and we have $2,500.00 loss per family. This is more than five times the average yearly income of each workingman in the United States. Here we have five-sixths of labor lost through parasitism, idleness, and useless service. But this is only part of the criminal waste of the system. We have said nothing of the 411,000 Federal offiice holders, whose labor would be useless under socialism. Nor have we counted the cost of the liquor traffic, which is a product of the competitive system. And do not forget the waste labor in small production, petty means of distribution—'one horse," "man and the hoe" method of work.

It is safe to say that under the co-operative system of production with collective ownership of capital, and with equal opportunities for all, every man getting what he earns and no man what he does not earn, the working class would receive ten times more for their labor than they receive today. —The Organizer.

THE COWARD.

The fog horn lifted its hoarse foreboding voice above the storm, and the gray-haired woman drew in her breath tremulously.

"Do you think there is any danger?" she asked, turning to her steamer-chair neighbor.

"Hardly," lied the young scientist with quasi light-heartedness. "The steamer is well nigh unsinkable. It is fitted with all the best safety devices known to science. Captain and crew are the pick of picked men. What danger can there be?"

And the gray-haired woman, reassured, was sufficiently grateful to pour out her heart to him.

"My son went over to America ten years ago," she sighed. "For eight years he kept sending his widowed mother a money order each month. And then, suddenly, the remittances stopped. Can you believe it? He went and got married, and left me to look out for myself. So I pinched and pinched until I saved enough to buy me a passage across. I'm an old woman, and it's my son's duty to support me as well as the hussy he married. And you can depend on it, if I don't like my son's wife, she'll know it and so will he."

The young scientist made no reply, but he thought: "It would be better for the happiness of her family if this bitter old woman never reached her destination."

Suddenly they were thrown out of their chairs. The steamer crashed against some great mass, trembled and drew back like a wounded beast. There were loud, weird screams followed by a horrible calm. And then everything was confusion.

From a secluded corner of the deck the young scientist watched the crew prepare the lifeboats. He saw useful, indispensable citizens give place to helpless women and replaceable sailors. And it seemed to him as if he were merely a spectator of motion pictures on a screen. Suddenly a very simple thought detached itself from his subconsciousness and stood out clearly and concisely like a mountain peak against a pallid sky. It was really such a simple idea that people saw it every day without observing it. And yet, if they would only observe, and make practical use of it, the sinking of a steamer could be rendered impossible. The young scientist turned over the scheme calmly and impersonally in his mind, and his trained intellect could discover no flaw. And in his breast arose the fiery joy that is born of the ability to benefit mankind.

The young man was so deeply engrossed in his idea for preventing loss of life, that he did not think of saving himself until the last boat was about to be lowered. There was one seat still unoccupied and no other passengers were on deck.

"To prevent others from losing their lives in the future, I must save mine," muttered the young scientist, and he stepped into the boat.

"Everything ready? Then lower her," said an officer.

"Stop them!" screamed a girl. "There is a woman crying for help!"

The young scientist looked up and saw the gray-haired woman standing against the rail, wringing her hands. And he thought: "If I do not save myself, the world will not know how to prevent the sinking of steamers." And he pretended not to notice the gray-haired woman.

"Can't you hear me?" shrieked the girl, "there is an old woman still on the steamer."

He looked up again. The gray-haired woman was waving a shawl frantically and crying: "Save me! Save me! Save me for my son!" And the young scientist thought: "Her son will be better off if the old woman is drowned." He replied to the girl: "There is no more room on the boat."

"You beast!" hissed the girl. "Aren't you ashamed to save yourself at the expense of an old woman's life?"

The sailors had their hands on the ropes, ready to lower the last life boat onto the sea. The steamer was perceptibly sinking.

"One moment," a hoarse voice commanded, and the young scientist gave his place to the gray-haired woman.—Frank Koch in the December International.

FINANCING THE CRUSADE.

If the dissolution of the Vice Trust, as planned by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., the has the same result as the dissolution of Standard Oil, the trade will be more profitable than ever. This week the fragments of the trust have been engaged in the pleasant work of jacking up prices and shaking down consumers. It is little short of marvelous how the great minds in the former constituent bodies work alike, and what a lot of boodle there is in the old dismembered wreck. They do not declare the increase one after another, but simultaneously. This shows there is no collusion among them, and that one knows not what the other doeth. Consumers, however, are painfully aware that they have to pay more for their kerosene.

Still there can be no just complaint against this. John D., Jr., is going to end the white slave traffic, and do it out of his own pocket. But before he has the wherewithal in his pocket, there must be a little less in the pockets of others. Young Rockefeller is only one of many who need money with which to promote various noble schemes, such as uplifting the negro, acquiring new industrial concerns, helping religion, retaining lawyers to show how Standard Oil can do what it wants to do, rescuing fallen women and soaking the consumer. Standard Oil, legally and theoretically, is now made up of various competing concerns. A little thing like that is not permitted to interefere with the acquistion of profits or cause any rivalry among the so-called competing oil firms.

John D., Jr.'s, great white slave crusade will require a pile of money, and the omnipresent blue barrel is going to furnish it. The wise directors of the company understand that before the crusade commences, while it is on and after it is finished, there will be a mighty consumption of oil. Millions of good people will sit up by the cheerful lamp breathlessly reading the revelations made by the investigators or poring over the tables and the recommendations. Five millions of dollars spent in eliminating white slavery must in some manner be made to pay a return to those who advance it.

There are millions of persons so benighted that they rightly look upon the scheme as a piece of monumental hypocrisy. They will object to paying more for oil, but they will have to pay it just the same. If the Rockefellers could, they would penalize them still more, and even Uncle Bill, who wasted so much money fooling the government, would lift up the remnants of his voice in a demand that it be done.

The Rockefellers are a religious people, and their church and Sabbath school attendance has been almost as steadfast and as constant as the way they have hung on to the profits of oil, either trustified or dissolved. Since Standard Oil obeyed the orders of the courts, the price of crude oil has advanced $1.03 a barrel. The price of the products of crude oil has advanced much more than that. While Standard always claimed it was not in the producing business, it is a fact that Standard men were chief among those who could sell crude oil to the trust. Thus the inside men made money at both ends, and the inside men now are making more money than ever. The dealers claim there is no reason for the enormous jumps, except that some members of the concern wish money with which to light their way to the coming great crusade.

Young Rockefeller can unctuously rub his hands and reflect on his goodness. The crusade makes him richer in spirit, and the advance in prices makes him richer in purse. Though he spends millions on uplifting humanity, he can take additional millions out of humanity. Thus works a good trust in a naughty world.

The original Jawn D. has need of much money, so he gets most of it. His pet charities have cost millions, but they have not lowered the cost of living while they have increased semi-apuperization. His methods of acquisition, too, have resulted in breaking many men who, if they had succeeded, would have had a chance at fleecing the working class. While he has decreased the number of fleecers, he has not decreased the intensity of the fleecing, and it is this fact that gives to his sanctimonious son such a wide field for his great war against vice.—New York Call.

THAT DIRTY WORK.

There are many common objections to Socialism, and one which, per chance, looms as large in the mental horizon of the nice, clean bourgeoise. forms the heading of this article. We are informed that under a Socialist commonweal there would he a difficulty in finding individuals who would apply themselves to the more disagreeable tasks of life, because, so we are told, everybody would rather be respectable.

Such arguments, formulated under capitalist conditions by persons who have no knowledge of Socialism or what it stands for, rapidly pass into the oblivion they deserve, upon examination.

It is usually considered that scavenging, stoking, mining, etc., is toil of a dirty character, but it is rarely thought that the daily routine of most surgeons is infinitely worse than that ever performed by a scavenger; yet such is the case. Surgery is not only disagreeable, but in some cases absolutely repulsive, and yet, remarkable though it may seem, the doctor is honored, and mingles in "high class" society, whilst the other man is despised and even shunned. After all, it is really a question of point of view, and from persons whose minds have been obfuscated by the fetiches of the present order of things, one must expect the perverted and warped ideas they give utterance to.

The major portion of the unclean duties performed by the working class are tasks which could be far better executed by machinery, and thereby hangs the difficulty, for, while King Capital can have such work done cheaper by human labor, he will certainly not install machine-power; that remains for the Socialist industrial republic to institute. The ulterior motives of the grinding master class will not be studied then, as the whole of social affairs will be administered for the common good of all. It will not be a question under Socialism of "will it pay?" but simply "will it be of use?" and as machinery, the logical evolution of the primitive iron tool, is to be one of the emancipators of man from the thousand and one gradgrind tasks which at present rob us of the joy of life, just to that extent will machinery be pressed from our slumber and remove the parasitic robber class from their positions. We, the serf class, are today the servants of the machine Only when conditions are reversed, and we the masters of the machine, can we truly say we are masters of ourselves.

In this era work is looked upon with disgust, more especially the class of work which soils the clothes, by the ultra-parasitic idlers of plutocracy. who pose as being "clevah" in that they have escaped their share of social duty. These sentiments are faintly echoed by working people, who look with envious eyes at the grand manner of living and the luxurious appointments of the "brainy" ones.

It is in this way that the necessary and useful tasks of society are despised, and false ideas of life are inculcated in the minds of the proletariat. In this way it is that snobbery and class distinctions are bred. Not until the economic basis of society is changed will it be possible to say that all labor is honorable, for labor is most dishonorable while we remain slaves and toil for the profit of others. The dignity of labor must of necessity be based on the freedom of labor; there can be no dignity in the labor of the serf, only degradation exists there, and it is our task as members of the producing class to wipe off the shame of slavery which is at present always associated with the term "workingman."

Our opponents must recollect that a different aspect will be assumed by labor when it is predominant—when the attitude of labor has changed from mute self-abasement to vigorous self-reliance, and useful toil is expected from all. As already stated, the dignity of labor must be the inevitable reflex of labor's freedom, which is possible only under the regime of Socialism. Dirty work, as such, will not be shunned then, but in so far as it conduces to the health and well-being of the community, will be honored. If, for instance, the sewers get choked and the sewer men refuse to work, disease and death must ensue; but if all the bishops that sit on gilded thrones resign en bloc tomorrow, the social life of the people would proceed in its usual manner and health would be quite unaffected. When my class are educated on proper lines and cease to imbibe their knowledge from the polluted sources of capitalism, snobbery will succumb and the sign of respectability will cease to be a black coat, a white choker and a diseased mentality.

If, in spite of what has already been stated, our opponents, the anti-Socialists, maintain that the dirty work difficulty would still exist under Socialism, it may be pointed out that by the elementary act of the industrial executive authority of the time deciding that the less "respectable" members of society work shorter hours than those who had cleaner duties, the question would be ruled out altogether and society would find no difficulty in having such disagreeable duties as were quite unavoidable, after the institution of machinery, performed by its members, who, instead of being classed, as now, between a beast and a human. would be the equal of all, and the inferior of none.—Peter Gog, in Sydney People.

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining Distriet. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Seeretary.

THE UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA now boast of a membership of 391,120.

THE WEST VIRGINIA MINERS have come to the conclusion that it is better to "fight to live, than work to starve." They are fighting and the labor movement of a continent is behind them, until victory is won.

THE SECRETARY of Creede Miners' Union No. 20 has requested that notice of a lost card be published in the Miners' Magazine, The card was issued by E. Pearson, secretary, in the name of Frank Westfall. Anyone finding the same will please forward card to E. Pearson, Creede, Colorado.

DURING the Garment Workers' strike in New York, a number of the most active strikers among the girls and women were dragged into the police court and fined. In the same court, women of the "redlight" districts were fined and sentenced to jail. It is strange and singular that a court would impose a fine or imprisonment on women who are inmates of dens of shame, and then impose fines and jail sentences on girls and women who are fighting for a scale of wages that will enable them to escape the penalty of being driven into "redlight" districts!

Our courts are a farce and but a libel on justice.

GOVERNOR GEO. W. P. HUNT of Arizona in delivering his message to the legislature recently, demonstrated that he is taking no backward steps.

The constitution of Arizona is the most progressive of any state in the union, and the message of the governor to the law-making body, calls for legislation that is prompted by a constitution that offers something more than mere platitudes. Advanced thinkers are watching Arizona, and it is fair to presume that older states will throw off their lethargy and follow the example of a state, whose people dared to draft a constitution, providing for the Initiative, Referendum and Recall.

THE HOBO'S UNION which recently held its annual convention at New Orleans, has gone to pieces on the rocks of dissension. One element favored political action, while the other element looked upon "direct action" and "sabotage" as the most formidable means to advance the interests of the fellow with the empty purse.

J. Eads How, who was once the presiding genius of the Hobo Union, has been dethroned, and Jefferson Davis has been proclaimed chief by the penniless mendicants who are advocates of putting sand in the sugar to strike terror to the heart of Capitalism.

The Davis crowd will endeavor to join forces with the I. W. W. in the hope that free soup and free speech may not vanish from the earth.

THE MINES at Wharton, New Jersey, are flooded with water, but the fifty armed deputy sheriffs and a number of strikebreakers are not very efficient in repairing pipes and keeping pumps in operation.

The strikers, numbering 200, are standing firm, feeling confident that the mine operators will grow weary of strikebreakers shipped from the slums of New York.

Since writing the above, the following telegram was received at headquarters from Edward Crough, of the Western Federation of Miners, stating:

"President Moyer, W. F. M.: Complete victory won by Wharton Miners' Union, W. F. M., in its strike."

THE METALLIFEROUS MINERS of Porcupine, northern Ontario, are in a fight for human conditions.

Against them is the usual array—the courts, the Thiel detective agency, with its mercenaries, warranted to murder any worker pointed out, at five dollars per day, and the inevitable hunger and exposure incidental to all strikes.

The Western Federation of Miners are in charge of the strike. This article is to notify our members not to be deceived by lying labor agents, who might seek to indnce them to go into that field.—United Mine Workers Journal.

All labor journals should give the greatest publicity to strikes, in order that members of organized labor may not be deceived by misrepresentation.

THE OFFICIAL ORGAN of the I. W. W., published in Pennsylvania, had the following:

"The red element of the Socialist party would be better off outside the party. To expect the S. P. to do them any good is like trying to eat beefsteak from a live steer."

The Socialist party can well afford to lose "the red element." Men who are continually lauding themselves as fighters and revolutionists seldom indulge in anything except noise.

Men who desire to be known as "the red element" are cheap soldiers yearning for the limelight.

Men who have done real fighting in the struggles that mark the pages of the world's history, carried no bugles to make known to humanity that they belonged to "the red element."

Libels on courage tainted with an orange hue, have always yearned for cheap notoriety, and these libels on courage have always fled when the clouds presaged a storm.

AT MINEVILLE, NEW YORK, the hired thugs of Witherbee, Sherman & Co. and the Port Henry Iron Ore Company, have been committing the most high-handed outrages against the strikers, with the object in view of driving the men back to work.

President Gompers and Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor, have been giving some of their personal attention to the strike and on the presentation of indisputable facts by Joseph D. Cannon of the Western Federation of Miners, the American Federation of Labor proposes to take a hand in the battle to secure some semblance of justice for men who have been treated with less consideration than wild beasts.

The investigation of conditions in Mineville, under the supervision of the official chattels of the mining companies, has been a farce, but regardless of the farce of an investigation and regardless of the fact that the mining companies have placed spies among the strikers to incite them to violence, yet the strikers have been law-abiding, for they realize that their solidarity in standing together must ultimately wrest from the iron grip of cold-blooded exploiters such conditions as will enable workingmen to live like human beings.

THE REVOLUTION has again broken out in Mexico, and the Madero administration has been attacked by the forces that have been rallied under the Diaz banner.

The revolution in Mexico is kept alive by opposing financial interests. Madero was backed by financial potentates and through the power of money was enabled to dethrone Diaz and reach the presidential throne of the republic across the border.

But Madero, reaching the goal of his political ambition, did not quench the fires of revolution in Mexico. The adherents of Diaz have not been idle, but have brought to their assistance a few giants in the financial world who have furnished the "sinews of war," believing that with Madero relegated and the Diaz regime again clothed with power, that investments in a revolution would yield handsome dividends.

The unfortunate part of the revolution in Mexico is that those who have given birth to the rebellion will not do the fighting. Disinherited, penniless slaves who believe that patriotism demands their presence on the field of battle, will bear the brunt of war, and when peace again reigns in Mexico a few gentlemen will reap all the glory and profits of the festival of blood. The slaves will still be in rags and poverty and will know no liberty that conflicts with the interests of economic pirates.

Some day the slave will refuse to fight at the command of a master, and then there will be no more war.

A PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS recently declared: "If Taft had been elected, I would have become a Socialist, and voted the Socialist ticket, and gone out and worked for it."

Had Taft been elected, this professor of economics might have voted a Socialist ticket in the future as a matter of protest, but when he says that he "would have become a Socialist" that is a statement which will be disputed by every man and woman who have a clear grasp of the philosophy of Socialism.

When this professor of economics proposed to change his vote at the ballot bax merely on the grounds that a Republican of the standpat type had been elected, it is evident beyond any question of doubt, that the professor had not the faintest conception of the meaning of Socialism. The professor focused his vision on an individual and lost sigbt of the class struggle that makes brutes of men.

The election of any other man, whether Republican or Progressive, would not have changed the industrial system that breeds masters and slaves.

The professor, who is presumed to teach economics, would be like a number of other men and women, who have proclaimed themselves Socialists simply because some candidates have been elected to office whose acts or conduct in some official capacity have aroused their opposition.

The man whose coming into the Socialist party depends upon the election or defeat of any candidate is a superficial thinker and it is doubtful if his mental capacity will ever permit him to have a knowledge of those doctrines of industrial emancipation that will bequeath liberty to the human race.

LAST WEEK the daily press in glaring headlines announced a battle between striking miners and mine guards in West Virginia

It is not necessary to picture to a workingman of intelligence the type of brute in human shape whom mine operators select to awe and intimidate strikers under the pretext that such mine guards are selected for the purpose of protecting property. The mine guard is fond of blood-money, and he conspires with his degenerate associates to hold his job. To hold his job, he believes that it is necessary to offer the most brutal insults to strikers, and through such insults, goad them to desperation. The strikers of West Virginia have borne with patience wrongs and outrages, but sometimes "patience ceases to be a virtue"

The mine operators, after utilizing the most heartless hirelings to suppress the strikers, failed to awe with fear the dauntless men who have been fighting against a starvation wage that ultimately means a premature death.

The miners, having given battle to the mine guards and having driven back the paid Hessians of the mine owners, a governor, subservient to the dictum of industrial tyrants, calls out again the military of the state to wreak vengeance on men who refuse to become the submissive slaves of the coal barons of West Virginia.

Labor should learn some lessons from the many conflicts that now prevail in various parts of America; and the policemen's clubs falling on the heads of strikers, the bullets of hired thugs and state militia, as they speed on their mission of death into the ranks of the working class, should teach labor that justice shall not prevail until the class that is now oppressed and murdered under forms of law, shall unite industrially and politically to end the system that sneers at liberty for the sake of profit.

STRONG EFFORTS have been made recently to establish a eight hour law in the District of Columbia for women.

The La Follette-Peters bill limits the hours of labor for women to eight hours, but the employers of labor in the District of Columbia, protested before a senate committee againts the passage of such a measure.

The proprietor of a laundry protested as follows:

"Let these good ladies of the Consumers' League leave this matter of our employés hours alone, and try to do something to bring these girls to God, and to improve their moral life in proper religious activity. With shorter hours of work, the girls would patronize the 'movies' and the Great White Way more than they do now. The class that is immoral will be worse when they do not have to work in the laundry ten hours!"

This same laundry proprietor, whose name is Lowe, was forced to admit, before the congressional committee, that $5.44, $5.40 and $5.35 were the average weekly wages of three different laundries, whose slaves work as many hours as their physicial strength will permit.

Think of a slave in these laundries, where the highest wage paid per week is $5.44, throwing away her princely salary on "movies" and the White Way!

The very fact that such a miserable wage is paid is the very reason that slaves of such brutal employers visit questionable places, to bid for dishonor.

Low wages and a long workday for women are not conducive to chastity. But employers, as a general rule, are more interested in profits than in the virtue of the girls and women, who are slowly but surely starved to a life that is worse than death.

Employers, as a class, have fought every measure that has lessened the hours of labor, and the shorter workday and the living wage can only be established through that unity of action on the part of labor that will force the Shylock to forfeit his "pound of flesh."

$22,245,000,000.

WHO HAS ALL THAT MONEY? Any ONE man?

Yes, ONE man has $22,245,000,000. One man with a wife and one daughter.

Now it is quite easy to see that Morgan did NOT EARN this money.

And if HE did not earn it some one must have earned it for him. Or else all all his fabulous wealth is only fictitious.

But it is not fictitious. It is real wealth, and has been earned, but NOT by MORGAN.

No, nor by MORGAN and his wife together, for she never did anything to help the old man out. At least she never went out and took in washing.

And his daughter, Anne? Did she help her dad pile up these twenty-two billion?

Not on your life! She helped spend a lot of it. She didn't HAVE to EARN ANY of it.

But let us see how long it would take J. Pierp. if he really should earn such a sum.

You admit that $10 a day would be pretty good wages, don't you? It is at least five times as much as your average wage. More than the brainy professors are getting in our universities.

At $10 a day it would have taken Pierp about 2,245,500,000 days.

With 365 days to a year it would have taken him 6,091,780 years.

Now it's a cinch Grandpa Morgan never worked that many years. He simply got about 304,589 boneheads to work for him for some twenty years and that was an easy matter.

If these had gotten what they produced each could have spent a whole thousand dollars a year for living expenses and still had $43,000 in the bank.

As it is you have spent less than $500 a year to live on and have nothing in the bank—unless it be an old shovel in a sand bank.

But to know these things does not get us anywhere. We must remedy the condition.

Socialism would provide that you would get what you earn, but would not have to pile up billions of dollars for some individuals who earn nothing.

In other words, if you earn $10 a day under Socialism you will get it. If you earn $10 a day now you have to give away at least $8 to J. Pierp. for his wife and daughter Anne, while your wife and ten youngsters go in rags.—Next Step.

CARDINAL GIBBONS gave expression recently to the following:

"Paramount among the rights of the laboring classes, is their privilege to organize, or to form themselves into societies for their mutual protection and benefit. Our modern labor associations are but the legitimate successors of the ancient guilds of England. God forbid the prerogatives which I am maintaining for the working classes should be construed as implying the slightest invasion of the rights and autonomy of employers. There should not, and need not, be any conflict between labor and capital, since both are necessary for the public good, and the one depends on the co-operation of the other. Whoever tries to sow discord between the capitalist and the laborer is an enemy of social order. Whoever tries to improve the friendly relations between the proprietors and the labor unions by suggesting the most effectual means of diminishing and even removing the causes of discontent, is a benefactor to the community."

Cardinal Gibbons is presumed to be a learned man, and it is supposed that his many years on earth would have enabled him from experience and observation to know that a fraternal spirit cannot exist permanently between the capitalist and the laborer, no more than friendship can exist between despotism and the victim who feels the weight of tyranny.

The capitalist has been created through the exploitation of labor, and exploitation is but a respectable term for robbery.

Under the present industrial system, the capitalist is a master and the laboring man is a slave.

In the ante-bellum days when employers of labor bought and sold human flesh and when the auction block was one of the institutions protected by the majesty of the law, there were men who declared that slavery was for the public good, but how about the victim who was held as a chattel.

There were men in those days who denounced in the most vigorous language the man who dared to raise his voice against chattel slavery, and such men were even subjected to the outrages of the mob

The Cardinal declares: "there should not, and need not, be any conflict between labor and capital, since both are necessary for the public good."

If there should not, and need not, be any conflict between labor and capital, then will the Cardinal tell us why it is that almost every nation on earth is seething with strikes and lockouts, blacklists and boycotts?

The cause of conflicts is based on the fact that the interests of capitalist and laborer are not identical.

The Cardinal is a poor student of economics.

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS men who have attained prominence as members and officials of labor organizations have repeatedly declared that "the unions should keep out of politics" or, in other words, "no politics in the unions."

These very men who cry "no politics in the unions!" are in politics, themselves, and, as a general rule, use the popularity and influence that they have attained through their membership in the labor movement, to become popular with political parties whose platforms offer but crumbs to the working class.

To be plain, so-called "labor leaders" who vehemently oppose "politics in the union" use the unions as stepping stones to reach the goal of their political ambitions.

It is a noticeable fact that many so-called "labor leaders" use the organization of which they are members, in the interest of some political party, and, when victory is achieved, these "labor leaders" insist on receiving some petty political job as a reward for their dirty political service, and even go so far as to have their friends in labor bodies pass resolutions urging their appointment to some public place that commands a lucrative salary.

When such appointments are made, poor, deluded dupes who know no better, feel that labor has been recognized, regardless of the fact that the beneficiary of the appointment has secured his job by using the labor union to subserve his personal interests.

When politics are discussed in the labor unions and the majority of the membership awakens to the fact that labor must get into politics, the sooner will "labor leaders" lose the opportunity of committing treason to their class for "the mess of pottage."

If Employers' Associations, Manufacturers' Associations, Mine Operators' Associations and all the various combinations of exploiters find it beneficial to their class interests to be in politics, it is strange that SKATES in the labor organizations can so successfully keep the unions out of politics, in order that they, the skates, may reap revenue from treason. Trusts and corporations are in politics, and as a result of their political activity, their interests are protected by the legislative, judicial and executive departments of government.

Trusts and corporations control our lawmaking bodies and see to it that only such judges shall wear the judicial ermine as are recognized as "safe and sane."

The majority of our "labor leaders" who cry "no politics in the union!" are in politics to aid the representatives of industrial oppressors, and for their treachery to labor are thrown a bone as the price of their duplicity.

It would be well for organized labor to scrutinize closely every glib-tongued jawsmith who pleads for "no politics in the unions."

CHARLES P. GILDEA, in writing from Rock Springs, Wyoming, to the United Mine Workers' Journal, comments as follows on the Germer article:

"Just after reading Comrade Germer's awful arraignment of Bill Haywood, a man snatched from the gallows by a solidified working class, unselfishly engaged in his behalf because we believed he was a victim of arrogant capitalism that had engaged the unprincipled wretch, McParlan, to hang him for his loyalty to the working class. McParlan, whose crimes, outrages and orgies were first given prominence in the part of the country I first saw the light of day, it was only natural that I, too, should enlist as enthusiastically as Germer and many others to prevent the consummation of the damnable plot involved in the railroading of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone to the gallows.

"But the trial in Idaho pales into insignificance as compared to the trial that Haywood is now undergoing. His expulsion from the Socialist party is soon to be voted on, and perhaps some have already rendered their judgment. His alleged violation of the constitution of the Socialist party is to my mind less important than his refusal to aid Steve Adams to secure his liberty and exoneration when in the clutches of the vultures who would destroy all their lives.

"Now if Bill Haywood cannot meet the charges made against him by Germer, that is 'That he collected funds for Steve Adams' defense, and refused to appropriate these funds for the purposes for which he received them,' then Haywood should be placed upon the pillory of execration and all members of the working class who are in earnest in their work of ushering in a new and better civilization, must shun Haywood as they would a scorpion. I feel that the columns of the U. M. of A. Journal should be left open to Haywood, to reply to Germer. If at the end of several issues 'Big Bill' refuses to give any statement to our official organ in reply, then the United Mine Workers' Journal must be used to drive him into the oblivion from whence no traveler returns.

"There is too much at stake and the possibilities of creating a greater division of the working class on the political field by 'Big Bill' passing the statement of Germer 'as unworthy of his notice.' The Socialists, especially, cannot stand for it. Haywood, let's hear from you."

It is now up to "Big Bill." He is charged with dishonesty. Yea, more than that, for he is charged with being a traitor to a man in prison, who was a member of the Western Federation of Miners and a victim of the same conspiracy as himself.

The columns of the Miners' Magazine are open to "Big Bill." Let him bring on the vindication stuff or stand convicted of a crime that has no word to depict his perfidy.

A NEW YORK BANKER, Clarence E. Jones, who has just returned from Panama, where he inspected the canal, has expressed the fear that with the completion of the work and the return to the United States of the men who have been employed in the canal's construction, Socialism will receive a great impetus. In an interview he is credited with the statement:

"The return of 50,000 canal employés from the canal zone, where they got high wages and the cost of living was very low, to the United States, where living is high, wages are comparatively low, and positions are uncertain, is sure to have a big effect.

"It is the biggest problem offered by the Panama canal today, and is almost sure to result in a wave of Socialism. These 50,000 are all voters, and hail from the different parts of the United States, and they form a mighty nucleus for the movement which they suggest. They will undoubtedly urge government ownership for all corporations, for having worked for the government at high, steady wages, they want to see such pleasant conditions prevail all over the United States. Their slogan will be paternalism."

The canal when completed will be the greatest work of its kind ever achieved. Under private enterprise and the stimulus of personal reward, the Panama canal was a failure. It was not until the United States government—the American people—took up the work abandoned by the Panama Canal Company and placed it in charge of a public employé with the modest salary of a colonel of the engineer corps, that the dream of the centuries took form and substance and is about to be realized.

We have an idea that when the magnitude of the achievement grips the minds of the American people it will be difficult to convince them that the capitalist is essential to industry and the tribute which he exacts is a burden from which there is no escape.

It was the justification of chattel slavery that upon its existence depended the very life of the nation. It was pleaded in its behalf that if left to their own devices the slaves would cease to cultivate the fields and the industry and civilization of the south would perish and bring ruin to every home and fireside in the land.

Today, in thin disguise, it is contended in support of the exploitation of the wage worker that if he were permitted to retain the fruits of his toil, if he were not stripped of the bulk of the wealth which he produces, if production for use should replace production for profit, if he were released from the pressure of discipline and relieved from the fear of want, he would cease to be efficient, the machinery of production would break down, and we should plunge backward into barbarism.

The returning workers from Panama may not believe it. They have experienced the deadening influence of high and steady wages and the prospect of returning to their former state of efficiency at half pay may not prove as alluring and as inviting to them as it did when they were contributing to t he rewards of individual enterprises.

A new danger has arisen.—Milwaukee Leader.

Dynamite Won't Do

THIRTY-THREE UNION MEN were found guilty by the Indianapolis grand jury of being accomplices to the McNamaras in dynamiting such jobs as were under construction by scab labor, and because of this, Federal Judge Anderson sent them to the Leavenworth penitentiary.

There was a strike on between the Structural Iron Workers' Union and the contractors, and in this strike the contractors had resolved to wipe out the union, and to this end they employed the most insidious methods. Their object was the eradication of the organized effort on the part of the workers. It was in these strikes that the cause developed which sent t he thirty-three men to Leavenworth.

During the big strike at Lawrence, Mass., one Wood, a millionaire mill owner, imported enogh dynamite to blow Lawrence, Massachusetts, off the map. However, before he was successful in blowing up the men and women who were on strike at his textile mills, the millionaire dynamiter's plot was discovered. But he did not go to jail or to Leavenworth. He was a millionaire dynamiter and his fine was only a few dollars and a quarter!

And it develops that the thirty-three union men who are now in the federal prison did not blow anything up. They did not handle dynamite; they made no attempt to kill anybody. They were only associated with the McNamaras, a couple of annihilators whom the profit system had driven to anarchy and because of this they were sent to the penitentiary.

The Southern Pacific railway blew up their San Antonio roundhouse and killed forty.

The Illinois Central railway rammed a few of their scrap-pile engines and old wooden cars together at Montz, La., and killed forty more.

The struck roads are blowing up their workingmen every day—and there is nobody going to Leavenworth.

The McNamaras blew up the Times building and killed a dozen people, and we refuse to censure them any more than the railroad companies. They are only small operators when placed in the line-up with these corporations and modern annihilators.

The Titanic went to the bottom of the sea, and there were hundreds of victims added to the same score card that the McNamaras were working on. Statistics from the Interstate Commerce Commission state that the United States railways added 10,585 victims to the same score sheet in the year of 1912. In New York City there are 50,000 little babies that starve to death every year for the want of an animal existence. Our Andy Carnegie has killed and maimed more victims in his steel mills than have fallen in the Balkan war.

But we do not blame the McNamaras or Millionaire Woods, the owners of the Titanic or the thirty-three union men at Leavenworth, the Illinois Central or the starving babes, the army back of the Balkan war or Old Andy Carnegie, because they are all inoculated with the same disease. They are all victims of the profit system.

As long as the profit system exists the sea hounds will go to the bottom of the sea, babes will starve, dynamiters will be developed, strikes will take place, wrecks and catastrophes will continue, wars will be fought, poverty will flourish, for they are all inevitable sores agitated by the prevalent damnable profit system.

We want to find the real cause for the thirty-three union men going to Leavenworth, and the blowing up of the Times building, and in this we refuse to flirt with you. Are you still supporting the profit system? Then you are feeding the snake that wrecked the Times building.

You in your maudlin state of mind are starving the babes. You are responsible for the blowing up of the San Antonio roundhouse and the wreck at Montz, La.; the strike on the struck roads and the Balkan war. You are the real anarchist—you dug the graves for the victims of the Titanic, and drove thirty-three of your associates to the federal bastile. You are making millionaires and commercializing human flesh at the redlight districts. You are convicted by the thinking element of the workers as being the real and most dangerous of dynamiters, and you are senteneed to go and bump your head against the cornerstone of economic law until you wake up, and then go out and blow up our diseased social system; but in the performance of this, dynamite won't do. —Strike Bulletin.

The General Strike

X. THE SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

IN BELGIUM, Denmark, Sweden, Germany and Great Britain the political and industrial movements of the working class are so well organized and so intimately connected that a general strike might be discussed in these countries as a practical proposition. In fact, strikes are becoming more and more extensive in all these countries The working class is becoming more and more sensible of its power and greater and greater solidarity of action is taking place among these millions of European toilers. But while the theory of the general strike has taken hold of the imagination of the leaders of the poorly organized French, Italian and Spanish workers, the practice of strikes, more and more general in character, is being worked out in those countries where the toilers are organized in powerful unions, both political and industrial. Theoretically, in Denmark, Sweden, Germany and Great Britain, general strikes arouse little interest, but in practice their use is advancing step by step.

In this country the workers have never taken to the theory of the general strike; but the periods of increasing organization have usually been marked by strikes more or less general in character. Anarchism, which has always swayed to some extent the minds of the Latin workers, has never exercised any considerable influence in America. There is a reluctance here to embark on revolutionary thought and activity even on Socialist lines. The working class has long been permeated with the idea that every one has a chance to become a Rockefeller, and it has only begun to realize the necessity of class action. Men of the type of LaFollette, Bryan and Roosevelt still represent in politics a considerable proportion of the working class of America. The unions have been able to organize 2,000,000 workers for purely immediate economic ends, but that, after all, is only a small portion of the working class. The Socialist party, on the other hand, with its revolutionary ideas, exercises an influence over an even more limited number. In the face of such conditions, the agitation for a general strike, or indeed the discussion of it, theoretically or practically, can make little appeal to American toilers. The vast problem before us today is the education and organization of the working class. This work is still in its infancy, as every sincere trade unionist and Socialist must acknowledge.

Curiously enough, few men seem to be so sensible to the weakness of our organizations and to general absence of revolutionary thought and education as precisely those men who advocate an immediate general strike. They never cease denouncing the immediate reforms demanded by the Socialist party and they love nothing so much as to dwell upon what they call the utter helplessness of trade unionism. Their criticisms consist of the following indictments: That the Socialist party is a middle class reform party, full of confusion and compromise; that the trade unions of this country are officered by the lieutenants of the capitalist class; that it believes in harmony between capital and labor; that it is an aristocracy which refuses to unionize the unskilled, and that it is an organization for the production of scabs.

Now, if the advocates of revolutionary unionism believe their own statements, then it is quite impossible that they should be serious in urging the working class here to undertake a general strike. Surely, no one should know better than they that the general strike has not the slightest chance of success where the labor movement is in a state so degenerate as they claim.

Passing over, however, as absurd, criticisms of that sort, there are indeed certain conditions in our labor movement which make any discussion of an immediate general strike the essence of folly. The parents of the general strike idea urge it as the sole effective means of bringing the social revolution. They overlook the important fact that the working class, in this country at least, does not want a revolution, nor would any but a small minority lift a finger to create a revolution. The general strike is, to be sure, one weapon of several that might be chosen for the purposes of revolution. But so long as men do not want revolution, the first necessity is not to glorify a weapon, but to make men realize the purpose of having one.

In a country where the mass of workers still vote for capitalist candidates, where they are still tied to the old political machines, where they still read, enjoy, and follow capitalist papers, and where millions of them do not see even the necessity of a trade union movement or of a Socialist party, what could be more childlike than a discussion limited to small coteries, as to whether the spiked club, the pamphlet, the vote, the bullet, or the strike is the sole effective revolutionary weapon? What we most need in America is education and organization. When that work of education and organization has been done, the choice of weapons to accomplish the ends sought by labor will be comparatively easy.

Paul La Fargue, a number of years ago, called attention to the fact that the lockout is an inverted general strike. It is, he said, a weapon of the bosses, and he mentions the fact that the threat of a lockout was used to defeat Bryan and to elect McKinley. The Socialist party is being fought with the same weapon. In every political campaign, when the Socialists have a chance of winning, the bosses play this card. They threaten the workers with a shut-down. In Los Angeles, Milwaukee and Schenectady the capitalists declared: "If the Socialists win, capital will be driven out of town." The threat is also used to prevent trade union organization. How familiar is the sound of these words: "This shop will remain an open shop or we will close down." And it must not be forgotten that these threats are usually effective where the workers are not permeated with the union spirit and with Socialist education. The average workingman leaves the union alone and votes submissively the ticket of his employer rather than endure the hardships of unemployment. Is it not well to ask, therefore, if the threat of a lockout suffices to intimidate the working class of America, is the agitation for a general strike likely to prove enticing?

Many advocates of the general strike utterly refuse to take any account of these practical considerations. They seem possessed with the idea that they can ignore this lack of education, and even carry on a general strike whether or not the organized portion of the working class co-operates in the strike. They seem to believe that the millions of unskilled and unorganized will arise en masse when the call is made. Some of them weep and wail over the misery of the unorganized. They have nothing but contempt for the unions, nothing but admiration for the unorganized, even for those who have been called the slum proletariat. I must confess that I can see neither logic nor sense in their position. The only admiration I have for the working class is for the organized portion of the working class. One may have compassion for those wretched creatures whose ignorance and folly lead them to bear patiently and uncomplainingly day in and day out the whip of hunger and the sting of want. But the only workers one can really admire are the organized fighters who, however conservative they may be, have at least informed their masters that there is a line drawn somewhere. "You can go thus far and no farther," the organized workers say to the capitalists, and that position, in my opinion, is the beginning of enlightenment and bears the germ of the social revolution. But that portion of the working class which will neither strike nor vote to improve their condition is surely deserving of little admiration.

Aside altogether from these conditions among the working class, which make the thought of the general strike little else than folly, there are certain political difficulties in this country which do not confront the workers of many countries of Europe. We are not a centralized government. We have no supreme head. We have no powerful parliament such as exists nearly everywhere in Europe. Every state is a principality. The police power is decentralized. There is no way of gaining by a sudden stroke the control of the army, of the executive power, or of the state as a whole. It is possible in France for a general strike to break into an insurrection and the insurrection to possess itself of the government. But that is not possible in America. Nor is it possible here for the general strike to take control of the factories, the mines, and the mills. Even if the general strike were sufficiently powerful to do so in some states, it would merely lead to a Civil war.

Nor should we forget that the industrial population is as yet far from being a majority of the total population. The farmers and small property owners are still far too numerous to allow the wage workers to dominate the state or industry by any sudden outbreak. The slow and gradual methods of political action will not cause widespread suffering nor the sudden bankruptcy of all financial and commercial institutions, and it is possible these methods might win the support, or at least the neutrality, of small capitalists and farmers. But the general strike would mean open warfare. It would involve the horrors of rebellion and it would necessarily cause tremendous suffering. The full-fledged revolution would be on and if the farmers and the smaller property owners desert the working class, there is no possibility whatever of a violent uprising of the workers terminating successfully.

I realize that these considerations are most briefly and inadequately sketched, yet it seems to me that, considered en masse, they indicate how utterly Utopian, at least in America, is the thought of the general strike as the one and only means of winning Socialism. Unfortunately, these papers must be brief, and the subjects worthy of many pages must be condensed into a few lines. The point, however, that I wish to make in this article is a very simple one: What we need in America, first of all, is education. We must bend all our efforts toward building up powerful working class weeklies and dailies that will reach and influence every workingman and woman. Furthermore, we need an enormous development of organization, political and industrial, that will enable the workers to learn the power of the vote and the strike. If when this vast preliminary work is done, the workers feel that a general strike will accomplish the ends they seek, they will at least have laid the foundation for possible success.

Unions to the Rescue—Unorganized Wage Workers in All Industries Can Protect Themselves

WAGE EARNERS who are unorganized know and feel their helplessness to secure justice from employers. They have not acted in concert with their fellow-workmen and their wages have remained the same or been lowered because the employer knows that as individuals they are unable to obtain more wages or better their working conditions, and are also unable to even maintain their present low wages if the employer sees fit to reduce them.

Because of your unorganized condition you have become the victims of low wages, long hours of labor, bad working conditions, and this, despite the fact that the cost of living has increased so that the wages paid to you are not enough to meet your expenses. You are powerless to protect yourselves against accidents which are frequent, against sickness which comes to you often, against idleness because of industrial depression, against the ills with which the workers in all industries have at times to contend, particularly when unorganized. These ills can be reduced, or entirely removed, when you unite in unions, and become part of the American Federation of Labor.

All of the ills incident to your industry cannot be abolished at once, but they can be changed and reduced by thorough organization of all the workers, regardless of whether you are the highest skilled mechanics or are unskilled laborers.

The time is at hand when, regardless of your ability, your creed or nationality, you should be bound together by a true spirit of fraternity and solidarity—features which are essential if you hope to abolish wrongs, attain rights, and improve your conditions.

The American Federation of Labor has but one purpose for its existence—to protect the rights and to promote the interests and welfare of all the working people of this country, regardless of nationality, so that they may be justly dealt with, and that the workers may secure a wage that is sufficient to insure an American standard of living, with all that term implies.

The officers and organizers of the American Federation of Labor have from time to time organized and attempted to organize the workers in various places where your industry is located, but the American Federation of Labor cannot assist you unless there is an effort made on your part to assist yourselves. The great and powerful organized American movement wants to help you, and will help you if you will make an effort to help yourselves.

The American Federation of Labor is continually engaged in a campaign to organize all the skilled and unskilled workers in your industry, which only needs the support of the workers to insure success.

You could render much assistance to this movement carried on in your interests, if, when writing to your friends and relatives across the water, you advise them that it would be to their advantage if they did not come to America for a year or two.

If you hope in the near future to protect your own rights and promote your own interests, the time and opportunity are now at hand.

If you want more money for your labor—organize!

If you want shorter hours—organize!

If you want better working conditions—organize!

When you have read this circular give it to your fellow-worker and talk it over with him.

Information will be freely given if you write to the address given below, and your letters will be kept in confidence. Write today.

Fellow-workers, give heed. Let the spirit of unity and fraternity sink deep into your hearts and minds. Organize, unite, federate!

Fraternally yours,

The General Strike

XI. THE PARTIAL VERSUS THE GENERAL STRIKE.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

AS WE HAVE SEEN, the anarchists look upon the general strike as the social revolution. Few actual trade union leaders of Europe have time to discuss that kind of a general strike, yet some of them concede that general strikes may, when labor is powerfully organized, become necessary and advisable. A distinction is made, however, by labor leaders between the revolutionary general strike and a reformatory general strike. In other words, there are those who believe that shorter hours, higher pay, and better conditions generally might be obtained for the working class by a general cessation of work. In this country it is urged by some that a general strike for the purposes of reform might be more effective than political action, because no trickery of the corrupt political machines and no vote of presidents or supreme courts can outlaw reforms gained through strikes. This of course makes the arguments of those who advocate the general strike here appear even stronger than they do elsewhere.

Let us, therefore, examine the general strike as a weapon to accomplish this more restricted purpose, and see whether or not it is likely to be a success. Haywood and other leaders of the strike of the textile workers of Lawrence, announced at one time that they were considering the matter of having every textile worker in the United States quit work. This may or m ay not have been a bluff. It probably was a bluff, because such a general strike is inconceivable where the workers are unorganized or are organized in rival unions. But suppose it had been possible. Suppose, for the sake of example, every textile worker in the United States would have left work upon the demand of Haywood.

There would then have existed a complete general industrial strike that would have paralyzed every textile mill in the country. Hundreds of thousands of men, women and children would have been out of work. Every mill in the country would have been closed. The property of the mill owners would have been unproductive, no matter how safely guarded by police and militia. No orders for textile goods could have been filled. Prices would have risen skywards and the market would have been in exactly the inflated condition which exists when some gambler corners any necessity of life.

Now, let us ask ourselves whether it is conceivable that such a strike could succeed. We cannot, of course, decide the question. The matter can be settled only by experience. We can only study the matter with the greatest possible care and try to reason out what would happen in such a case. But whether our conclusions are for or against such a strike, we can feel assured that the near future will see it tried more than once. The working class, it seems, can learn its lessons only by experience—often at the cost of misery, starvation, and the bitter repetition of failure after failure. It must be said, however, at the beginning, that there are many thoughtful leaders of the actual working class movement who believe that every such general strike is doomed to failure.

Despite the criticisms of those who advocate a general strike as against a partial strike, the latter enjoys many obvious advantages over the former. The history of partial strikes shows that on the whole they have been successful. For the organized portion of the working class they have gained important concessions in higher wages, shorter hours, and better conditions. There is no time here to indicate how much improvement has been wrought by the strikes of the past. No student of history, however, will question that the skilled workers, by organization and strikes, have immensely improved their material conditions.

The cause of the success of such partial strikes is not far to seek. If any particular woolen mill, for instance, is tied up by strike, the owners of that particular concern are placed at a great disadvantage in holding their market. The orders they have received from their customers must be canceled, their salesmen must be called in, and all orders declined. Their notes and other obligations become due; and their profits are for the time completely cut off. If they try to open their works they are under the heavy expense of paying high prices for strikebreakers, detectives, transportation, board and lodging. Machines may be broken, the product of the machine spoiled, and other heavily expensive experiences endured. And while they are thus handicapped their rivals step in, fill their orders, and obtain the business which they otherwise would have had.

In such a case the public hardly knows that a strike exists. The orders which would have have otherwise gone to the crippled firm are filled by others, and the rivals reap a distinct advantage as a result of the crippled condition of one or more mill owners. The mill owners whose employés are striking cannot long endure the situation, and they are forced by competitive conditions of industry to make terms with their employés.

The "scab" exists both among the employers and among the employés. The employers seek to encourage their workmen to fight the union. Those engaged in a partial strike endeavor for the same reasons to keep their employers fighting among themselves. The scab workman tries to take the job of his fellow workman. The scab employer tries to take the business of his rival. It is to prevent the unions from profiting by the scab employer that many groups of the manufacturers have been led to form associations. They see that rivalry among themselves gives an advantage to the employés. Every partial strike of the past has been won more by the aid of the consumer and by rivalry among employers than by the mere fact that capital has far a time to remain unproductive.

A general strike of all the textile workers would enjoy none of the advantages noted above. All the mill owners would be placed in exactly the same position. The mills would all stop at the same time. They would re-open at the same time. As no orders could be filled, no individual mill owner would profit. There would exist no rivalry between the various firms, and every employer would be forced to join with every other employer for the one purpose of crushing the strikers. Their market would only be benefited by the stoppage of work; the mill products would be at a premium when work was resumed. The consumer would pay the bill and the mill owners would reap the profit.

The general strike would simply force a pooling of interests of all the employers in one industry. The strike would serve merely to limit the output in exactly the same manner that monopoly limits the output, by stopping production. In the one case it would be done involuntarily by general strike; in the other case it would be done voluntarily by a shut-down. In both cases it would mean starvation for the workers and vastly increased profits for the bosses.

A craft strike also enjoys certain obvious advantages over a general industrial strike. For instance, if in any industry the machinists alone strike, it means that the employer is forced to pay wages to all the other craftsmen in his employ or to shut down the works. If he shuts down he practically admits the success of the strike If he does not shut down, he continues production at a heavy loss. He cannot, of course, produce his products without machinists. He is, therefore, unable to take advantage of the market. His factory is demoralized, his working force disorganized, yet he must continue to pay a portion of his wage bill and make extensive operations to break the strike. Naturally the advantages of craft strikes are greater to the skilled than to the unskilled. The places of the latter are more easily filled and the loss to the employer is usually less. Experience in this matter makes comment unnecessary. The only important point to be considered is this: That an employer may be at a greater disadvantage when half his employés strike than when they all strike In the one case as in the other his business fails to function, but in the case of the craft strike the salaries and wages of a part of his workmen must be paid. I do not maintain that this is a conclusive argument for the craft strike as against the industrial strike. It is only one fact that must be considered in estimating their relative value.

A general strike brings up another question which I only touched upon in a previous paragraph, and that is the effect such a strike might have in forcing the employers to make common cause against the employés. Partial strikes often increase the rivalry between employers. The man who grants the strikers' demands often gains a great advantage. He is able to supply his market and even take business away from his rivals. Business booms for him even in the midst of an industrial depression. From the standpoint of the other employers he is of course a contemptible scab, taking advantage of their misery. What the unionist does to a scab workingman is nothing compared to what rival employers do to the boss that scabs on them. The partial strike takes every advantage of whatever rivalry and warfare may exist between competing capitalists. And those using it are not above taking the assistance of a weak capitalist who may at such a time become stronger than all his rivals.

In the case, however, of the general strike, all the capitalists are put in the same box. They are forced to join hands, form an association, pool their interests, and meet the workers with a common and united purpose. A general or sympathetic strike, therefore, has this advantage, that it unites the enemy. This is, of course, what the pure theorist desires. But the actual field general, the man upon the battlefield, prefers not to hasten that day.

It is partly considerations such as the above that have led August Bebel to declare that the strike is hopeless where the employers act together. He quotes the Webbs as the great authorities in the field of trade unionism, and he gives assent to the following statement made by them:

"When an entire industry is in the hands of one single great capitalist, or is divided between a small number of non-competing capitalists—especially if the monopoly is in any way protected against new rivals—then the trade union finds its methods * * * are as good as useless * * * and the clamors of one or two hundred thousand of the most obstinate and bitter workingmen are as ineffective as arrows against an armor-plated ship."

"What the Webbs say here of the great industrial establishments of England and the United States is also true of Germany," says Bebel. "Look at the great German industrial establishments of Krupp, Stumm, the 'Dortmunder Union,' the 'Laurelhuette,' and the 'Vulcan,' etc., to say nothing of the railway and other government works, and the accuracy of their statement strikes us at once."

It is Bebel's conclusion that it is not only almost impossible to organize the workers in trustified industries, but it is also next to impossible for them to expect to win a strike. "The condition of these workingmen can be improved," he declares, "only by governmental and legislative measures."

The conclusions of a veteran like Bebel and of such thoroughgoing students as Sidney and Beatrice Webb are not to be put lightly aside. On the other hand, the working class will not abandon the strike on the advice of anyone. It is a weapon too natural and elemental to be given up even in the fight with the trusts until experience has proved whether or not it is useless. It may be true that in the future political action will largely take the place of the strike in the warfare between the trusts and labor, but no one can doubt that labor organizations have yet a great role to play, even in the fight on monopoly. There is, however, no getting away from the immensity of the new problems confronting the trade unions. If a reformatory general strike is doomed to failure, where the consolidation of capital is perfected—and this will not be readily admitted—a partial strike has even less chance of success. The advantages enjoyed by the partial strike where competition still exists disappear utterly where competition has ceased to exist.

There are those leaders, however, who believe that labor itself can create a new rivalry to monopoly that may even break the power of the trusts. For instance, it is urged that trade unions should raise funds and buy outright certain industrial enterprises. Suppose the United Mine Workers of America, before declaring a general strike, were to purchase two or three big mines. By this means they could establish a rivalry to their capitalist opponents which might become very formidable. They could thus keep a large part of their men at work, supply the public with coal, and reap all the advantages that would come from the rising market. The general strike would in such an instance help the co-operative enterprise. And the fear of that might force the coal barons to grant the demands of the strikers. In any case, it is claimed, this might be the beginning of the co-operative ownership of the mining industry. The plan is, of course, a mere speculation, and I think that for America, at least, there are dangers in such a plan. The suggestion is given here merely to show that the practical working-class leaders of Europe fully recognize the immediate problems that lie before the trade union movement under modern trustified capitalism, and the increasing uncertainty that now attends every strike, whether partial or general.

$25.00 REWARD.

A reward of $25.00 will be paid by Mrs. Linnie Lankford for information leading to the present address of her father, Duran Cheesman, who left Centerville, Iowa, about thirty six years ago. He is now about 64 years of age, and it was rumored that a man answering his name resided in Idaho Springs, Colorado, a short time ago. Anyone knowing his present whereabouts will please write to George Duckworth, Centerville, Iowa. 4t

SECRETARIES TAKE NOTICE.

Goldroad, Arizona, February 6, 1913.

To Ernest Mills, Secretary W. F. M.:

Dear Sir and Brother—Please have the following notice inserted in the Miners' Magazine:

On or about February 4, 1913, three membership cards were stolen from the Miners' Union Hall at Goldroad, Arizona. The cards were issued to the following persons: John Deluchi, who reinstated from No. 135, and was afterwards denied admission to this union on the grounds that he was fined by No. 135. The other two cards were probation cards issued to William Gholson and William Hook. It is supposed that the cards were taken by someone passing through camp for the purpose of misrepresenting themselves as union men. Fraternally, THOMAS A. FRENCH, (Seal) Secretary Snowball Miners' Union No. 124, W. F. M.

THE SOWER—A PARABLE.

By J. G. Schwalm.

There will be men walking the streets without work when Gabriel blows his horn.—Robert Hartley.

And there was a sower that went forth to sow. His stature was vast as the universe and the power of his arm was irresistible. His field was the entire of space and his day was from eternity to eternity. And his name was Fate—and he was blind.

And he cast from his hand the seed of stars, and some grew into great suns, others into planets and some into frozen, lifeless satellites.

And the earth seed fell into the solar spaces and became what it became: a world of strife and struggle—animate and inanimate.

And the inanimate was cast, and through convulsion and flood, the majestic and the mean; the fertile vale, the desert, the stony places and the high mountain came forth. And forests were planted and the grain and vegetable kingdoms—and the earth was void of order and the blindness of Fate ruled supreme.

And the Sower scattered the seeds of animation. And it grew from the inarticulate to the articulate, from the invertebrate to the vertebrate and evolved through fish, reptile, mammal, into man.

And the earth was red with blood and carnage. Claw and fang preyed on innocence, and the strong slaughtered the weak and helpless.

And the seed of the Sower brought forth nations, races and religions. And the nations wasted themselves with war, the races with superstition and the religions trusted to Fate and he was blind. And the glory of war was of murder, and the reverence of superstition was of ignorance and the supplication of Fate was of fear. And there was pain and darkness and terror, and the blindness of Fate ruled supreme.

And the Sower again went forth to sow, and a seed fell on good soil and from it sprang the tree of knowledge, and its leaves brought peace to the nations, its blossoms enlightened the races and its fruits dispelled the fears of religion. And the weak and helpless were saved from the strong, and claw and fang were purged from the earth. The desert was turned into a garden and the stony places were made places of delight. Out of disorder came harmony and in the place of want and distress came plenty and comfort. And the branches of the tree of knowledge covered the face of the earth and all who walked, walked gloriously, because by appointment, order and law.

NIGHT ON THE CONVICT SHIP.

By Edwin F. Bowers in Machinists' Monthly Journal.

That marine Castle of Torture—the English convict ship, Success—lies at anchor by the wharf, bloodstained from stem to stern.

Every plank, every sail, every rope, every spar, is heavy with the maledictions of human beings—"convicts"—we call them, immured in this awful hell for various offenses, or for no offenses at all.

Over 2,000 have been done to death, with all the devilish ingenuity and malignity of which it would seem that none but a race of devils could be guilty.

We stand at night by those horrid cells, and in imagination bring forth this inferno of the early years of the last century.

The ship's sailors say that in the dead witching hours moans and shrieks, opening and shutting of doors, clanking of chains, and the dreadful sucking sounds of anguish drive them to the upper decks to escape—under the calm stars and in the soft ocean breezes—the terror of it all.

Deep in the hold we linger by the cell of the condemned. Those shortly to be swung from the yard-arm aloft are manacled hand and foot and bound around the waist with a huge iron chain, awaiting their merciful end.

Imagination plays strange tricks down here. Peering through the barred gratings of the cells we see the bloodshot eyes, the snarling fangs of the brutalized victims of man's inhumanity, and as we visualize the "disciplinary" flogging, a demoniacal shriek accompanies the hiss of the cutting thongs biting into quivering flesh.

A cold shudder creeps up our spine. The insane inmates of the Tigers' Den grasp their murderous hammers and again throw themselves upon the infamous monster who ruled their pitiful destines, pounding his skull into a bloody pulp.

Once again our ears are stabbed by the yells of the maniacs as they brain one another with their besmeared weapons.

We rush from the hold to the clearer air under the grated hatches of the intermediate deck, where we listen to the ominous clank, clank of the leg chains as the prisoners pace—like caged wolves—the narrow confines of their cells.

We escape to the deck and groan in sympathy with the murdered hundreds. With hearts torn in anguish, and eyes blinded in tears of pity and sorrow for their hard lot, we realize that it is now but a frightful memory—a monstrous relic of a hell that shall never more be permitted on earth or sea.

"The good old times!" thank God that they have passed, never to return. The world is bad enough in all conscience—but we have made some progress. We have far to travel, much to undo, unaccounted iniquities yet to reform, but slowly, surely, the world advances and with it our duties and obligations to derelicts and unfortunates.

Ugh! What a lesson!

And they called it "Success." Such blasphemy!

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 12.—The Webb bill, which prohibits the shipment of liquor in interstate traffic when consigned to dealers who intend to sell it in "dry" territory, contrary to local laws, passed the House after the most spirited debate of the present session.

Liquor organizations generally were opposed to the passage of this measure and labor men in Congress to a man voted against it.

One of the best speeches made on the bill was that by Representative Victor L. Berger, the Socialist member. Berger's speech was the hit of the debate. His thrusts at the hypocrisy displayed by the old parties on liquor legislation were vigorously applauded by the members of whichever party was not hit. Berger's argument was that the bettering of economic conditions is the real solution of the drunkenness problem, and he warned the Republicans and Democrats that enforced prohibition in districts where capitalist exploitation in wrecking the physical and nervous lives of workers would result in the latter turning to drugs for stimulation. Berger said:

"I surely do not hold any brief to defend the liquor dealers. Among the bitterest enemies of the Socialists in Milwaukee and everywhere are the saloonkeepers as a class. Out of the 2,800 saloonkeepers and liquor dealers in Milwaukee I believe there are hardly twenty-eight with us, or one in a hundred. They have no reason to love us—we spend no money in saloons during election and we were instrumental in abolishing this source of revenue for them. Moreover, within ten weeks after we got into power in Milwaukee we closed up about 104 saloons—more than the Democrats and Republicans had closed up in sixty-five years.

"Liquor is one of the most dangerous enemies the working class has. Liquor is one of the most dangerous enemies the Socialist movement has. A man must be sober before he understands us. We must be able to appeal to his intellect. We can do nothing with a man who drinks to excess.

"We appeal to the better nature of the workingman, to his ambitions, to the dissatisfaction with his surroundings, to the dissatisfaction with his miserable conditions. A drunken man has no ambitions. A drunken man is satisfied with his surroundings and his condition. The Socialists have no use for a man who is a drunkard. And liquor is one of our greatest enemies.

"This is one of the reasons why the Socialist parties the world over are the great temperance organizations in the world. The Social-Democratic party of Germany has reduced the consumption of alcoholic beverages in Germany fifty per cent in one year. They have even reduced the consumption of beer in Munich, which was no easy task indeed. The Socialists of Germany, Belgium, Austria and England are everywhere forming temperance and abstinence societies; the leaders setting the example.

"Prohibition does not prohibit. It cannot control appetite, and a man who wants to get intoxicated will find ways and means to intoxicate himself. And if he cannot get the intoxication from alcohol, he will get it from opium, cocaine, morphine or any other way. In other words, prohibition will bring about the drug habit instead of a liquor habit.

"Now I say again that I do not like the saloons as an institution, but the saloon—like many other ills of society—is the outcome of the miserable economic conditions. It is the result of the profit system. And all methods of dealing with the liquor question which do not at the same time elevate the social conditions of the masses of the people—and do not involve the elimination of private profit—are bound to fail.

"The saloon may be a very poor substitute for a club-house, but it is the only club-house the workingman has these days, and unless you can provide something better you have no right to take it away from him. You cannot make human beings good by law as long as you keep up rotten economic conditions and miserable conditions by your laws.

"If you want no malaria and no mosquitoes you must drain the swamps that breed mosquitoes and create malaria.

"Drunkenness is not the cause of poverty. In nine cases out of ten poverty is the cause of drunkenness."

SITUATION AT BINGHAM, UTAH.

Bingham, Utah, February 12, 1913.

Although we do not have anything startling to write about this time, we will endeavor to give a review of the happenings as they have occurred since our last writing. Last week the Utah Copper Company had, through misrepresentation, been able to gather up sixty or seventy Greeks and landed them in Bingham, but when the Greeks came here and saw for themselves, they refused to go to work and went back again from whence they came.

Those Greeks that could master the English language came to the police station in Bingham and told the following tale:

That they came from Massachusetts, that they were promised $3 to $4 a day wages, that the climate here was tropical, with an abundance of fruit, such as bananas, oranges and such, which tale goes to show what straits the mining companies are in and to what desperate means they will resort to in trying to procure labor. The scabs that are working on the Utah Copper tell the same tale—that the operations on that property are considered a joke.

The foreman on the U. S. mine said that if he could get the old boys back to work he could pay them $7 per day and yet make dividends for the owners, "but with those we have now, we go in the hole every day we are running."

At the Ohio Copper mine the company claims to have all the men they need and are turning men away, yet they secretly are sending word to their old employés to come back, that their jobs are waiting for them any time. Last week the Ohio Copper stock sold down to 70 cents a share on the different exchanges, which tells the tale better than we can. It is all right as long as the stockholders are willing to put up the dollar assessments for Mr. Heinze to squander. It is freely predicted in Salt Lake that another assessment is to be called soon.

A few days ago we read the belated financial report of the Nevada Consolidated Mining Company of Ely, Nevada, for the last three months of 1912. It tells a tale well worth reading by the stockholders. It shows that the company went behind in their operations to the amount of $42,000, and yet, the strike there only lasted a few weeks. What will the Utah Copper report show—as badly crippled as they are and their yards full of crippled engines?

PRESS COMMITTEE.

BINGHAM ELIOT'S HEROES.

A few years ago a personage by the name of Eliot, who was then president of Harvard College, gave a new definition to the word "hero." According to this eminent authority, a hero is one who, when there is a strike, betrays his fellow-man, becomes a traitor to his class by going to work as a strikebreaker; in other words, a scab, according to Eliot. is a hero. Whether such heroes should be decorated with a Carnegie hero medal he sayeth not; but we opine that "Andy's" medals, dripping with the blood of the steel workers and the Homestead battle, would be very appropriate for these heroes, and would shine with effulgent splendor on their manly (?) breasts.

With this prologue we will now take up our subject, viz., Bingham Eliot heroes. Bingham at the present time is afflicted with a band of these worthies, and a more despicable lot of invertebrate ingrates would be hard to find.

They are found in all the ranks of labor, from the so-called aristocrat woh pulls the throttle and his side-kicker, the one with the scoop shovel, to the one who gives the "high-ball" down to the one with the "muck stick."

They can be seen on the streets of Bingham every day with their "full (?) dinner pail" and hang-dog look, going to and from the shambles. Many of them are really heroes. as they pack a small cannon, which is very appropriate, as "guns and scabs go together."

When at work they are carefully looked after by some lynx-eyed bad gunman from Goldfield or some other place, and there is plenty of these degenerates and offscourings to do the dirty work of the corporations. But just imagine a band of heroes being guarded like a lot of convicts. Perhaps it is well so, as irresponsible people need guardians or guards to protect them, as they are incapable of protecting themselves. These poltroons have been so long under the watchful care of a master that their system has become saturated with the virus of vassalage, and if perchance they are for a time compelled to cease work on account of a strike, a dreadful lonesomeness takes possession of them, a great longing for the "master's voice" wells up in them, and, oh! how sweet that voice to them is—nothing ever composed by Wagner, Handel or Beethoven, or any other celebrity of the musical world, can compare to it in sweetness; it is even sweeter than anything that came from the lyre of an Orpheus.

Then, too, the flavor is like the fabled nectar of the gods—"the memory lingers." To them the odor of powder smoke is more delectable than the aroma of attar of roses, and when at night they lay themselves down they can do so with the thought that they have been a faithful servant for the labor-crushing corporations, and that they have helped to grind liberty-loving manhood and womanhood under the "iron heel" of mammon. That their perfidy may be the means whereby their daughter may be compelled to sell her virtue and their son forced to a life of crime is nothing to them. "Eyes have they, but they see not; ears have they, but they hear not," so steeped are they in their trepitude that they can see no justice in workingmen asking for a few more crumbs; their highest joy is to see the corporations extract the "pound of flesh."

This is a brief description of some of the Eliot heroes; but there is another bunch here infinitely worse than these, and there is no word in the English language to describe them; even a Brann could not paint them in their true colors. A jellyfish is far superior to them. We now have reference to these pariahs who had no use for a labor organization, but who willingly accepted relief and howled like a coyote for more, and then they turned around and smote the hand that fed them, became traitors to the organization that was trying to better and make happier their lives, violated their obligation to themselves and their fellow-men, prostituted their manhood, sold themselves for a mess of pottage and worst of all they are handing down to their progeny a tarnished name.

What an indictment, what a record to go through life with, looked down on and despised by their fellow-men; by their own acts they stand condemned and their deeds follow after them. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Among these are some of the most depraved specimens of humanity that ever appeared on the industrial horizon of this or any other civilized country. It will therefore be necessary to give a brief outline of the action taken by a few of these distorted wretches, who through their cupidity, left no stone unturned to prostitute the efforts of their fellow-men, who as a result of such manifest and intolerable working and living conditions, were forced to strike for a wage sufficient to keep their wives and babies from starving to death, while they are wearing out a miserable existence in the gloryholes and cesspools of mammon for a mere pittance.

The first of these to be placed on exhibition is one, —— Hart. Now, you, dear reader, of course, understand that where there is so much Hart there can be but very little room left for a soul; possibly a small stone occupied this repository of manhood. This craven-hearted Judas was one amongst the very first to assist the Utah Copper Company in their effort to defeat the strikers, being first employed as dinkey-skinner, thence to level boss. which position was held by him at the time the strike was called, and although having no experience as a steam shovel engineer, gladly accepted a position as such when a scab was needed to start these dividend-making giants.

The next on exhibition is one, —— Dowdle. This is also a very rare specimen, owing to the fact that he too was also amongst the first in the ranks of the scabs. This imbecile was formerly employed as electrician, and after working as a scab for over twenty days, his miserabel conscience began to work a hardship on him, the stigma of industrial prostitution began to blacken his future, the skull and cross-bones of wage slavery were hammering on the door of his dome of intellect; he heard the voices of the starving calling for bread. It was more than his miserable sould could endure. His conscience called upon him to remove the dagger from the heart of labor and to redress the wrongs he had imposed upon his fellow-men. This chameleon, after mustering sufficient courage, finally appealed to organized labor for a place in their ranks as a means to avert his impending industrial ruin in the future, did not have long to wait until the hand of as true and tried an organization as ever championed the cause of labor was extended to this woe-begone wretch. After being given a paid-up union card, and without any cost to him whatever, this hybrid immediately departed for Eureka, Utah, where it was shown he had secured employment at good wages and fair working conditions, as well as enjoying the environment of his father's home. After working one shift it developed that he did not like the position and further expressed a desire to return to Bingham. His father and brother both remonstrated with him not to return to the land of the scabs, and further agreed to turn over half of their earnings to him as a means to prevent a return to Bingham, but it was all of no avail, and in a day or two this invertebrate menial was found once more in the cesspool of degradation and despair.

Exhibition No. 3—Lawhorn. In calling you attention to this specimen it is very necessary to emphasize the word depravity, as even in its most abject form it is still insufficient to do justice to this proletarian hybrid. It has always been the aim of Exhibit No. 3 to continually insist on strangling the onward march of unionism and the labor movement in general Shortly after the strike was called this onager, in company wtih several others (some of whom will be mentioned later), called a public meeting of the men on strike for the purpose of trying to get them to go back to work and otherwise subvert their efforts in the fight for a wage sufficient to keep themselves and their families from starvation. This move, however, proved an absolute failure, for the strikers again voted to stand by their original strike decision. This blow having killed the spirit of further revolt in this industrial criminal, he simply crawled back to the glory hole of perdition, there to remain until Gabriel blows his horn.

It is not our intention, dear reader, to take up all of your valuable time, but before we adjourn it will be very necessary to call your attention to at least one more of these aristocratic labor freaks—one Stringham by name, who was also a close friend and consort of Exhibit No. 3. This contaminated mendicant intended to act as chairman of the special meeting in question. Everything went along fine until the time arrived to appear on the scene and take charge of the meeting. At this point, however, a little backbone was needed, but like every other invertebrate, with hinges in his knees, even all the firewater he could pour into his miserable tabernacle utterly failed to produce sufficient artificial courage to face that august body of workingmen, whom this moral degenerate was trying with all his might to betray. Be he, too, like the rest of his class, crawled in the mire of avarice and greed back to the deprofundis, from where all industrial prostitutes eminate.

A ROAST FOR TEDDY.

Butte, Montana, February 9, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

"The greatest man in history," (he thinks so, anyhow), T. R., trust buster, saviour of America and several other titles, has received many flattering notices from those who fondly imagine him to be "It," but Reynolds' newspaper some time agone put him just where he belonged. I doubt if a dozen people ever saw the roast, so I will give it for the benefit of his admirers. The "muriatic acid" is from the pen of "Gracchus," the London correspondent:

Respected sir, no doubt when you landed on our shores you felt much aggrieved that Providence did not consult you before removing from our midst our beloved King and ruler, Edward the Seventh. You felt that you should have been consulted, and your disappointment at being overlooked is keen, yet Providence does things in its own way and time, in our country, irrespective of anyone's wishes.

Sir, there was some difference hetween you and our King. You talk of doing things; he did things. At the funeral obsequies you showed poor taste in desiring a position that did not rightfully belong to you, nor which you should have, but your propensity to bask in the limelight overcame your better judgment, if you ever possessed any.

Before landing here you lectured at the Sorbourne in poor taste and worse French before the students on a subject of which you knew absolutely nothing and a study which was part of the curriculum, and made a laughing stock of yourself.

You Americans have a very appropriate bit of slang called "peddling hot air," and, sir, you are a master in dispensing it for the edification of a portion of your countrymen who are guillible enough to swallow it, along with the cheap notoriety of which patent medicine vendors acquire in your country. Cheap newspaper notoriety, and that is the kind which is sweet incense to your nostrils.

You come over here and try to dictate to us how we should rule our country and our foreign holdings, when the fact is you did not, could not, rule your own country, yet tell us what course to pursue in Egypt or get out! "On what flesh hath this Caesar fed that he has grown so great?"

The most momentous questions of the times you dismiss with a word or a dash of the pen; from your decision there is no appeal; dear sir, you are laughable!

You posed as a trust buster! What have you ever busted beside a bladder of "hot air"?

What have you ever done for "your people," as you term them

The race question, which has engaged the minds of deep thinkers, you claim to have solved without any trouble, when the fact is it is as far from a solution as it ever was.

If there is any subject on which you do not consider yourself an authority, from teething babes and race suicide to the propagation of elephants and hibernation of bears, we have yet to hear of it.

Come, be honest, dear sir; don't you honestly take yourself too seriously? We do, and hence take you at your real value: you at all times want to be in the center of the stage, the spot of the limelight, you want applause, adulation, want to be thought that which you are not and will never be, always spouting "hot air," and like the advertisements of American patent medicines, want your name placarded before the public.

Come down from the lofty pedestal on which you have placed yourself; in the full meaning of the phrase in the suggestive American vernacular, "Get next to yourself."

Your own country needs men who act—not talk; who do not indulge in vituperation and ridicule and call men thieves and liars when they do not agree with you at all times and in all things, and who dare be honest and truthful in their dealings with all the affairs of the country they are supposed to serve. Sir, you are none of these: your words are mere empty sound and carry no weight, for no one believes you, not here at least.

Deeds count, not words, and when you show us that you have accomplished many needed reforms in your own country that will benefit all mankind, then perhaps we may listen to you and give ear to your "words of wisdom" which unsolicited you so lavishly bestow on unwilling hearers.

Come down from your pedestal lest it fall over on you.

"GRACCHUS."

W. E. H., by permission of "Reynolds'."

INTERESTING LETTER FROM ORGANIZER CROUGH.

Perth Amboy, New Jersey, February 8, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

Three hundred miners employed by the Thomas Mining Company at the Richard mine, Wharton, New Jersey, went out on strike because the mining company ordered them to go down into and up out of the mine on their own time, ordered them to eat their lunches underground on the day shift and added three extra hours to the Saturday shift.

For working this extra time and assuming those extra risks the company decided to allow them 10 per cent increase in wages, the old scale of wages being $1.75 for muckers and trammers and $2 for machine men.

There is a state law in New Jersey called the employers' liability act. This law makes it compulsory on the employer to pay damages to any employé who may be injured while at his work, regardless of any contributory negligence of any fellow employé.

The miners employed by the Thomas Iron Company plainly understood that the object of the company in trying to compel them go into and out of the mine on their own time was to defeat the purpose of the employers' liability act as much as possible. The seriousness of this rule can readily be seen when it is known that this company takes no precautions to protect the employés. The shafts are not safe. The skips and cages used are old-fashioned and no modern appliances are used. There are no guard rails around the shafts and it is a proven fact that the majority of the employés injured were injured while riding up and down those shafts.

From practical experience the miners knew that a day shift of nine hours and forty minutes for five days per week with a seven-hour shift on Saturday was about as long hours as it was possible for them to work, and in order that they might keep themselves in at least a partly healthy condition, they knew they ought come on surface for the noon hour, as was customary in this mine for a number of years.

They very readily saw that the increase of wages offered by the company, instead of being a benefit, was intended to make them work longer hours and assume further risks at the old scale of wages per hour.

The men had been on strike two or three days before Marjan Maslowski and I arrived on the scene. We explained to the strikers it was almost impossible for them to win without some sort of an organization. When they understood we were organizing for the Western Federation of Miners they immediately called a mass meeting. An organization was perfected at that meeting and proper demands drawn up and presented to the officials of the company.

At the present time there is not even one striker who is not a member of Wharton Miners' Union.

When the Thomas Iron Company realized the men were organized they were offered and sought the assistance of the other companies in the district.

The far-reaching effect of this combination will be understood when it is explained that the New Jersey Zinc Co. of Franklin furnace is one of the companies which is more than willing to assist the Thomas Iron Company in smashing Wharton Miners' Union. The various companies operating in the district know that a victory for Wharton Miners' Union means the organizing of the entire district, and in spite of the concerted action of the companies, the Wharton miners will win.

The Thomas Iron Company, through their superintendents and other minions, did all in their power to get the strikers to return to work. They had their lick-spittles mixing daily with the Hungarian, Slavish, Polish and American miners, begging them to return to work. They soon found it was useless to try and break the ranks of the strikers, for regardless of national or other lines, the men stood and are standing solid and get on the picket line each day more determined than they were the day previous to strike and fight for their organization and their rights.

After a few weeks of the fight had shown the company the strikers were getting more determined, they sought the aid of the Berghoff Brothers of New York, the most notorious strike-breaking agency in the United States.

This agency imported over one hundred thugs, gunmen and strike-breakers to Wharton. Immediately on arriving they attempted to get the sheriff deputize their entire force. The sheriff has refused to do so up to the present time and says he will not deputize them in the future.

Berghoffs and their degenerate hirelings are now attempting to keep the pumps and engines running. After five days they have not succeeded in running one pump. The result is the mine is slowly filling with water.

This bunch of thugs, armed with rifles and six-shooters, parade all over the property. They walk up and down the county road in defiance of law and order, insulting women and threatening men. Their actions became so rotten that a deputy sheriff interfered and was told in the language of those Bowery toughs that "they did not give a d—— for the deputy nor the sheriff."

The strikers at Wharton are getting a very practical demonstration of the class struggle. They are getting more than a practical demonstration of what is meant by law and order. In using the only weapon at their command—the strike—to force better living conditions for themselves and their families, they are met with an armed force by the company.

The strikers at Wharton have lived there and worked for the Thomas Mines Iron Company for years. They are known as honest and law-abiding citizens. They conducted their strike in a peaceful manner, and they will conduct it in a peaceful manner to the end. They cannot be charged with even a technical violation of the law. Yet the governor of this state and the sheriff of this county allow this mining company to import toughs and thugs from the New York Bowery into a peaceful community to terrorize, not alone the striking miners, but hundreds of other law-abiding citizens who reside in the district.

Those gunmen are continually shooting with rifles and revolvers on the company's property and on the public highway. They openly tell the purpose is to intimidate the strikers. They handle guns so recklessly that they have seriously wounded some of their own men.

The sheriff has some forty deputies on the ground and they don't seem to have even tried to stop or prevent those thugs from using arms. The sheriff says they have the right to go armed to the teeth.

That is the law and order preached and practiced in the state of New Jersey. That is the new teaching of law and order that the strikers are witnessing, and full well the striking miners understand that if they attempted to walk the public highways with guns in their hands or even walked around their homes with guns in their hands the state militia would be sent here to disarm them and throw them into prisons and bull-pens for doing the very things they allow and excuse a mining company to do. The miners at Wharton are having the same practical demonstration that there is one law for the capitalist and another for the worker that the miners of the Cripple Creek district had in 1903 and 1904.

In the face of all this intimidation and abuse the strikers are standing like veterans in the movement. The intimidation and abuse is only making them more determined to fight a winning battle. They have the sympathy of the general public in the district. Every resident knows the miners are fighting for the right. They know the cause is a just one and that any man with good red blood in his veins would protest and rebel against the working conditions the Thomas Mining Company attempted to force on its employés.

Just how long the strike will continue is hard to tell at present time. We are preparing for a long fight. Every union in the district is assisting us and are offering what financial aid they can afford.

The strikers are confident of victory, and when the fight is won they are determined to carry on a campaign of education and organization in this district until every miner working in the district is a member of Wharton Miners' Union. Very fraternally yours, EDW. CROUGH.

[Since the above was written the strike has been won.—Ed.]

ORGANIZATION IN ILLINOIS.

By Emma F. Langdon.

Probably something of the progress of organization work in Illinois may be interesting to the membership.

The Western Federation has three local unions of smeltermen in this state, Collinsville, Alton and Sandoval. Prospects look good for more in the very near future.

Last June I was instructed to make a trip to Collinsville to investigate the situation there and if possible organize the men employed in and around the lead smelter near there. I had been in the Flat River district about one year. The smelter at Collinsville treats part of the ore mined in that district. The unions of the Flat River district (southeast Missouri) were in a flourishing condition and preparing to make demands for better conditions. Two of the smelters that handled the ore were wholly unorganized—the ones at Alton and Collinsville, both Guggenheim plants. Herculaneum, Mo., also smelts Flat River district ore but I had (assisted by Organizer Lassich) organized that plant in March and they had a fine local.

After receiving instructions from the president to go from Flat River to Collinsville I held several meetings there and July 2nd organized Smeltermen's Union No. 207, composed of lead workers. The first meeting held, the company demonstrated what their attitude would be. One of the management, in company with a "lesser light" or two and a special deputy, sheriff, walked into our meeting uninvited. That was a forerunner of what has continued ever since. We have been spied upon continuously—I always have an unwelcome guard somewhere near everywhere I go. Every meeting was watched—and in less than one month every charter member had been discharged. The local changed their place of meeting a number of times to put the "spotters" to as much trouble as possible. When we met in the city hall, someone watching for the company climbed a tree or on a near-by structure of some kind, so it was possible to see in the hall windows. Not only the company deputies resorted to this, but men that held official positions, "higher-ups," as they are so fond of saying. Managers and their office assistants resorted to the most degrading work of sleuths. Many of the members that were discharged were unable to obtain employment in Collinsville and were compelled to leave and of course the local lost them as members. Those that did remain worked as laborers, three or four went to work in the coal mines.

As soon as the company begun their discrimination we changed our policy of organization work—carried on the work as secretly as possible—initiating anyone we could get to join at home or sending his card by mail in order to protect each as much as possible from the company. The purpose of the company in discharging the charter members, undoubtedly, was to frighten the rest, and it served the purpose well—for it has not been easy to secure new members since the first bunch of charter members were all discharged. It seemed to have the effect of striking terror to their hearts—I never have met a class more servile to their masters. I have already said that the Collinsville lead smelter is a Guggenheim plant—it is surrounded by a high fence and a deputy is omnipresent. An organizer cannot go near and the men cannot go to a meeting without being made a target for the smelter trust. Three hundred men are employed by this company and almost every nationality is represented—Americans, Mexicans, Polish, Hungarians, Italians (very few) and colored men. More of the colored race employed than I ever saw anywhere I have ever been in the jurisdiction of the Western Federation of Miners. Also a great many Mexicans. It has never come to my attention in the past that Mexicans had invaded the smelting industry, but they are in this state in plentiful numbers. I am not confusing the Mexican and Spanish—not at all—this state has both—but the Mexicans are working in some of the lead smelters and the real, original Spanish men seem to all be in the zinc smelters, and wherever I come in contact with them I find it easy to organize them. The Mexican in the lead smelters I cannot say much about, as I have only been able to enroll one as a member thus far.

Shortly after I organized No. 207 I went to Colorado—attended the convention and was returned here in August. I found a few members of the local left although they had been persecuted greatly. We tried to regain what we had lost in members. I located in Alton and planned to divide my time between the two towns. Alton is twenty-six miles from St. Louis and I could reach Collinsville from there by an interurban line in two hours. The smelter near Alton is called Federal, is about one mile out from the city proper, on the street car line between St. Louis and Alton. This is another Guggenheim lead smelter—employs three hundred men and the same conditions prevail as in Collinsville. The majority employed at Federal are Americans and no deputies are employed, which is about the only difference I found. The company officials express and put into practice the same hatred for a labor organization.

I commenced a campaign of organization there in August along with the work in Collinsville and after holding seven meetings Sept. 15 organized a smeltermen's union, which is No. 210. By Oct. 1 every charter member had been discharged. Some of the men had worked for the company seven years. (It is hardly believable that a lead worked lived to work that long in the Federal smelter, but they did not work steady, which is probably the solution.) Some of the men were told why they were discharged and others were simply laughed at when they demanded an explanation.

Through the advice of the various labor organizations in Alton and the members of the new local, I called on Mr. Rudolph Porter, General Manager of the federal plant, and took up the matter of the wholesale and outrageous discrimination. In a conversation that lasted over an hour, I tried to convince the gentleman that his position was "un-American" and entirely in keeping with the times of Nero and should not prevail today. I used all the arguments within my ability to tell him that this was an organization age—realizing all the time that he did not need telling, as the employers are solidly organized. The employés did not ask for a closed shop—no change in working conditions—just simply that discrimination be discontinued. Mr. Porter said, in substance, that any man employed by the company, whether he had worked ten hours or ten years, that dared to attend a public meeting called by any labor organization or if they joined any union that they would certainly be discharged. I asked him if he believed in that old saying of our political friends about this being a "free country." He said: "Yes, that is just it, this IS A FREE COUNTRY AND EVERY MAN THAT WORKS FOR THIS COMPANY THAT JOINS A LABOR ORGANIZATION IS FREE TO STARVE TO DEATH AS FAR AS WE ARE CONCERNED, HE CANNOT WORK HERE." I told him we were certainly going to organize the Federal smelter—if I could not someone else would—that it might take time. He said he knew we were going to organize the plant, but he was going to do all he could to put it off as long as possible. I also told him he need not bother to keep his "spotters" near the hall, as the new men would not attend the meetings, but remain away, since he had started the discrimination. That the work was going on just the same and that he was working union men, but that he would not be able to find out who they were. He said it would take longer to organize that way. So from that day on we have never permitted anyone that joined to attend the meetings as a matter of protection. We have carried on what we hoped was a campaign of education—distributed literature, sent letters to employés at the smelter often enough to let them know we still had a local. I drafted a resolution setting forth the attitude of the company, telling of the discrimination against the members and denouncing the attitude of the management and pledging support to the Smeltermen, etc., etc., and presented it to the Alton Central Trades and the Building Trades which represents the entire labor movement of Alton and vicinity, and they adopted the resolution unanimously and ordered it given the widest publicity. A committee presented a copy to an Alton local paper and the editor gave the committee a price of $20 for space. That was plainly to prevent the publication of the resolution. I had 1,000 copies printed in a four-page pamphlet style and in company with two members of the Smeltermen's local went out as near the smelter as we could go and distributed them among the smeltermen, nailed them up on trees and posts by the roadside leading to the smelter, sent Mr. Porter one over the seal of the union and the St. Louis papers printed the document. I have never been a very enthusiastic advocate of resolutions, but in this case I had the hope that if the Smeltermen knew they had the backing of the labor movement that it might possibly strengthen their spine to some extent. We secured two new members as a result of that campaign. Every shift had a copy of the resolution given to them, and in addition to the resolution an invitation to join and an explanation how to become members without taking any chance—to send their names by mail and the management could not possibly know—no one but the organizer would know they were members until such time as the majority were members.

I do not place the blame upon the Guggenheims. The men that will submit to such tyranny are wholly to blame, one man sitting in the office, chewing a cigar and laughing at them, and three hundred of them backed by three million more; how helpless Porter and the Guggenheims if we could only arouse the workers to understand their power; but that is the question. It is a great big task to get them to understand that and one day is not long enough.

The men that were enrolled as charter members that were able to obtain employment in or near Alton have continued to pay dues and remain loyal, and we have continued the work of organization to the best of our ability. We get a sufficient number of new members each month to make up for the ones we lose by them going away. Two new ones were secured last week through correspondence. The first charter was stolen from the Building Trades Hall. They have had all kinds of trouble and discouragement, but they still are hoping to build up a large local, and I believe it will be done.

Early in October I received a message that strikebreakers were being recruited in St. Louis to go to Bingham, Utah, and I was instructed to go to St. Louis and investigate and spoil the game of the agents if possible. This took me away from organization work in Illinois for some time. I was in St. Louis part of the time, Kansas City, then went to Joplin, back to K. C., again to St. Louis and to Denver. The picket duty I found it necessary to do was certainly strenuous, but that is another story, and one that I expect to write for the Magazine sometime and furnish photographs of the bunch engaged in securing strikebreakers and the class they secured. We put them out of commission here. I was returned to the work in Illinois in November, and it was practically like beginning all over again. This time I have made St. Louis headquarters, because I have had more territory to reach and this is the most central and convenient point to work from. The smelter towns are around this city like a spider web—Alton, twenty-six miles; Sandoval, sixty-two miles, and Collinsville within an hour's ride.

November 26th I called a mass meeting of smeltermen in Sandoval, Ill. The hall was packed, but principally with organized men—coal miners and others, only eleven smeltermen. The eleven signed the charter application. but no money was collected. December 3d I held another meeting and secured forty names and collected sufficient money to pay for charter and supplies.

The Sandoval smelter is a zinc plant and not a large one; 125 men is the full capacity at this time, but the same company has under consideration a much larger plant and expect to build their own gas plant. The men employed are about equally divided between Spanish and American. The former were the first to become members. I am proud to report that today Sandoval is a thoroughly organized camp; every man working at the smelter is now a member of the Western Federation and the local is entirely out of debt and have February per capita paid. Negotiations have been started to secure an agreement with the company which will carry with it the check-off as in practice in the U. M. W. of A. The membership have expressed themselves as willing to continue work for one year at the same wage and working conditions if the company will recognize the union. We have hoped from the first to obtain an agreement embodying the check-off with the company in Sandoval, and if nothing very unexpected happens we will get it.

In the near future, if I am continued in this field, I intend to invade other smelter districts of the state; have already carried on considerable preliminary work in Danville. When I go to Danville to install a local there, will go on to LaSalle and Peru. All of the towns mentioned have a large smelter The two largest smelters in the state are located near Danville and LaSalle, and if we are able to organize just the two plants it will add one thousand members to the organization. The company operating near Danville have already given evidence of being willing to resist organization. Illinois is worth considering now in the number of smelters in various parts of the state, and I believe from general observation that Illinois will be even a greater smelting section in the future; two new smelters are under construction at this time, one between St. Louis and Collinsville, that will be ready to smelt ore some time this year; will employ three hundred to five hundred men. Only union men have been employed in the construction work. This is called the "Granby" Company, but I have been informed it is the property of the St. Louis Smelting and Refining Co. At Hillsboro, Ill., there are two smelters, zinc and lead. One has been shut down all fall, and only begun work in January. In South St. Louis there is a zinc plant that employs about two hundred men. This is located just off Broadway—7000 or Carondelet. The men employed are nearly all Spanish, with a few Polish. I spent Sunday, February 9th, among these men, and they talked favorably toward organization. They all belong to a Spanish society and have their own club rooms. I was invited to visit the society Sunday, but only a few were present.

In addition to the lead smelter in Collinsville there is a zinc smelter employing about 135 men, Spanish and American. Meetings were held right near the zinc smelter three nights last week for the purpose of reaching men that could not be induced to go uptown to a meeting. Time and again I have had bills distributed for meetings, especially for the zinc workers, but they would not go to the hall. The smelter is about one mile from the city hall (opposite side from the lead smelter) and as it was impossible to get them to town, I arranged to go near the smelter. The only place available was an old summer hall next door to a "refreshment parlor" where many of them congregated evenings. This place was rented and three meetings held. It was right across the road from the smelter office. It was pretty cold weather for dance-pavilion meetings, being down to zero, but the meetings were successful. Forty new members for Collinsville No. 207 were enrolled, majority Spanish. Other meetings are scheduled, both near the smelter and up in the city, so things look good for that local now.

This only touches the situation in Illinois; the state is dotted everywhere with smelters; many of them can be organized; some companies will fight, and fight hard, but the Federation should not leave this state without an organizer at any time, now that we have floated the W. F. M. banner here. In every camp the American men are the most difficult to interest in the organization and the Spanish have been the least trouble as yet. At no time have I had the services of an interpreter—just talk Arkansas English to them.

Illinois has 500,000 unionists affiliated with the State Federation. Of these about 75,000 are coal miners. In this state labor boasts of having more laws upon the statute books for the protection of the wage-workers than any other place in the country.

Illinois proudly claims such martyrs to the cause of freedom as Lincoln and Lovejoy, and yet now the state is partially ruled by a smelter trust. Within a few minutes' ride of the Lincoln monument in Springfield a smelter operates. The employés of the smelter are as helpless as the chattel slaves were a half century ago.

More than half a century ago there lived a man in Alton that raised his voice and used his pen against chattel slavery. As editor of the "Alton Observer" back in the "30s" (1837) Elijah Parish Lovejoy in his editorials bitterly denounced chattel slavery. His printing plant was destroyed—thrown into the river; he was murdered. The people of Alton murdered him in 1837 and since have erected a monument to his memory and the victory of the cause for which he so nobly fought almost alone, in that vicinity at that time. The monument is an imposing one. On the side facing the entrance to this massive pile of marble and granite w eread: "Elijah Parish Lovejoy, editor Alton Observer; Albion, Me., November 8, 1802; Alton, Ill., November 7, 1837; martyr to liberty." Then directly below the above letters the following: "I have swern eternal opposition to slavery, and by the blessings of God I will never turn back." On another side of the monument is another: "If the laws of my country fail to protect me I appeal to God and with Him I cheerfullly rest my cause—I can die at my post but I cannot desert it."

On one side there is a bronze plate fac-simile of a printing press and quotations from some of his speeches championing the cause of free speech and a free press. One that struck me forcibly: "But gentlemen, as long as I am an American citizen and as long as American blood runs in these veins, I shall hold myself at liberty to speak, write, to publish whatever I please on any subject, being amenable to the laws of my country for the same." The base of the monument covers considerable ground and several heavy copper or bronze plates are bolted into the marble and such inscriptions as the following, I copied: "Salvo, Victores! This monument commemorates the valor, devotion and sacrifice of the noble defenders of the press, who, in this city, Nov. 7, 1837, made the first armed resistence to the aggressions of the slave power in America!" At the very back of the large wall supporting the monument is the following: "Historic Alton, Alton that slew him and Alton that defended him, Alton, whose people today with one heart and one hand pluck from oblivion this wreath of immortality and place it above the memory of Lovejoy." Last, but the very best of all the inscriptions:

"Whether on scaffold high or in the battle's van,
The fittest place for man to die is where he dies for man."

The monument was erected in 1896-97 by the citizens of Alton and the state of Illinois. After all these years of education, all the martyrs to the cause of freedom, three million organized workers, libraries, public schools, woman suffrage in ten states, yet in the proud state of Illinois that produced a Lincoln and a Lovejoy a smelting trust, represented by a general manager of Federal smelter, Rudolph Porter, says: "Every man employed in or around this smelter, whether he has been employed ten days or ten years, that unites with his fellow-workers into an organization cannot work—can starve to death."

The smelter is within a half mile of the towering monument. The workers at the Federal stockade are as servile to the "boss" as any chattel slave in whose behalf Lovejoy used his pen.

Verily, verily, how much longer will it take them to wake up under such tyranny from one very ordinary man?

INTERNATIONAL NEWS LETTER (IS).

A Synopsis of Facts Relating to the Trade Union Movement of the World—Issued by the International Secretariat of National Trade Union Centers—Affiliated Membership Over 7,000,000.

Berlin, January 23, 1913.

American Blacksmiths Desire Closer Communication with Sister Unions in Other Countries.—Mr. James W. Kline, the president of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, 570 Monon building, 444 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois, writes to the effect that his organization desires to enter into communication with the sister unions of other countries and exchange trade papers with them

The director of the New York Public Library, one of the largest public libraries in the world, of 476 Fifth avenue, New York city, writes that this library devotes itself particularly to the collection of publications which deal with the workers and the labor movement. He invites the workers' organizations to send him their important publications. It might be mentioned that all consignments and dispatches from Germany may be forwarded through the "Amerika-Institut," Universitätsstrasse, Berlin, post free to all places in the United States, when they are sent to the institute in extra packing, addressed and post free to said institute.

International Trade Unions' Support for the Organizations of Servia and Bulgaria.

The appeal of the International Secretariat for the support of the labor movement of Servia and Bulgaria, which has been so terribly deranged by the war, has been well responded to by all countries. This raises hopes that thanks to the international solidarity of the workers, the trades unions of these lands will be upheld, and that their movement, after the definite conclusion of the war will develop faster than ever. From Belgrade, Brother P. Pawlowitsch, the secretary of the Servian Trades Unions, writes in regard to the appeal of the International Secretariat:

"We greet the friendly advances of comrades in foreign countries, who are coming to the help of our trades unions. Upon foreign countries hangs the existence and future development of the trades unions of the Balkans. The question of the trades unions in Servia, as in all other Balkan states, is a matter of life and death. The desolating effects of the war are to be traced everywhere, and a serious economic crisis threatens the future. Only by strong organization can the effects of the devastating war be softened for the workers of the Balkans. And when that cannot be brought about—without outside help scarcely possible—an extensive emigration is soon to be reckoned upon, and this can only injure the position of the workers in other lands.

Berlin Police Regulations—A Noiseless City.

It is incredible what the police of Berlin undertake and what the president of police initiates in the way of regulations for the benefit and advantage of the inhabitants. In order to give an idea of what organizations such as the trade unions or any progressive movement have to contend with, in the way of restrictions placed upon them by the police in Germany, we quote hereunder a few paragraphs from the latest regulations regarding street order.

A little while ago the president of police endeavored to restrict the enamelling of motor-cars (taxis) to a dull red-brown, and dun color. So far that has not succeeded. Now, by the latest police regulations he tries to abolish noise, etc.

The street regulations referred to deal with scavenging and the avoidance of noise in public places. In a few words the orders mean that: All unwarranted pollution of the streets and air is prohibited! all things calculated to create dust and unpleasant noises; and particularly the trailing of clothing or other articles, throwing about of refuse and paper, pouring out of any liquid by which the streets may be rendered dirty and impure are prohibited! No distribution of handbills, therefore.

Continuing in this strain the regulations go on to state that whoever leaves or breaks vessels, such as bottles, jars, etc., in the street shall be responsible for such being immediately gathered up or cleared away. In this respect those who have the surveillance of children and unanswerable persons shall be responsible. Beating, shaking and sweeping mats, dusters and similar articles are also forbidden, as is, too, hanging or laying out unclean clothing, washing, etc., calculated to pollute the streets or air. Succeeding paragraphs deal with the cleanliness of fountains, etc.; where draught animals are watered and fed, or where liquids are easily spilled, dust-making or evil-smelling articles transported, loaded or unloaded.

In winter the regulations particularly call upon the citizens to undertake the task of preserving cleanliness. Paragraph 155 says that the residents or occupants of premises facing the street must see that the pavement is free from snow and ice from 7 a. m. till 8 p. m., and besides, that till 10 p. m., when the pavements are dangerously slippery sand, ashes or something similar must be strewn.

The playing of music in the street, or so that it can be heard in the street is only possible on permission by the authorities. Particular annoyances of this character are dealt with in paragraph 138, which says: "When in closed rooms abutting the streets, in particular apartments, restaurants and public houses, shops, etc., there is music, loud singing or loud noises caused, the doors and windows must be kept closed so that the peace of the street is not disturbed." Exceptions are made by the permission of the police. The beating of beds, carpets, clothes, upholstery and similar things, al open windows or on balconies facing the street is forbidden. Likewise there is punishment in store for those who create any unwarranted noise in streets, such as loud singing, yodeling, whistling and shouting.

On the other hand, the new regulations take action against inconsiderate drivers and cyclists who use instead of bells various instruments creating a nerve-rending noise. All draught vehicles which have no springs or such that, when increasing speed, make great noise, must proceed only at a walking pace. (paragraph 55). Useless ringing must be avoided in future and bells may only be carried by sledges.

Public advertisements, too, will receive the attention of the police president, and a "notice," the plan of which is already prepared, will be issued at the same time as the regulations come into force; its purpose shall be to protect traffic against hindrance by any kind of advertising medium.

Permission for the outside display of wares, etc., shall only be given where the pavements are at least four meters wide, where disturbance of traffic is not likely, and where the shop lies so far back and in the dark that no other method of viewing the goods is possible.

Provisions must be placed so high that they cannot be rendered dirty by dogs. Permission to display goods does not mean at the same time permission to sell in the streets. Front gardens must not be used for the display of wares except, of course, flowers and such like.

Electric light advertisements claim special attention In future such announcements will be tested by the authorities in relation to color of light and whether it will be intermittent or continuous. Limelight projections and such like advertisements mediums are not to be permitted; the measurements of transparent, roof advertisements, etc., are strictly ordained. Other forms of advertisements also come within the regulations. It is interesting to note that the historic chair and the white apron with which butchers and publicans announce the arrival of "fresh sausage" may be replaced by a small white flag, at most 50 centimeters long and wide, as long as it does not hang more than one meter out from the building line.

Further paragraphs deal with the publication of pamphlets, advertisement sheets, etc., for which drastic rules have been laid down.

Other regulations inform the citizen as to how he should cross the street, how he must behave in the street and avoid being overrun by vehicles. Indeed, it is claimed that there are about as many police regulations and orders in force in Berlin as that city numbers inhabitants. They are not intended, as the minister lately remarked in the House of Representatives, to contain all things that are forbidden. On the contrary, the police authorities hold that everything is forbidden and illegal, as long as it is not mentioned in their regulations and rules as something "not in opposition to the authorities." In Germany, of course, the police authorities are "nominated" by the ministry and their subordinate officers, apart from a few exceptions where some kind of "municipal" police is maintained. German ministers moreover, are not elected by the people or their representatives; they are chosen by the Emperor and rmain in office as long as it pleases His Majesty. If the majority of the German people were to have a say in these matters, or if ridicule or blunders made by the German "authorities" had any effect, then there is no doubt not one of the present rulers of Germany would be able to hold his seat for a single day.

Tripolitan Aftermath.

The Tripolitan war ended in wealth for its organizers. Army suppliers, etc., and shareholders of the Bank of Rome made thousands, but the working people are suffering on account of the increasing unemployment. Unemployment increased at such a rate in Italy in the last few weeks that the trade unions sent a memorandum tc the minister of public works to the effect that he should take measures against the evil. This has had no success.

A little while ago the trade unions published the result of an official inquiry into unemployment which went to show that in the Italian Midlands thousands of capable workmen are not able to find employment for more than 200 days in the year. At the present moment not even this average is reached. Since the publication of the findings of the official inquiry unemployment has spread rapidly in many places in upper Italy. For example, in the province of lower Romagna workers, particularly day workers, find themselves in autumn and winter months at a stretch out of employment, while in the province of Ravenna the average number of working days per year is only 100 to 130. In these places there are reckoned to be 16 000 unemployed amongst agricultural workers and 4,000 amongst handcraftsmen, such as carpenters, smiths, bricklayers and masons. In the province of Bologna the state of affairs is still worse, for inquiries in forty-two different districts revealed the fact that there were out of 20,237 workers, 7,031 unemployed during the first nine months of the year, while out of 18,982 women workers, 7,978 were in the same plight. Sad to say, there is no prospect of improvement

In the province of Mantua there are 10,000 day laborers without work. The cause of this condition of things is given as the alteration in the system of tenure and the introduction of new machinery into the factories But the real cause is the crippling of the textile and building industries by the war.

In industrial towns of upper Italy, such as Milan, Turin, etc., business has become stagnant. In Milan alone at the present moment there are 40,000 unemployed, and in the surrounding country districts are to be found another 20,000 in the same pitiable state.

The action of the trades unions has awakened the government to the seriousness of affairs. The trades unions advise the commencement of many public works which have been overlooked, and it is hoped the government will take up the idea in order to provide the unfortunate unemployed with work and bread.

New Workshops and Factory Laws in Germany.

Workers in zinc works and zinc smelters labor under conditions which are particularly injurious to health. Attempts are made to improve the working conditions, but in most cases they are weak-kneed efforts, and serve very little to mitigate the dangers of the evil atmosphere prevading in such works.

The German Federal Council (Bundesrat) have just made such an attempt. Based on paragraph 20 of the Industrial Regulations they have passed new rules (December 13, 1912) which shall in effect lessen the dangers of workshops. They have dealt chiefly with fitting and technical processes from an hygienic point of view; provided for the prevention and removal of dust, better ventilation and provision of pure drinking water. Further, it is ordered that the gases escaping from distilling tubes, also steam, etc., must be conducted out into the open air. Riddled ashes are not to be drawn through factories, but must be disposed of by way of a subterranean channel.

The employment of young persons and females in all smelting works and the removal of ashes and carrying of material to the furnaces is forbidden. But youths between 16 and 18 years of age may undertake such work when a doctor has certified to the effect that the development of the person will not be injured thereby.

There are various other matters dealt with, such as the position of the washing, bath and dressing rooms, which must not adjoin the dining room; and, also, a doctor must be engaged to watch over the health of the workers. It is permitted to take food in the work rooms, but a worker shall not enter the dining room before having washed hands and face.

The new regulations came into force on January 1st. More satisfaction would have been afforded had a particular exception not threatened to nullify the best in the provisions. The authorities may still give permission for the employment of females in places where they have been previously engaged till the 1st of January, 1920. A good part of the regulations will mean nothing more than mere printed paper for many works. The politician disturbs himself very little in the matter of the protection of the factory workers' health, capital demands that he be without consideration in dealing with the proletariat.

Unemployment in Building Workers' Unions of Germany.

An inquiry has revealed that the German building unions on the 26th of October last had 333,024 members. Of the 300,892 members who come within the scope of the inquiry, 271,211, equal to 90.1 per cent, were employed, and 29,678, equal to 9.9 per cent, unemployed The causes of unemployment were, in the case of 19,868 men, defective works, 2,700 men, weather conditions, 7,110 men, illness; equivalent to 6.6 per cent for the first reason, 0.9 for the second and 2.1 for the third. Of the particular trades the plasterers were worse affected, in September, and the isolators the least. Of the former, 11.1 per cent and from the latter 7.5 per cent were workless The masons had 9.1 per cent out of work and the navvies, etc., 10.5.

Brief Labor Notes From All Countries.

Argentina.—At the beginning of December Congresses of the two Federations of Trades Unions were held in Buenos Aires. These unions, although both under anarchical and syndicalist influences had up to then strongly fought each other. Since the brilliant year of 1908 the membership, especially under the regime of the anti-labor laws, has fallen off. This brought about a common meeting arranged in order to consider the amalgamation of the two unions. As no decision to this effect was arrived at, another common congress will be summoned.

Australia.—Tasmania is the first state of the commonwealth to extend the principle of providing free medical treatment for school children. Replying to questions asked in the N. S. W. Assembly, Premier McGowen said that the state employed about 200 emigration agents in Great Britain, paying no fixed salary, but allowing them 20s. for each adult agricultural laborer and domestic servant secured, 10s.; for each wife of an emigrant and each child of 12 and upwards, and 5s. for each child between 3 and 12 years of age. The Australian trade unions are sending out warnings to intending emigrants as there is acute unemployment in almost every trade in the commonwealth. . . . Fifty-seven slaughterers' assistants in Sydney have been fined to the extent of from 60s to 200s. for going on strike in opposition to the decision of the Wages' Board. . . . The syndicalists of Australia appear to be taking up the attitude of the Englishman Osborne. They are boasting of their success in evading, through a court judgment, the compulsory payment of levies in support of the Labor party imposed by the Miners' Organization of N. S. W. This action nullifies the compulsory nature of the levy.

Austria.—Many collective agreements terminate in the building trades this year. Negotiations between the organizations of the employers and employés have been without issue, as the employers stipulated in the beginning that all question of the reduction of hours must be omitted. . . . The Union of Domestic Servants are now publishing a monthly paper with a supplement "For the Youth." (Address Vereinsblatt, Weggasse 25, Vienna VI.). . . . The government is going to lay before Parliament a bill for the compulsory establishment of municipal agencies for apartments in communities of a certain size. A landlord will be compelled to announce that he has empty rooms and to announce again when they are occupied, while the municipality will have to give information to seekers of apartments and issue regularly a list of free rooms. . . . A petition with more than 10,000 signatures has been sent to Parliament by the Bakers' Union, in which it is desired that the government improve its own bill for the protection of workers in this trade, which is now before the House. . . . The new association law passed by the Imperial Parliament, but which has to pass the upper house, gives women the right to join political associations for the first time.

Belgium.—Since the end of December over 2,000 textile workers have been on strike in Roulers on account of a lockout. They demand 10 per cent increase of wages, while the employers are only willing to give 7 per cent, in some branches. . . . The Belgian Trades Unions Commission has decided to recommend the discontinuance of the common strike fund and that the contribution shall not be levied any more until the next Trades Unions' Congress. The ground of the recommendation is the formation of numerous national and centralized unions. . . . The glassworkers in Jemappes have held a protest meeting against the methods employed to make them teetotalers. At the entrance to the factories they are met by gendarmes, who see that no alcoholic drinks are smuggled into the works. Inside the factories, however, the owners can sell all kinds of alcoholic liquors in the canteens. . . . The preparations for political general strike in order to obtain universal suffrage have been carried on everywhere. The provincial trades councils have recommended all affiliated organizations to elect special commissions for the encouragement of thrift. These commissions should issue savings stamps on every opportunity, visit the workers in their homes and make clear the value of the movement to the women in particular, and report to their center monthly. . . . The question of a general strike is to be dealt with at every gathering and assembly, and the importance of avoiding alcohol and gambling emphasized. Overtime should be avoided in all cases when the increased production brought about in this way may injure the prospective strike. . . . Following in the footsteps of the Brussels' Educational Committee, which founded a Trades Unions' school last year, the co-operative center in Luttich equipped a special school for the co-operative movement which was opened on January 19th. This is a new and pleasant sign of the recognition and growing importance of the educational efforts made in the Belgian labor movement.

Canada.—The management of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congresses have informed the English Labor party that the organized workers of Canada are solid against the "warship present" which the Canadian government intend to make for political purposes. The Canadians fear a strengthening of the "jingo" agitation and the mad craze for increased armaments as a result of the gift. The workers of Canada have also repeatedly declared at the congresses their intention of working for the world's peace . . . In the effort to break down the strike of the miners at Cumberland, British Columbia, the government has given the mine owners permission to procure 700 Asiatic blacklegs. The Labor party hopes that this measure will bring the party many victories at the next election.

Denmark.—The importation of Polish and Galician workers for Danish agricultural labor was continued in 1912. In that year, according to official reports, 12,000 Polish agricultural laborers entered the country during the summer, including 9,600 women and children. On the Danish islands every twelfth worker on the land was a Pole, the number of Polish workers being 1,600 higher than in the previous year. Practically all the imported workers were engaged on the land. Only 716 were otherwise employed in work such as brickmaking, railroad laying and similar work. A curious thing is that these imported workers are not only engaged by the big land-owners, but mainly by the small farmers. In Jutland only 1,300 Poles were employed, while the small farmers on the islands engaged 10,600. These Polish workers were chiefly engaged in beet cultivation. The nationalities of the various workers were as follows: Galicians, 9,745; German Poles, 72; Russian Poles, 2,017, and about 300 belonging to other nations. A law has been in existence for some years dealing with the position and rights of imported workers and which endeavors to do away with the worst effects of exploitation.

France.—The sculptors of Bordeaux have been on strike since November in order to obtain the free Saturday afternoon. . . . An inquiry by Dr. Romlinger reveals the manner in which France is carrying civilization to Morocco, where men and women are becoming more and more accustomed to alcoholic liquors. Such drink is doubly dangerous in the climate of Morocco. In Casablanca, for example, the number of houses selling spirits rose within four years from four to 161. From 1909 to 1910 the import of alcoholic liquor doubled . . . According to official statistics re mines and quarries etc., there were in 1911 a total of 38,551 such undertakings, with 374,548 employés, of whom 43,134 work under the protection of the special laws of 1892. . . . For the support of members in Albine, who have been locked out since October 1, 1912, the Leather Workers' Unions are now levying 2d. per member per month on its comrades. . . . Since the nineteen committee members entered prison on account of the anti-miliatry agitation of the Paris Building Workers' Union, one prison alone houses not less than thirty-four trade unionists who have been sentenced for political offences. And over the door of the prison, as over all French prisons stands the proud words: "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity."

Germany.—All over the country hundreds of overcrowded public meetings have taken place in protest against the increased price of meat, and the chief cause of the increase, the tariff on imports. The immediate opening of frontiers to foreign frozen meat was in particular demanded. . . . In the middle of January the section of the longshoresmen, raftsmen and dredgers, who are organized in the Transport Workers' Union, held a branch conference in Berlin, at which 10,542 members were represented, as against 8,762 in the previous year. Over 9,300 of these are at the present moment engaged in a movement for the improvement of wages and the conditions of labor. . . . A hard fight for the improvement of the conditions under which they work is being waged by the bakers, whose employers have organized themselves against the movement. In Magdeburg the Guild of Master Bakers have decided to impose a fine on any member who comes to a tariff agreement with his employés. . . . The hotel and restaurant workers have held meetings in all towns throughout the country, at which a weekly rest day has been demanded. Up to the present these workers are protected by an old decree by which the so-called skilled personnel may claim a twenty-four hours rest day every fourteen days and six hours' rest every week. The daily work time may not exceed sixteen hours. Increase on this daily shift is not permitted on more than sixty days in the year. The unskilled workers have up to the present enjoyed absolutely no protective law. . . . Inquiries have been instituted by the Building Trades Corporation in order to ascertain the frequency of accidents in the trades. The result revealed the following facts: In the various branches accidents occurred per 1,000 workers—masons, 12.38; carpenters, 16.88; scaffolders, 43.49; painters ,5.22; glaziers, 2.74; stucco workers, 5.42; slaters, 34.90; plasterers, 5.65; well sinkers, 12.42; stove setters, 2.29; stone cutters, 8.73; stone breakers, 36.44. This inquiry covers one year. . . . According to the census of 1907, there were in Germany 196,963 foreigners permanently engaged in agricultural work, 59,819 in building, 65,520 in colleries, 29,211 in the stone and pottery trades, 15,338 in the textile industries, 12,194 in the metal work trades, 9,458 in the clothing trades. Meanwhile the numbers of foreign workers in Germany have risen rapidly. The "German Workers' Center," a private body, composed of the chambers of agriculture, etc., which obtains season laborers, and also industrial workers from abroad, where special agents are kept, prides itself on its activity for the protection of and interworking with the government. The foreign workers are compelled to obtain an annual registration card from this workers' center of the employers for which they are charged a high fee. Whoever has not such a card or has not his last employers' signature on his card to certify that the holder left his employment in a satisfactory manner, is expelled from the country. During the past year this center brought a round 600,000 foreign workers to Germany and sent them to work for the most pitiable wages and under the saddest conditions. . . . The Munich Labor Temple has just been opened. The work of erection was commenced last March on a plot of ground in one of the main streets, which was purchased for 180,000 marks (about 9,000 pounds). The building itself was ready in November, the cost amounting to 600,000 marks (about 30,000 pounds). This will be the central home of 70,000 Munich trade unionists. It contains besides restaurant rooms, a large assembly hall and the offices of the trades unions, the Social Democratic Union and the workers' own ambulance corps. There is also to be found the central library of the trades unions.

Great Britain.—An International Transport Workers' Congress will take place in London in June of this year. Previous to this it is intended to hold an International Railway Servants' Conference. . . . The strike of the 5,000 miners in Wales has terminated, since all non-union men have joined the respective unions. . . . The Union of Boilermakers have, by a referendum vote, decided to withdraw from the Labor party. . . . Five thousand dyers in Yorkshire have obtained an increase of wages from 1s. to 2s. per week and Saturday afternoon free from 1 o'clock, without having to resort to a strike. Those who are employed by members of the Employers' Association are still fighting, particularly against the introduction of piecework. . . . The strike of the London taxi drivers covers 12,000 workers. All attempts at mutual agreement have up to the present fallen through. The union is now considering a scheme to organize the taxi-motor traffic on a co-operative plan, and, after taking the advice of experts to replace petrol by some other driving power which will only necessitate the slightest alteration of the motors. The largest of the firms affected by the strike have offered to sell the motor cars to the men on the installment system. . . . Shortly after the government had declared its intention of placing its printing orders only with such firms where the eight-hour day was observed, the London County Council similarly decided to have their work done where the maximum weekly work time is fifty hours. . . . Within the first fortnight of the state unemployment insurance for building workers, shipbuilders, wheelwrights, etc., coming in force, 85,000 eligible out-of-works applied for relief. Altogether 2,250,000 workers are insured by the state against unemployment. . . . The shoemakers are negotiating with the employers regarding a tariff for the whole country. They demand a forty-eight-hour week, minimum wage of 35s. weekly for adult males, a general minimum wage for females, etc. . . . On account of the rejection of their demands, the bakers of London and district have decided to strike. They have left it to the organization to decide when the strike shall commence.

Holland.—Since January 5th the typographical trades in Amsterdam have been on strike. Altogether 1,000 assistants are affected. The employers threaten a general lockout, but have failed to move the strikers. The employers are now endeavoring to obtain foreign blacklegs or to place larger orders abroad, particularly in Belgium and Germany. It is hoped this plan will miscarry.

Hungary.—The National Congress of the Woodworkers took place on the 26th of December in Budapest. There were 13,875 members represented, as against 11,037 in 1910. Included in these figures were 11,147 joiners, 175 turners, 639 coopers, 745 upholsterers, 199 brushmakers, 396 wheelwrights, 52 basketmakers, etc. The union's capital has risen from 6,800 to 106,000 kronon. Unemployment and strike benefit is paid by the union. A proposal to introduce sick benefit was rejected. . . . Since the great strike of the Budapest waiters in 1910 the hotel and restaurant proprietors have initiated an employment agency and withdrawn patronage from the "yellow" Geneva union, though the union should have their trust as a supplier of strike-breakers. Without an agency this union cannot gain members, so it will compete with the employers in the future and Budapest will again have twenty-six professional employment agencies and twenty-four so-called "waiters' agents." An order of the Prime Minister announces that everybody except police officials, who in time prevent emigrants who have not done their military service leaving the country, will receive a reward of 8 kronen per head.

Japan.—The government has in view the preparation of a bill, which, if passed, will compel employers to divide amongst workers who have not been engaged in any stoppage of work during the year, a certain percentage of the net gains, at the end of the year.

Mexico.—What is perhaps the greatest strike in the history of Mexico is now taking place. Thousands of men employed in the shops of the National railways are demanding increased pay and an eight-hour day. The government attitude is not conciliatory.

Norway.—In Trondjem a syndicalist opposition club has been formed within the trades unions. At the head of the syndicalist movement in Norway stands the editor of the party organ in Trondhjem, Traumål, who is consciously working towards the disruption of the trades unions movement. The aim of the syndicalist propaganda in Norway is a reform of the trades unions' tactics in regard to direct action, sabotage and against the collective agreement.

Roumania.—The gut cleaners in the larger slaughter houses have been locked out for four weeks. The employers are endeavoring to get the work done abroad, especially looking for assistance to Germany and Holland. It is possible that the watchfulness of the organizations of these countries will dash this expectation to the ground.

Russia.—The celebrated doctors' society "Pirogof," has issued an urgent appeal for support for ten provinces where the people are starving for want of necessary provisions. According to the estimates of the authorities more than two million hectares of land have been left uncultivated owing to this and it is anticipated there will be still worse consequences.

South Africa.—At the first conference of the South African Labor party at Cape Town last week, one of the most important questions discussed was that of colored labor. The conference proposes to admit colored men to trade unions, provided guarantees are forthcoming that white standards will be upheld. While determined to maintain white ideals and will place no obstacles in the way of natives attaining to such, the party will observe a passive policy in regard to the latter. Heavy penalties for cohabitation of whites with blacks are insisted upon. There are 15,000 members in the South African trades unions.

Spain.—The painters of Madrid are among the few favored trades enjoying the eight-hour day. Founded in 1899, the organization since 1902 has had this working time. The first raising of wages from 3.50 to 3.85 pesetas per day was obtained in 1905 without strike. A further increase of 25 centimes was obtained in 1911 after a strike of four weeks. Shortly after, however, 800 of the 1,000 members of the organization were locked out. The workers were defeated, but the organization has recovered since then. Today the painters receive 6 pesetas and the helpers 3.50 per day of eight hours.

Sweden.—The management of the Union of Masons and Wood Workers has published a proposal to be laid before the next conference for the innovation of unemployment benefits. For the masons this makes a much higher contribution necessary. The woodworkers have discovered through inquiries that this innovation, through their connection with the building workers, would create great difficulties for them. It has, therefore, been proposed that the building workers should cut themselves off from the Industrial Union of Woodworkers and that the benefit be regulated by a collective agreement.

Switzerland.—The employers and the Liberal party are working with feverish zeal to found "yellow," or blackleg, unions all over the land. . . . The Federal Parliament has decided to create an office for social insurance for which the way has been prepared by state accident and invalidity insurance. . . . The government proposes a bill for a postoffice savings bank with franc deposits. Lower deposits can be made by means of sticking postage stamps on forms.

POETICAL

YOUR BANKER.

Agnes Thecla Fair.

Who is it greets you in old clothes,
The "hand-me-downs" from goodness knows?
Your banker.
Who is it helps you get a loan
When in your dreams the town you'll own?
Your banker.
Who is it keeps your books for you,
Knowing well we've not a sou?
Your banker.
Who is it helps you in a pinch,
When other fellows have the cinch?
Your banker.
Who is it helps the payroll go
When "city dads" with coin are slow?
Your banker.
Who was it broke the Fairplay bank
And left me by a water tank?
Why, man alive, I have to thank—
My banker.

JESUS CHRIST.

Then they seized you and they crowned you with a burning crown of thorns:
Now, the masters bow before you and a servile priesthood fawns;
In a far and distant heaven, in a dim and mystic shrine,
They have buried all the treasure of the truth that was divine.

On the cross they built for labor, lo! they hanged you in the night,
And the jeering priesthood cheered it as a deed for good and right;
But the workers gathered 'round you and the revolution spread,
And the priesthood and the masters for a moment were afraid.

Down the highroad of the ages marched your resurrected soul,
And the pagan powers trembled as their strong hands lost control;
But the priesthood and the masters they were ever full of guile,
And they re-enchained the workers with a bauble and a smile.

Yea! they built you divers temples and they took you from the sod
And set you up in heaven as an Emperor and God;
And they read a mystic meaning in your pure and simple creed,
To the foolish workers dying on the battlefield of greed.

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

THE UNITED MINE WORKERS of America has taken action to raise $200,000 per month in aid of the strikers of West Virginia

THE SALARIES paid by department stores, mills, factories and sweatshops to girls and women may be truthfully called "the wages of sin."

THERE IS NO QUESTION but that American people are prosperous. We are spending 70 per cent. of our revenues for pensions, the Army and Navy.

MORGAN AND ROCKEFELLER are still piling up millions of wealth while millions of people are growing more impoverished. Such conditions are evidence of our great prosperity.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN has been given credit for the liberation of the black slaves. But now another Abraham Lincoln is needed to liberate the white slaves from the prisons of shame.

CARDINAL GIBBONS has condemned woman suffrage as "immoral." If it is immoral for a woman to cast a ballot, will the Cardinal tell us how casting a ballot affects the moral fibre of man?

PRESIDENT TAFT as a statesman received $75,000 per annum and perquisites. Taft as a professor of law at Yale will receive $5,000 per year. The management of the Yale University has an accurate comprehension of the mediocre ability of "Injunction Bill."

PROFESSOR WILSON has declared: "I am not going to disturb the business of the country." Men who know the influences that made Wilson President of the United States will not question the above statement.

Wilson will implicitly obey the combination behind the throne, for his masters will regulate his administration.

THE HAND OF CAPITAL is seen in the slaughter that is reddening the pages of Mexico's history with human blood. Profit is the incentive that has prompted pirates in the financial realm to precipitate the bloody conflict. As usual, the slaves are doing the fighting The few who have bred the revolution are safe and secure, and are waiting in anticipation of drawing handsome dividends from the feast of blood.

WAR—WHAT FOR? written by George R. Kirkpatrick, has crossed the 50,000 mark. War—What For? was published less than three years ago, and yet this book has commanded the attention of the most advanced thinkers of this country.

Kirkpatrick's portrayal of war is merciless, and the man who reads War—What For? will refuse to be swept off his feet by appeals to his patriotism.

AT PITTSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA, a child eight years old was killed by a preventable accident, and the parents of the child sued, securing a verdict for $3,000. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the state and the verdict of $3,000 was set aside.

The Supreme Court declared by its decision that the loss of the child was only worth the cost of doctor's and undertaker's bills—which amounted to $150.

In the days of chattel slavery, a child with a black skin sold on the auction block would bring more than $150, but a white child in these days, when we boast of freedom, is only worth a physician's fee and funeral expenses when murdered through the culpable negligence of an element in society whose wealth gives them a standing in court.

IT HAS BECOME APPARENT that the mine guards, who formerly acted in the capacity of hired thugs for the coal barons of West Virginia, have been succeeded by members of the state militia. In other words, when public sentiment demanded that the mine operators should no longer keep in their employ professional assassins for hire, members of the state militia took their places and duplicated the outrages perpetrated by the dethroned thugs.

So infamous has become the conduct of the ex-members of the militia toward the striking miners that the State Federation of Labor of West Virginia has been seriously contemplating the declaration of a state-wide strike that would call out every member of organized labor.

More than 100 arrests have been made by the military, and those arrested were to be tried before a military tribunal, but the attorneys of the United Mine Workers appeared before the Supreme Court of Appeals, and asked for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted, and this action has put military officials at sea, not knowing what course to pursue to serve the interests of the coal operators.

The strikers of West Virginia have enjoyed no rights, save those rights which they have defended at the risk of their lives.

LAST WEEK a report was flashed from Egypt that J. P. Morgan, who is traveling for his health, was stricken with acute indigestion. And immediately there were convulsions in the stock market. The money maniacs of Wall Street became alarmed and many of them became almost panic stricken over the news that America's giant banker was afflicted with an ailment that might result fatally.

It is certainly a glorious system under which we live, when the illness of one man so affects our stock market that thousands of parasitic exploiters show symptoms of insanity through fear of financial ruin.

The stock market seems to fluctuate with the health or illness of a Morgan, and should he die, it is probable that stock would so depreciate that thousands of gamblers on Wall Street who are recognized as the cream of society, would be swept to ruin.

Morgan's death would not destroy a single atom of legitimate wealth, but Morgan's death would, in all probability, destroy that fictitious wealth that is based on water.

The people of America who uphold a system that can be Bulled and Beared through the health or illness of some magnate in the financial world, can lay no claim to an intelligence of a high order.

THE LABOR AS WELL AS THE SOCIALIST PRESS frequently contain vigorous denunciations of the conduct of the upper strata of society, and yet, this denunciation is not warranted when the conduct of the wealthy receives calm consideration.

It may be that countless thousands of people when looking upon the palace and the hovel, upon the master and the slave, will feel a revulsion against such contrasts in society, but the great mass of the people support the hellish system that builds a palace for the exploiter and a hovel for the exploited.

Our words bristle with indignation when we read in the columns of the daily press a description of a monkey banquet tendered by a fashionable damsel who has "money to burn," but at every election the great majority of people who howl against feasts for monkeys and diamonds for dogs march to the polls and cast their ballots for the continued reign of an industrial system that enslaves the worker and enthrones the economic tyrant.

We denounce the white slave traffic and condemn prostitution; but we vote for capitalism that breeds both.

We denounce war with all its horrors, and yet, with our votes, we uphold a system that requires gatling guns and cannon to maintain it.

We denounce injunctions, militarism and corruption in official life and yet the ballots of the vast majority of the people are recorded in favor of a system that demands mandates from courts, armed force and the debauchery of so-called "servants of the people."

As long as men support a cause from which spring effects that arouse indignation, there is but little consistency in the condemnation of such effects.

AN EXCHANGE, under the heading, "Life Stories by Girl Strikers," had the following:

"Some distressing stories were told to Colonel Roosevelt by the young women strikers of the kimono and wrapper industry of New York City when he went among them the other day by invitation to make some observations for himself.

"A typical story was that of a young Italian girl, who said she had worked from 8 o'clock in the morning to 9 at night and was able thus to make thirty-six garments a day at four cents each. But out of this she had to pay $32 for the sewing machine on which she did the work, a certain amount being taken each week out of her wages. Her father had been ill for a year and all her earnings went to the support of the family.

"From the lips of all he got practically the same story—extreme privations, long working hours and small wages.

"A Jewish girl of fifteen years, said she was unable to earn more than $3.50 a week because she could not, like other girls, work on Saturday. 'If they would only let us sing while we work!' she concluded, with a sigh, and the Colonel muttered: 'The brutes! to prevent them from singing—if they can be cheerful under such conditions.'

"This is free America, but there are within its borders too many industrial conditions that smack of slavery."

The lanuage expressed by Roosevelt must certainly improve the conditions under which the Garment Workers of New York have been slowly but surely starving to death.

"The brutes!" belched by Roosevelt, will strike terror into the hearts of those unfeeling monsters who even objected to a hungry slave easing her misery by a song.

"The brutes!" expressed by Roosevelt will be about as far as the "Rough Rider" will go in aiding the songless slaves, who must be voiceless while slaving in the prisons of profit.

WE READ in a lengthy dispatch from New York that Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, one of the society swells of the metropolis, rode down to some of the Garment Workers' headquarters in her automobile a few days ago and delivered speeches of sympathy to the strikers.

"I am not a Socialist or a suffragist," said Mrs. Fish, "but I sympathize with the cause you are on strike for. There must be something wrong when the conditions under which this strike was forced on you exist."

Having discovered that there is really something wrong with the working conditions, and having made it plain that she is no radical person, Mrs. Fish conceded that "the minimum wage scale for girls should not be less than $7 a week."

As the most reliable investigators of social problems in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland and other places have repeatedly announced that it costs at least $9 a week for working girls to support themselves decently, the dilettante Mrs. Fish surely will not be charged with being a Socialist or suffragist agitator by endorsing a wage scale $2 below the bread line.

The very estimable lady went on to say that the rich people and the workers were unnecessarily far apart and that there seemed in some cases an unjustifiable feeling of bitterness among the workers against the rich. There is no reason, she said, why the rich and the workers should not know each other better or why people who were more fortunately circumstanced than the girls who had to strike cannot get together with them so that the strikers may be helped in their home lives

Quite a pretty sentiment, to be sure! It's astonishing that Mrs Fish and her society swells haven't thought of it before, and that, instead of leading idle, useless lives in planning fashionable functions to dissipate a small part of the profits that they plundered from the workers, thus producing that "unjustifiable feeling of bitterness," these wealthy dames could not spend their time better in studying out ways and means to help the toilers improve their home lives, not by dispensing charity and gratuitous lectures, but by advocating a system of social justice wherein the men and women who produce wealth should own what they produce.

However, as it is antagonistic to the class interests of Mrs. Fish and her crowd to engage in any practical undertaking that in the slightest degree interferes with the golden stream that pours into their laps, there is no need for the laboring people to anticipate any startling innovations from that source.

The workers must continue to organize and fight to improve their own conditions and the bitterness of the struggle is not likely to be greatly assuaged by the occasional tossing of a bone by some grand lady who receives thousands of dollars' worth of nation-wide advertising by cleverly propelling herself into the limelight in her limousine, to be beholden by a gaping public, thanks to the enterprise of snobbish news purveyors, who peddle her childish prattle, no matter how silly it sounds.—Cleveland Citizen.

A "Religion" That Socialism Opposes

WHENEVER THE GERMAN KAISER denounces what he calls "irreligion," and he has been doing it frequently of late, it is always with the menace of his unfaithful subjects, the Socialists, in mind. And he is indubitably correct. If the ideas the Kaiser presents really constitute religion, then the Socialists are not only "irreligious," but opposed to "religion," tooth and nail.

The other day at the Berlin University this potentate preached a sermon on religion, and connected it, as he always does, with war, slaughter, and the destruction of human life.

Religion, according to his idea, is a special characteristic that Germans must possess in order to kill other people and prevent other people from killing them. He informed his audience that the Prussians got licked in 1806 because they lost their faith in God, and God allowed them to be licked as a judgment upon them for their lack of faith. He didn't say that the French, who licked them, did so because they had faith in God. Religion, in the Imperial conception of the term, is an article strictly limited to national consumption.

He urged his hearers to study the history of that period and note how, when the Prussians regained their old faith, they turned the tables on the French and slew them in thousands in a "glorious war of liberation." It didn't take long to regain the necessary faith; only five or six years, and that was all that was needed to put Napoleon down and out. The Kaiser omitted to mention such trifles as the alliance with Austria and Russia, the financial aid of Britain and the overwhelming weight of the "big battalions" in the bloody "Battle of the Nations" at Leipsic.

This man evidently cannot conceive of religion without calling to mind the wholesale murder of his fellow beings. His religious metaphors always include blazing shells, stabbing bayonets and reeking sabers; waste, havoc, destruction and devastation spread abroad on the earth. The purpose of trust in God is that the powder may be kept dry. "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword," says the Word of God, but the Kaiser amends the text by adding, "Not if they have religion." He has no conception of religion or no use for it, except as a necessary stimulant to incite murder upon earth. And no doubt the recent manifesto of the International Socialists, issued at Basel, Switzerland, calling a halt upon European war, seems to him the acme of atheism, impiety and irreligion.

Just how far the consensus of the religious opinion of the world may consider the Kaiser a religious person and the ideas he promulgates as religion, we know not. At any rate, he has never been repudiated by it or lost his religious standing in any way. His hearers at the Berlin University applauded him to the echo.

But we Socialists are free to say, and we care not who objects, that if "religion" involves these things that the Kaiser speaks of, if the maintenance and perpetuation of them is its principal object, then we shall do what in us lies to sweep "religion" from the face of the earth, in the sincere belief that the world will be all the better off and the happier for its disappearance.—New York Call.

Falling Birth Rate!

OUR BIRTH RATE IS FALLING! Our birth rate is falling! So the cry comes from all the great industrial nations. His Majesty the Baby is not playing the game. He is not keeping his end up. Corn and oil and wine we have a-plenty and to spare—for those that own it—but not enough babies. So the heaven-born statesmen of the nation are giving their minds to the question of how to stop the declining birth rate.

The Bishop of London—a smooth-faced divine with an income of $75,000 a year and no wife—urges the poor around his palace of Lambeth, and the folk of Great Britain generally, to get busy about the matter of the falling birth rate, whilst Lloyd George gives the mothers of that happy land $7.50 apiece for their babies.

The rulers of France have been grappling with the difficulty for a long time and have now well-nigh exhausted all their fruitless experiments.

Napoleon himself is reported to have said it was not men we wanted so much as mothers, which implied babies. Grown babies would make him such good long stops for the grape shot of the accursed Muscovite, for 1812 sat heavy upon his soul, even as '71 has become the nightmare of his successors.

Mr. Roosevelt, too, he wants more babies, and after backing his request by logical effort personally, he turns to the American people and wants to know what they mean by having such small families or none at all.

The significant part of it is, that nearly all this admonition is addressed to the working people, for they hadn't used to be that way. Time was when the agricultural laborers of England had more children than they drew shillings per week in wages. So scandalous did it become, that the haughty dame of milord would sometimes wax wroth because Hodge had heirs and nothing to leave, whilst she had much to leave but none to leave it to, and unless Rumor is always a lying jade, many a noble house of Britain has perpetuated its title by timely assistance from extraneous sources. But times have changed, and the workers show a disposition to think more and breed less. Circumstances confront their eyes which will not be denied consideration. Their ears catch the wail about the falling birth-rate and at the same moment their eyes show them two men asking for every job. They themselves are often enough among those who ask and do not find employment. Little wonder they are not able to see eye to eye with those who bewail our declining numbers.

Two things seem to be combining to produce the declining birth rate. One is that as men and women grow more intelligent, it is seen by them that with a smaller family, both the parents and the children stand a better chance of enjoying some of the things to which all human beings are entitled.

Better houses, better food, better clothing, and last but not least, a better education for the children tof it them for their coming struggle in life. It means that the economic possibilities of the family are distributed over an area less in quantity with results higher in quality.

Another reason is, that the struggle for existence is growing keener. Opportunities of securing constant employment at good wages are more rare, and men do not care to father offspring whose natural wants may be denied at any time because the breadwinner is not able to find an employer to hire him. Since the youth of our fathers, the general standard of intelligenec among working men and women has improved. Education has broadened their outlook and has given rise to a natural demand for more of the comforts and good thing of life. It has also developed a disgust for the tribe of squalling brats which passed for a family years ago. Where the standard of living and intelligence is lowest, there the number of chilren per family is highest. The sidewalks and streets of the poor districts of all large cities are littered with the spawn of the poverty which congests the surrounding rookeries and tenement buildings, and the last state of these stunted, wan caricatures of humanity is usually worse than the first.

Intelligent women still number home and children amongest the things to be most desired, but they rebel against being made mere machines for the perpetuation of a class whose progeny is foredoomed to be sweated in mill, mine, and factory, for the profit of a class which despises them. Moreover, men of today, who think over these things, with an eye to the future, are not so willing to undertake the responsibilities of family life. They do not consider that it is any sign of abounding affection to ask the type of woman they would like to marry, to share with them an income which is barely enough to supply one person with the decencies of life, just for the sake of trying the experiment long enough to prove it a failure.

The families of the richer classes are mostly small—or not at all, and the cry for larger families is addressed by them to the workers. The tiny fingers of the workers' children have woven profits for them for these many years, little wonder they should be alarmed. If they feel so keenly on this question let them arrange the matter with their own women—it will serve as an interesting diversion from bull-pups in cradles, and monkey dinners.—B. C. Federationist.

Playing the Same Old Game

THE INDUSTRIAL WORKERS OF THE WORLD has pitched its tent in Denver, Coloorado, and its jawsmiths started revivals, in order that "mazuma" might be gathered to furnish a few professional loafers with the means of living without work. These chronic vagrants well remember that the stunts pulled off at San Diego and Spokane netted handsome returns, and the memory of such returns prompted the sweatless hoodlums to select Denver as a pasture that might turn out to be an oasis.

Several weeks ago, the dispensers of torrid ozone planted their soapboxes on Market street, by permission of the city authorities; but Market street was not satisfactory to the modern Ciceros, who believed that a location closer to the State Capitol would yield better financial returns.

Their demands to be permitted to speak where they pleased were denied, and then the slighted and humiliated gladiators who once stormed San Diego and Spokane "took the bit in their teeth" and planted their gatling guns on Glenarm street and commenced to hurl their slime and filth against anybody and everybody who refused to place the label of approval on the tactics and methods of the "Bummery."

The following in the local columns of a Denver journal shows that the "hot air" artists have started a campaign to launch another so-called free speech fight, as a means to touch the pockets of those verdant members of the labor movement who, as yet, are blind to the hypocrisy of the aggregation who sing "I'm a Bum."

"Through a surging mob of 500 people, which jammed Glenarm at 16th street from curb to curb, Police Sergeant Russell and a dozen detectives buffeted their way with William Carpenter, 29, said to be an agitator for the Industrial Workers of the World, and landed him in the patrol wagon.

"The arrest of Carpenter followed the receipt of an I. W. W. letter by Chief of Police O'Neill yesterday, in which twenty self-styled members of the organization threatened death to the chief and to Municipal Judge B. F. Stapleton unless ten of their fellow members were released from jail.

"The letter received by Chief O'Neill follows:

"February 8, 1913.

"Chief of Police:

"This will be a warning to you if you do not let our brothers of our organization of the I. W. W. out of jail Sunday by high noon we will finish your damn judge and the two —— —— policemen. Take this as our sworn oath. Hell will judge us all. Good-by.

"Signed by twenty I. W. W.'s of the World."

The above extracts from the article in one of the Denver daily journals shows the extraordinary efforts made by the Bums to break into jail, in order that they might be able to place the following appeal for funds in "Solidarity," the official mouthpiece of the belligerent mendicants.

"Report comes to Solidarity from Denver, that an I. W. W. free speech fight is now on in that city. Police Commissioner Creel, who announced some months ago that he would not allow any interference with free speech or the I. W. W., has recently been dismissed by the mayor, and the chief at once got busy trying the "suppressing" act. I. W. W. speakers were in the habit of holding street meetings at noon or early in the afternoon, to catch the workers at the clothing factories and around the employment offices before the latter shipped out on various jobs. These meetings were ordered stopped and the hour set for late in the afternoon when the workers were absent.

"The I. W. W. tried to get the permits changed, but was refused by the chief. Meetings were then held without permits, and many arrests followed. On the first occasion the speakers were all discharged by the court; but the second time they were convicted, and fined several of them more than $100 each.

"The Denver I. W. W., Local 26, announce that they will fight for free speech in the approved I. W. W. fashion, and call for volunteers to invade the Denver jails, and for funds to feed the free speech fighters coming in and out of jail. The latter should be addressed to Peter Murray, Sec., 1850 Arapahoe St., Denver, Colo."

In the above article an attempt is made to make it appear that the mayor of Denver removed Commissioner Creel on the grounds that he has favored the jawsmiths using the streets of the city for "hot air" explosives, but Creel was removed on account of his imputations on other commissioners, whose honor was brought into question by the deposed Creel.

The letter forwarded to the chief of police by the freaks and fanatics, needs no further comment, as the letter discloses the traits of the hoodlums who use free speech as a pretext to Work the Workers.

Russianized West Virginia

THE STATE of West Virginia, through its public officials, has arrayed itself against the striking miners.

It was thought that when the hired thugs or mine guards were deported from the coal fields, that outrages to some extent would cease, but the members of the State Militia were substituted for the mine guards, and these cossacks in uniform, became as infamous as the degenerates who followed the vocation of professional assassins. In other words, the state militia usurped the places of the mine guards and these Hessians drawing pay from the coffers of the coal barons, manifested an eagerness to resort to every species of brutality to win the approval of the paymaster.

The strking miners in defense of themselves and families, were forced to arm themselves to resist the unprovoked assaults of thugs licensed by the state to commit acts of lawlessness.

There have been a number of miners killed recently, but the murderers licensed by the state to kill, will not pay any penalties for their red-handed crimes.

Because the miners have dared to resist lawlessness on the part of those who are presumed to uphold the law, scores of arrests have been made of those most actively engaged in the strike, in the hope that the rank and file of the miners will become discouraged and return to work under conditions that mean death by slow starvation.

"Mother" Jones has been among those who have been arrested. For several months she has been constantly among the miners of West Virginia, using her eloquence to spur the faltering on to victory. She has incurred the deathless hatred of industrial monsters whose hearts and souls have been calloused by that insatiable appetite for dividends that resolves men into brutes.

For many months the life of "Mother" Jones has been in jeopardy, but this aged woman, who has reached the fourscore milepost has placed no value on her life, but stood her ground, giving the best that was in her to win a battle for human rights.

She has been shadowed and followed by the slimy sleuths of detective agencies, but with eyes growing dim by age and her step unsteady, she has never wavered in her determination to continue the fight until greed has been conquered and a living wage established in the Russianized district of West Virginia.

It is only a sense of fear that has protected the life of "Mother" Jones since she has been in the coal fields of West Virginia. Thugs as brutal as they may be and corporations as arrogant as they may be, have the hearts of cowards, and they know that violence against "Mother" Jones would mean an uprising in this country that would ultimately spell disaster to "predatory wealth."

Regardless of all the arrests that may be made in West Virginia and regardless of all the persecution that may be visited upon the striking miners, the strike will be won!

Revealing Some of the Facts

THE UTAH COPPER COMPANY, through its officials, has compiled its annual report and submitted the same to the stockholders. The officials are experts at their business, and present plausible excuses for the shortage in the production of ores and the shrinkage in dividends. The following partial report is taken from the Salt Lake Tribune, and shows that the officials have made herculean efforts to placate the stockholders on the losses sustained during the last quarter of the year 1912:

"The Utah Copper Company has released the following report for the fourth quarter of 1912:

"The total amount of copper contained in concentrates for this quarter and the preceding three quarters of 1912, together with a comparison of the production for the year 1912 with the year 1911, is given below:

	Pounds
January	8,156,612
February	8,612,739
March	8,160,199
Total	24,929,550
Average monthly production	8,309,850

	Pounds.
April	9,069,237
May	10,068,336
June	9,234,465
Total	28,372,038
Average monthly production	9,457,346

	Pounds.
July	11,160,614
August	11,841,162
September	6,965,144
Total	29,966,920
Average monthly production	9,988,973

	Pounds.
October	2,128,792
November	4,802,544
December	5,975,246
Total	12,906,582
Average monthly production	4,302,194

	Pounds.
Gross production for the year 1911	98,436,224
Gross production for the year 1912	96,175,090
Average monthly gross production for the year 1911	8,203,019
Average monthly gross production for the year 1912	8,014,591

"The total quantity of ore treated at both plans for the quarter was 930,595 tons, as compared with 1,581,527 tons for the previous quarter. The decrease in tonnage was due partly to the labor disturbances referred to in the last quarterly report, coupled with a further shortage of labor due to a very large percentage of the southern Europeans formerly employed by us having left this country for service in the Balkan war. We were also seriously delayed on account of severe winter weather and by failure in completion of extensions and improvements which were being made in the coarse crushing department of both mills preventing the operation of these departments at full capacity. Of the total ore treated during the quarter, about 95 per cent was mined by steam shovels and about 5 per cent. came from underground mining.

Grade of Ore Lower.

"The average assay of the ore treated during the quarter was 1,104 per cent. copper, as compared with 1.41 per cent. for the previous quarter. The low grade of the ore was due to the same causes which have been referred to in the discussion of decreased tonnage. Our stripping operations were delayed more seriously than those of mining, and, as indicated in the percentage of underground ore produced, underground mining was almost entirely suspended. Under these circumstances it became necessary to procure almost the entire tonnage from lower grade areas near the northerly margin of the ore deposit, and, as these areas had been only partially stripped, the grade of the ore was futher vitiated by the intermixing of unusual quantities of low-grade oxidized capping.

"The average cost per pound of net copper produced during the quarter, after making allowances for smelter deductions and without crediting miscellaneous income, was 14.83 cents, as compared with 7.707 cents for the previous quarter. If the net miscellaneous earnings in Utah for the quarter, including those from the Bingham & Garfield railway, were credited to the cost of operations, the net cost per pound for the quarter would be reduced about one-half a cent. This high cost was due partly to the deficiency in tonnage and low grade of ore resulting from causes already explained, and partly to extraordinary expenses incurred during the period, all of which were charged against operating costs."

From the above it can be seen that the officials of the Utah Copper Company taxed their ingenuity to compile a report that would in some way appease the discontented stockholders. But while the report is couched in plausible language and while the officials make huge drafts on their optimism as to the future, yet, the stockholders would rather have cash than glowing promises as to what the harvest shall be in the "Sweet Bye and Bye."

The Utah Copper Company has been hit hard, and the day is not far distant, when even gluttons for profit will discover that it does not pay to refuse to deal with organized labor.

Some Explanations

IN THIS ISSUE of the Miners' Magazine, appears several extracts taken from the report of the Utah Copper Company and the admissions made by the officials to the stockholders, disclose the fact that it is very expensive for a mining corporation to produce ore with scabs and strike breakers. The report shows a large deficit for the last quarter of the year 1912, and the reserve fund was very materially reduced through the officials being forced to take dividends from the strong box.

It will be noticed in the report that the cost of the production of copper by the Utah Copper Company during the last quarter of 1912, reached 14.83 cents per pound, while for the previous quarter when no strike was on, the production of copper cost the Utah Copper Company but 7.707 cents per pound.

The difference between 7.707 cents per pound and 14.83 cents per pound, is the difference between the labor of union men and the labor of scabs and strike breakers.

The report shows that the ores extracted from the mines of the Utah Copper Company were of lower value and the officials endeavor to impress upon the stock holders that the depreciated values in ores were responsible for the deficit. But the officials might have gone a little farther and explained to the stock holders, how it was that the ores depreciated in value. Since the officials neglected to give this explanation to the stock holders, it becomes necessary for the editor of the Miners Magazine to make it clear to the stock holders as to why the ores so suddenly lost their values.

The officials, after the strike was declared sent their agents into many of the large cities to recruit forces to take the places of strikers. These agents gathered the bums and loafers of the big cities and shipped them to Bingham, thinking that the strikers would return to work when they beheld carloads of the tailings of humanity dumped into the corporation-ridden mining district of Utah. But the strikers knew that professional bums and loafers could not mine ore, and they failed to stampede because their places were being filled with gangs of degenerates that rushed growlers and assaulted free lunches.

The officials were forced to load cars with waste to make a showing that the strike was being broken, and the vast amount of waste that was mixed with the ores is responsible for the cost of producing copper by the Utah Copper Company climbing from 7.707 cents per pound to 14.83 cents per pound.

We trust that these explanations will be satisfactory to the stock holders.

The Situation at Porcupine

(Cotton's Weekly.)

THE STRIKERS of South Porcupine, Ont., are having the class nature of our courts, our laws and our politicians, ground into them It is a rough training, but they are getting it good and plenty.

The miners of the Porcupine region have been working long hours for poor pay. They demanded the eight hour day. The mine owners, particularly the Hollinger, refused, and over a thousand miners went on strike.

A commission investigating the 8-hour day law for underground workers has been meandering round the country. The politicians have been giving sweet words to the miners about being favorable to the eight hour day, and have not passed the law. The miners are driven under the lash of wage slavery to their ten hour toil. The politicians and labor thieves are one in heart.

The miners went on strike. They got tired of politicians and brutal slavery and they refused to peddle their labor power.

Here they ran counter to the law. In 1907 the Hon, Rodolphe Lemieux, ex-Postmaster General (you remember how he fought Cotton's by arbitrary postal rulings?) as oily an agent of the labor thieves as ever similingly lied to an audience of wage slaves, had a law passed at Ottawa called the "Industrial Disputes Investigation Act." By this law no employés of a mine, railway or public utility could go on strike without first calling upon the government to appoint an arbitration board to investigate as to the matters at issue and report thereon. The workers appointed a member of the board, the owners appoint a member, and the third member is chosen by the other two.

Thirty days' notice must be given of any intended demand for a change in wages or hours. The law is made to apply to masters in that they must not declare a lockout, under the same delay, but who ever hears of employers being made amenable to the law?

The whole intention of the law is to allow the bosses plenty of time to get scabs, or to stock up with commodities, so that a strike can be successfully broken. Had the act not been solely in the interest of the master class Lemieux would never have introduced it, and the aggregation of labor hating political sharpers infesting Ottawa would never have passed it.

Sections 59 and 60 of the act read as follows:—

59. Any employé who goes on strike contrary to the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine of not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars, for each day or part of a day that such employé is on strike.

60. Any person who incites, encourages or aids in any manner any employér to declare or continue a lockout, or any employé to go or continue on strike contrary to the provisions of this Act, shall be guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars.

Under the provisions of these two clauses Magistrate Thomas Torrence on January 21st condemned William Holowatsky and Peter Cleary to $500 fine or three months in Sudbury jail at hard labor for inciting the employés of the Hollinger Mine to go on strike. Peter Croft was fined $50 or sixty days in jail for striking.

The cases of Holowatsky and Cleary prove the class nature of our judges. Thomas Torrence is a lick-spittle of the capitalist class, otherwise he would not be a magistrate.

Into Porcupine have been flung Provincial police who have brutally illused the strikers. This shows how the provincial government is an agent of the employing class. Thiel detectives have been hired by the mine owners and have flourished their guns and have poked them in the faces of Canadian citizens. At the head of these private gunmen is a reptile by the name of M. E. White. For three years he accepted pay as the Financial Secretary of the Trinidad Miners' Union of Trinidad, Colorado. White was always trying to impress the membership of organized labor that his life was consecrated to the down-trodden and the opressed. While he attended his last miners' convention he did not fail to report every night to his paymaster, Superintendent Stewart, of the Theiel Detective Agency. His record is thoroughly exposed in the last issue of the Miners' Magazine. This alien traitor and scab is allowed to come to Canada and carry arms and maintain a posse of gunmen, strictly against the terms of the Ontario law, which says no private peace officer may carry arms unless he is a resident of the locality in which he acts. This shows that the Ontario executive government is not only actively enlisted against the strikers, but also willing that the law should be broken in the interest of the mine owners.

A futher point is that strikers have been flung into cold jails, forced to sleep on the bare floor with insufficient covering, and held in solitary confinement, although not proven guilty of any crime and subsequently discharged. On complaint being made to the Attorney General, this labor-hating skate of a politician sneeringly replied that "only the usual jail discipline is enforced." Innocent workers are subject to "jail discipline." Your employers would not be subject to any such indignity.

The Lemieux Act shows that the Ottawa government is against labor, and the brutal sentence handed out by Torrence shows him to be a lickspittle.

There is one thing your masters insist upon—that the courts must be looked upon as sacred. Wherefore we have severe laws about contempt of court. If once the workers waken to the fact that the judges of Canada are the best agents the masters have because you workers venerate them, you will lose your veneration. So your masters allow nothing to be said against the courts.

For this reason I consider it my duty to speak plainly about migistrate Torrence. He is a lickspittle of the masters. If he had not been a lickspittle the labor-hating politicians of Ontario would never have given him his billet in a mining community. If he was not prepared to do the dirty work of the Hollinger Miner owners he would not be judge.

The penalty for which Holowatsky and Cleary rendered themselves liable runs from $50 to $1,000. Torrence inflicts the penalty of $500, which no propertyless slave can pay. The Porcupine miners have been guilty of no outrages. Their strike has been as peaceful as the Provicial agents-provocateurs would allow. And Torrence hands out a sentence of $500. If he had been in sympathy with the down-trodden and oppressed, and yet, for economic reasons had to hang on to the dirty job which he is paid for, why did he not make the sentence the minimum of $50?

This judgment is the opening wedge. The employing class all over Canada are jubilant. Torrence's outrageous sentence will be followed by other courts. Labor in Canada is to be further enslaved. The masked battery of the Lemieux Act has poured its first round at the ranks of labor, and the masters are watching the effect. Will labor protest? If it will the masters will not be so jubilant.

Because of the necessity for labor to protest is why I render myself liable for contempt of court by calling Judge Torrence a lickspittle. Let me repeat. He is a lickspittle of the capitalist class.

Will labor protest? Comrades, you have got to. Write your M P. and protest against the outrageous sentence passed under the Lemieux Act.

And let all the comrades of Ontario protest. Let your unions protest. Write your local representative at Toronto. Whitney is a tough old capitalist henchman lost to decency and honor. You can do nothing with him. But you can make an impression on your local politician. Get your union to protest. Hold public indignation meetings.

Most important of all, become active in the Socialist movement. Bend your energies to capturing your province by the election of a majority of Socialists. Then the Premiership and executive offices will be held by revolutionary working men, and as soon as that is accomplished we can make it uncomfortable, to say the least, for every mine owner and capitalist exploiter who tries to steal the product of his labor away, from the producer of wealth.

Report of the Delegates to the A. F. of L. Convention

To the officers and members of the Western Federation of Miners:
Dear Sirs and Brothers:—

WE, YOUR DELEGATES to the 32nd convention of the American Federation of Labor, herewith submit our report for your consideration:

Your delegation voted as a unit on practically every question that came before that body for consideration, and was at all times in unamimous accord in whatever action was taken throughout the sessions of the convention.

There were several measures in which the members of our organization are interested and which they want incorporated into the policies of the American Federation of Labor that came up for discussion, and in some instances they were the subject of warm parliamentary battles, and while we cannot report the adoption of any of them, we can report a large increase in the number of delegates who work and vote for the success of these progressive measures which we believe will do so much to advance the cause of labor.

We shall not record here all of the events of the convention, in which we think you would be interested, merely enough to give you an understanding of the progress being made.

The Danbury Hatters' case was projected on the floor and it seems, by those who wanted to have it discussed and then laid aside without any action, and in this they were successful but not without a fight which at times was the most spectacular witnessed during the sessions of the convention.

The issue hinged on the question as to whether or not the convention should pledge itself to stand by the Hatters in their financial responsibilities (The $240,000 fine and court costs) as well as the cost of defending the cases before the courts.

The convention of the faction headed by Gompers and seconded by most of the International Presidents and Secretaries present, was that it would not be a good policy for the Federation, just then, to assume this debt, as such a step might influence a jury sitting on the case, to decide against the Hatters under the pretext that as the organized labor movement was to bear the cost it would amount to a mere trifle on each one (not more that 25 cents. on each member) the opposing faction contended that the convention should take such action as would result in giving the Hatters the united support of the organized labor movement at once, and that nothing should be done that might cause a decision to be given in the case on any technical point, and that if the money, homes, and other property of the wage workers can be seized by the courts and turned over to the employers, the sooner the workers find it out the better for all concerned and that, if that stage in capitalist government is reached, where not only are practically all decisions involving capital and labor, rendered against the workers, but their little property is to be taken and given to satisfy the vengeance of the masters, and taken by the courts of which it has been so nonsensically said; "A divinity doth hedge about them."

In truth the divinity of a Beelzebub with all the cruel ingenuity with which that prince is credited, is required to furnish the contention that the workers of a nation must be thus served, under the pretext of, "busting the trusts;" if in reality this condition of affairs in our industrial and political life is reached, it is then time that the issue should be squarely met and steps taken to overthrow the system of legal usurpation under which all forms of liberty and justice are being eradicated from industry and government.

But the controlling power at the convention of the American Federation of Labor seems to be actuated by the policy of evasion, or fabianism, or by a determination not to meet the issue squarely, the fallacy of which has not been demonstrated to it, even by twenty-two years of failure to amend the obnoxious clause of the Sherman Anti Trust Law which is used by the courts as a pretext under which to inflict these wrongs upon labor.

When attacks were made on this policy, and the fact pointed out that our government was in the hands of our industrial and political enemies and that concerted working class political action is necessary for the solving of these questions; those in control would shout; "Socialism," and would appeal to superstition, bigotry, and prejudice to save them from themselves, from a powerful labor movement, and from a just and sane industrial system. The question was finally left just where it was when the convention assembled, and the opponents of progress claimed "a great victory over the socialists."

The next question on which a great fight was made, is that of "Industrial Unionism," and it does not seem necessary to us that the arguments pro and con be repeated here as practically our entire membership is familiar with the subject, but again the bugaboo of Socialism was dug out and flaunted in the faces of the delegates to rally the forces of reaction against any attempt to build up a labor movement in a form that would bring better results to labor and place it in a position of vantage whence the attacks of the enemy would be unavailing.

The delegations of the United Mine Workers, the Brewery Workers, the Western Federation of Miners, the Bakery and Confectionery Workers, (but one delegate,) the Iron Steel and Tin Workers, the Printing Pressmen, the Railway Carmen, the Shingle Workers, the Tailors, and five out of six of the Painters Paperhangers and Decorators, voted for Industrial Unionism as did many scattering votes from other delegations and representatives of State and Central bodies.

The United Mine Workers delegation made a splendid fight on this question and notwithstanding the fact; that but a minority of them were Socialists, and some of them high in the councils of other parties, Mitchell, said to be an adherent of the late lamented "Bull Moose," Lewis, the candidate for state secretary of Ohio on the defunct Taft Republican ticket, and Green, Democrat, and president of the Ohio State Senate, the convention was gravely informed by administration partisans that the advocates of Industrial Unionism, were intent on stealing the labor movement for the sinister pupose of letting the socialists absorb it, with the inference thrown out to the gullible that Socialists waxed fat on absorbed labor movements, and strange as it may seem, some there are, who are really deceived by such gush. But with all that 35% of the vote was for Industrial Unionism.

Another fight was made on the attempt to pass a constitutional provision for the direct election of the officers of the A. F. of L., and again straw men were introduced and knocked down for the edification of a solidly lined up backing.

Residents of states, where campaigns have been made for Direct Primaries, and the Initiative and Referendum; are familiar with the stock arguments against these modern methods of peoples' rule, but no doubt most of them will be surprised to learn that every one of these old and discredited subterfuges of routed "stand patters" was iterated and reiterated to a now thoroughly frightened following which as on preceding votes was kept whipped into line.

It is quite flattering to the Socialists that they were credited with originating every progressive and advanced measure introduced upon the floor of the convention, no matter whence a proposition came, or what its purpose, if it was in any way an improvement on what it was intended to replace or amend, it was immediatly dubbed "Socialistic," and the faithful were warned to be on the alert else the Socialists would get them if they didn't watch out.

In the election of officers, almost one third of the vote of the convention was for the candidate of the radicals for president. This is encouraging and we beleive that the time is not far distant when the American labor movement will do, as the labor movements in advanced European countries have done, use every weapon within its grasp to advance the cause of labor, and will even go so far as to try to capture the power of government, the same to be used for the benefit of those who toil, and ultimately establish a system of industry under which the workers will receive the full value of the product of their labor.

We cannot point to any definite act of the convention, as progressive, and on the question of industrial unionism on which so many expected some advanced step, the majority went back ten years to get an expression; a declaration made at the Scranton convention in 1902, was dug up an re-affirmed as the "Ne plus ultra," of modern unionism as expounded by the controlling faction at the A. F. of L. convention.

In the election of officers it was early made evident that the old regime did not intend to permit even the slightest change, and men who are not really serving their organizations in any official capacity were re-elected; Lennon, formerly president of the Tailors, was elected Treasurer, although his union has sometime since placed in office as his successor one whom it thinks is more in touch with the struggle in which the unions are engaged; O'Connell, formerly president of the Machinists was re-elected as one of the vice-presidents, notwithstanding the fact that he was not even a delegate to the convention, and that his organization had passed a resolution in which it expressed itself to the effect, that, if the A F. of L. convention would place a member of the Machinists, Union on the executive council, that that member be Wm. H Johnson, now president of that organization but even this could not be; Change seems to be repugnant to those now in control and the voice of the membership seems to have as little effect on them as did the cries of the "Sans Culotte" on the aristocracy prior to the French Revolution.

But with all that, progress is being made, not perhaps with the officials, but the membership is becoming aroused to the necessity of new forms and new policies, and perhaps, to a new regime, and this, in the last analysis, is the best place from which progress can come; when the rank and file bring it, it is of a permanent character; if brought by the officials it may be of a fleeting nature.

BOARD MEMBER MILLER WRITES AN INTERESTING REPORT.

Cobalt, Ontario, February 17, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

The situation in any part of the jurisdiction is always a matter of interest to the membership, particularly is that true when a conflict is on. While the membership here are not on strike, there are the closest bonds of sympathy and interest between them and Porcupine. They have shown that sympathy in the most effective manner by picketing and relief.

The Cobalt union is "the daddy" of them all" and has contributed their full share in an endeavor to organize the miners of Ontario, who are by no means embraced in the existing unions of the Federation. It was to unite the forces that organization might be extended that delegates met here a week ago to form a district union, Cobalt paying the transportation expenses of the delegates. Their report, accompanied by the draft of a constitution, will be submitted to the various locals of the district, and if approved by them, work will be begun in April.

Many requests for organization have come in from various quarters. Brother Davidson and I have just approved granting a charter to the men at the Garrison mines near Sudbury, Ontario. This is an old mining district, the mines having been in operation fully thirty-five years, and the management, in the most instances, antagonistic to organized labor, and while their employés have not become union men, they are enjoying some of the fruits of organized effort, miners in that district now receiving $2.75, as against $2 a few years ago. They rightly feel that if others can benefit them so much, that they can help themselves still more. This district was scoured for strikebreakers for Porcupine, but few, if any, were secured. The companies met with the same fate in Nova Scotia, where it was formerly easy to secure scabs, but the strike of the Mine Workers there a few years, though unsuccessful, taught some great lessons and was by no means lost.

The miners of this province have been trying for several years to secure an eight-hour day. Some of the companies here granted a nine-hour day at the time of the strike in 1907, but ten hours is the custom of the province. The government brought in an eight-hour law last year, then delayed its passage—to investigate (?) It is now foreshadowed in the speech from the throne. Cobalt is sending a representative to urge its passage. It is one of the demands of the Porcupine strikers; it is highly probable that some action will be taken. The properties here that were operating on the ten-hour basis, with one exception—and they increased wages 25 cents per day—changed to nine during the past week.

There are more than 3,500 men employed in this camp; the union employs a secretary and a walking delegate, paying each of them $3.50 per day. In addition to this they employ a Finnish and Italian secretary to look after those nationalities, paying them $15 each per month. The Finnish branch hold weekly meetings. Last week eighty-five names were added to the rolls of the union and the collections amounted to $1,387. Per capita and assessments are paid in advance. Secretary Gauthier's books are models of accuracy, neatness and show every detail in receipts and expenses. He is taking a vacation, Brother Joe Gorman acting in his absence. The walking delegate for several terms, Brother Duke, sent in his resignation, and Brother McQuarrie is now on the job. The membership feel that he will keep up the pace.

The Porcupine strikers are standing firm, some of the properties not attempting to operate; others blundering along with an inefficient crew of strikebreakers. Brothers Holowaske and Cleary, sentenced to ninety days in jail, or $500 fine, for inciting men to strike, went to jail, but were paroled after twenty days, as was Brother Croft for going on strike in violation of the LeMioux act. Some have imagined that under British laws the worker received a larger measure of justice than in Uncle Sam's land. To me capitalism bears the same brutal aspect in every country, and uses the same weapons.

I expect to see a large increase in the membership of the W. F. of M. in this province during the next few months. Fraternally yours,

GUY E. MILLER.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM BINGHAM, UTAH.

Bingham Canyon, Utah, February 19, 1913.

Mr. Ernest Mills, Secretary and Treasurer, W. F. M., Denver, Colorado:

Dear Sir and Brother—Being absent from Bingham, where you addressed yours of the 10th, inst., which I just received, and also a copy of the communication from the committee of the Randsburg Miners' Union No. 44, which calls our attention to Article 4, Section 9, of the Constitution of the Western Federation of Miners.

I also noticed your desire and advice to comply with that article of the Constitution, and while I believe this request is entirely proper, as it comes from our Constitution, and therefore I am glad to see that the members of the Federation take interest, watching for the fulfillment of the Constitution, and from now on, while in the employment of the Federation I will try to comply with the same.

But, nevertheless, there might be, and there is in some cases, very good and strong reasons why some of the organizers should not be forced to comply with Article 4, Section 9, of the Constitution, as it is absolutely necessary that even they shall not tell everybody their business, especially when they work in a place where everything—and air itself—belongs to some selfish capitalist or corporation, where a man is not allowed to go and talk to another man without being beaten, sent out, and sometimes arrested and thrown into jail. We have these places in this land and this day, where thousands of miners and smeltermen live (we should admit for the shame of the Twentieth century and boasting of our civilization), and while we have such places, I would like to know how to get away with them and how to persuade these masses of the workers that live there and stand for it, to come out of it, to demand their rights and to fight for liberty of men? I believe it is necessary to reach these men and quietly start agitation and education among them.

There are many more reasons which prevent officers and organizers of not writing monthly in the Miners' Magazine, and even when one attempted to do so we could hear on all sides that "he does this to show, to benefit and to boost himself." Also when someone writes his report, he tells us that it has been misrepresented and untrue, and as a proof for this I will bring one example:

Lately when the Executive Board of the W. F. of M. sent their reports of the facts and true condition about strikes in Bingham and Porcupine, and at the same time levied assessments as the only means to support the strikers, there have been many members throughout the jurisdiction of the W. F. M. who openly criticised these reports.

How these spectators judge and make remarks upon everything and everybody and in general blame the officers for all that happens in organization, I do not know, but I do know that such men never try to find the true circumstances in which we live.

Now, if right here in Bingham when we were organizing the miners and when ex-Board Members Lowney and Terzich, with Organizers Oberto, Goggin, Jikovich, Raptis and myself, simply doing our duty, but through every day and night have to climb up hills, going from house to house, often through the most difficult passes, to organize workers, till we get over 2,000 in the union, and if we did put all this in reports they would say we were praising ourselves.

If it was shown how President Moyer did try every means and reason to prevent the strike and to come to peaceful settlement with the companies, and how during the strike he has several times climbed up and down hills and entered the shacks of Greeks, giving them encouragement and advice to stand pat and not to do anything unlawful, as the companies were looking for it to send the militia to camp to do more outrages to the workers. But if all his efforts to win the strike were published many would say, it is only a boosting for him.

On the other hand, when a man without principle and feeling of manhood goes and betrays himself and his class, it is generally that officers are blamed for it. When ill, capitalistic papers and men who work for capitalists try to condemn and show a leader or leaders of a labor organization as undesirable citizens and unjust men we know their aims; but I fail to see why our own brothers have "so much dissatisfaction and the lack of interest in the affairs of the Western Federation of Miners;" therefore I believe these are not fair remarks to men that are trying their best to uplift humanity.

I will not go too far, as in the first place it is a difficult job for us foreign organizers to write in the English language, and in the second place, there is not the slightest doubt in my mind, if this letter is to be published, that there might be some members who would think that I wrote this to criticise someone, but I declare that it was not my aim, but simply stating my opinion and those things which I know to be true, and I am willing to stay with the truth, notwithstanding Peter or Paul, and if by mistake—which any man may make some time—we should say or do something wrong, we shall try to correct the same, if it is necessary.

The strike situation was reported to you lately by the Press Committee, and certainly the companies are paying a full price for fighting organized labor, and I am confident of winning, according to conditions prevailing throughout the mines; they have to come through. Sure enough, the companies are playing a losing game, and they know it, too. It is up to union men here and outside to keep the better faith, and victory is coming slow but sure.

I have been in Tooele with Brother Oberto, and that local, as all others in Utah, is getting along as good as it could be expected under the circumstances in which they are placed.

With best wishes and regards, I remain, Fraternally yours,

MATT. ALFIREVICH, Organizer, W. F. M.

ALTA OR SIBERIA, WHICH?

Editor Miners' Magazine:

On February 6th the Salt Lake Herald-Republican printed an article on its editorial page under the heading of "Justice Here and in Russia." Speaking of a Missouri judge who had cited a Kansas City editor for contempt of court, and would not listen to any evidence to establish the truth of the editor's publication, and in a decision written before the hearing, sentenced him to jail.

In Alta, Utah, last winter a year ago at a company mine, men were compelled to eat and sleep four hundred feet under the ground! Just imagine eating, sleeping and grovelling around in their own filth and dirt in this cold, clammy dungeon, shut out from the beautiful light of day, it being too expensive for the mine owners to build proper accommodations for their employés.

At another mine this winter the conditions are almost as bad, except the miners don't sleep and eat under the ground, but the beds are so thick in a room that a man working on the night shift has to crawl over a sleeper from the day shift before he can get to his bed to retire.

At another place there was not space to accommodate the two shifts at the same time; the night shift had to wait until the day shift got out of bed before they could rest their tired, weary bones. Larger quarters were built after awhile, and very soon dirt and filth had accumulated to such an extent that the sanitary conditions were a menace to the employés. Apparently the only thing that could transpire to clean that garbage and disease-hatchery happened. The ruins lie in black embers underneath the snow, where that building had burned to the ground.

These are the kind of mansions a workingman lives in at Alta. Ask the men at one of the mines, "What date of the month does the company pay their employés?" and they reply: "Don't know; we haven't had a pay day for three months."

These conditions have existed in Alta for many years. At some of the mines blocks of ground are let out on lease. The ore, of course, is shipped through the company, and when the leasers make a shipment of ore they have to go to the company's office to get the money for it, and are told that they have no money coming to them, and that they owe for board during the time they worked. To illustrate more plainly:

The manager of a company mine let out a block of ground on lease. The men toiled hard, night and day, and finally were rewarded by their untiring efforts. They had discovered a nice vein of high-grade shipping ore. The men, naturally, were building castles in the air. One was going to buy an automobile, another was going to buy a farm, another was going to carry on work at a mine prospect which he owned. They were just as elacted at their find as the boy when he gets is first new pair of high red-top boots. When the shipments were made, in due time, the men with high spirits went to the company's office for their big pay. They were told that the ore was not as good in values as was anticipated and that there was a bill against them for their last month's board. Imagine the disappointment of those men coming away from that office! There was nothing left for the men to do but quit the lease. The company immediately put a force of men to work on day's pay to take the ore out, and after paying that force of men for several months the company paid off a big debt and then there remained a surplus in the treasury, according to the manager's report. It may appear a miracle to some and they may wonder why that ore improved in value immediately when the company worked it, when the poor leasers owed for their board after shipping from the same block of ground.

The companies ofttimes work miracles to suit themselves in a very fresh way; in fact, at times their actions are that fresh they are raw!

In September, 1912, Alta Local made a demand of the companies for better conditions and higher wages and were refused by some of the managers even the formality of presenting their grievances. A strike was then declared. At a mass meeting of union and non-union men each and every individual vowed and declared on their honor to stand by the action taken by the Alta Local. Some of these mucked-up humanity forms, who never had any honor, were soon back scabbing on the job under the protection of a lot of criminal gun-thugs and deputies. Right there they showed their cowardly spirits. Not a gun was seen or carried by the union men. Time and again those gunmen would practice shooting at tin cans that were thrown in the air by the scabs. The people who had seen this considered those thugs just as guilty of murder as though they had committed it; their actions were evidence that they were ever ready to spill human blood without as much as a provocation.

Are there wore conditions than these in Siberia? At this same scab property just mentioned, through incompetent labor, the mine was flooded with water. Shortly afterward, through brainless negligence, they were burned out of their sleeping and eating quarters. What else could a company expect from a lot of bone-headed, unintelligent degenerates? Scabs are being rushed in on almost every property, and the mine managers are discriminating against organized labor.

The strike is still on.

Men, don't go to Alta to take the desperate chances of these conditions and its treacherous snowslides that have claimed hundreds of victims for which this place is noted with a feeling of dread. A STRIKER.

A TESTIMONIAL TO HIS WORTH.

To the Members of the Family of the Late Levi R. McInnis:

Dear Sirs and Mesdames—Under instructions from the Sandon Miners' Union No. 81, of the Western Federation of Miners, we herewith enclose copies of a resolution, touching the untimely death of our good brother, Levi R. McInnis, adopted by that organization, expressing to you, his relatives, our sympathy, and an appreciation of the loss by which, if ever there was an equality in bereavement, we are your co-sufferers.

Sometimes in the face of death it is difficult to find words that will bring a morsel of comfort to those bereaved, but oftener it is more difficult to find in a life that has passed sufficient of virtue or of service from which to build even a monument of words. Although in the case of our late brother the word of comfort may still be lacking, the records of his service are abundant, and if there is any virtue in fidelty, in courage or in patience, surely was he entitled to whatever credit the possession of that quality denotes.

Under circumstances where if he were self-seeking, his sobriety and application justified him in considering that failure would not be his portion; he very seldom considered himself, but devoted his time and best efforts to the service of those who needed them the most, but were the least able to repay him.

Loyal to his friends and just to his enemies, Levi McInnis could ill be spared at this time and in this struggle, and though his loss affects more poignantly the relations that were bound to him by ties of blood, yet will his death be also deeply deplored by that wider fraternity of those who are fighting to secure for the under dog in the struggle for existence all that is justly his.

We further enclose a resolution of condolence that was adopted at the fifteenth annual convention of District Association No. 6 of the Western Federation of Miners. To many of these fifteen conventions our late brother had been a delegate and was at the time of his death president-elect of the Sandon Miners' Union.

Again expressing on behalf of ourselves and the working class in this corner of the earth our sincerest sympathy.

Believe us, with much respect. Yours faithfully,

JOHN SENNING,
WILLIAM DAVEY,
PERCY W. JOHNSTON,
Committee.

Resolutions of Condolence.

Whereas, There has gone from amongst us our good brother, Levi Robert McInnis, and

Whereas, In his death the working class of this province has lost a faithful and a guiding hand and this union a loyal and able president; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Sandon Miners' Union No. 81 of the Western Federation of Miners express to the relatives of our deceased brother our heartfelt sympathy with them in their bereavement.

That the charter of this union be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, and further that copies of this resolution be sent to the relatives of the deceased brother and to the press for publication. Respectfully submitted,

JOHN SENNING,
WILLIAM DAVEY,
PERCY W. JOHNSTON,
Committee.

Resolution of Condolence.

Resolved, That this, the fifteenth annual convention of District Association No. 6 of the Western Federation of Miners express its sense of the deep loss which the cause of unionism and its political expression has sustained in the untimely death of Brother Levi Robert McInnis, and desires to convey to his relatives a heartfelt expression of sincere sympathy with them in their affliction. Respectfully submitted by William Davidson, Percy W. Johnston and A. Shilland.

SPEAKING OF VIOLENCE.

Charles Edward Russell.

In the course of the trial at Indianapolis and in all the newspapers thereafter much and emphatic reference was made to the twenty-one lives that were lost in the explosion in the Los Angeles Times building.

More persons have been needlessly slaughtered every week since on the worn-out old American railroad system, sacrificed to profits and greed.

Nobody ever refers to these slaughters. Nobody ever calls them murders. Nobody ever insists that they shall be punished. No Wild Man issues from Lobster Bay to denounce them and assure us that murder is murder and fire is hot and snow is cold and the like marvelous discoveries. Nobody says that the blood of these victims cries aloud for vengeance. Nobody fills the columns of our esteemed press with denunciations of the men that for profits and dividends and their own fortunes maintain the conditions that are responsible for all these murders.

"The labor unions must purge themselves of violence!" shrieked all the kept press together when the men on trial at Indianapolis were convicted.

Other Purgings Needed.

Yes. How would it do for the millionaires to purge themselves of violence? How would it do for Fifth avenue to purge itself of violence? How would it do for the churches that accept blood-stained money from these slaughterers to purge themselves of violence? How would it do for the preachers that are so flip about labor unions to begin by taking from their pockets the money that has been put there as the product of violence? How would it do for the prating, lying, cogging press, the kept mistress of the powers of evil, to purge itself of the violence that is represented daily in its advertising columns before it undertakes to give out any moral advice to the labor unions it is trying to poison?

How about that?

There is not one dividend paid by an American railroad that does not come forth dripping with human blood. There is not one that does not represent fraud, swindling, grand and petty larceny, manslaughter, embezzlement, theft and the picking of pockets. When a clergyman or an editor, with wallet filled with money so obtained, arises to give moral advice to the labor unions the spectacle is one for the laughter of the gods of misrule.

I do not know a labor union and never heard of one whose record was not white as snow compared with that of the least murderous railroad in the United States. If the revered clergy want something to yowl about. let them yowl about that.

The National Erector's Association, which was deeply interested in the trial of the labor leaders at Indianapolis, is a branch of the steel trust.

The mills of the steel trust neednessly slaughter every week more lives than were killed in the Los Angeles explosion. I want some of the horror-stricken preachers and editors to explain to me why they have all this uncontrollable rage about violence in one case and not a word about violence in the other.

It is just as bad to have a man spitted upon a red-hot iron for the sake of profits as it is to have one blown up with dynamite because of a mistaken idea of loyalty and service to an oppressed and defrauded class.—The Coming Nation.

BULLETIN—INFORMATION DEPARTMENT—SOCIALIST PARTY.

111 North Market Street, Chicago—Carl D. Thompson, Manager.

Socialist State Legislators at Work.

Practically all of the state Legislatures are now in session, and the Socialists elected are at work.

Nevada.—Comrade A. Grant Miller, secretary of the legislative committee, reports relative to the activity of the Socialists in the work of state legislation as follows:

"On January 18th, the State Executive Committee held a meeting upon the subject of proposed legislation and invited thereto the three Socialist members of the Legislature and representatives of organized labor in this state to confer with us in regard thereto. There were thirty-two persons present, including two women, and a full expression of opinion was had Upon the day following the committee held an executive session, authorizing the introduction of some fifteen bills. It was considered that we should not introduce any more bills than we could help, laying stress upon such measures as have some chance of passage, although, of course, we shall introduce some bills that will be supported only by the Socialist members. We are doing most of the work here and we will have another meeting of the conference January 25th and another meeting of the Executive Committee on February 1st."

Copies of bills which have been drafted and introduced by the Nevada comrades have been sent to the information department as follows:

1. An act to provide for ventilation in mines and of underground workings in the state of Nevada.
2. An act to provide for sprinkling devices and drill sprays in mines which handle and mine dry ores.
3. An act to amend state mine inspection bill.
4. An act to prohibit the granting of injunctions in strike troubles upon ex-parte applications and to provide for jury trials in all cases in which violations of injunctions shall be charged.
5. An act to prohibit the assignment of salaries and wages of married men except by an instrument in writing signed by the wife of such married man and witnessed by two disinterested witnesses.
6. An act to provide employed electors opportunities to vote.
7. An act to provide a half holiday on the days of holding municipal elections in cities.
8. An act relating to conduct of members of labor unions during strikes, lockouts or trade disputes and providing for peaceful picketing.

Massachusetts.—Comrade Charles H. Morill, the only Socialist iu the Massachusetts state Legislature, continues his aggressive and effective work for the party this year. He is now serving his fourth term. He has had prepared, with the assistance of the officials of the party and legal advice, some twenty-six bills. The measures cover various phases of labor legislation, call for a constitutional constitution to revise the state constitution, a memorial to Congress for the government ownership of railways, measures providing for proportional representation, the recall and the abolition of the state and United States Senate. Copies of all bills are being forwarded to the information department.

California.—Comrade Kingsley is the only representative of the party in the California Legislature. He is being very ably supported, however, by a strong legislative committee, on which there are a number of very capable attorneys. About eighteen bills have been very carefully drawn and have been duly presented to the state Legislature.

Wisconsin.—As usual, Wisconsin takes the lead in the number of Socialists elected to the state Legislature, although their number this year is considerably decreased from that of last. They have seven this session, as against fourteen in the session of 1911. They are preparing their work, however, with the usual painstaking and thorough-going care. All of the seven comrades have been appointed to important committees: Comrade W. L. Smith to the finance committee; James Vint, state affairs and rules; Carl Minkley, municipalities; Martin Gorecki, insurance and banking, and public welfare; E. H. Kiefer, labor, and elections; E. H. Zinn, taxation, and transportation.

Minnesota.—Comrade Hillman is being assisted this year by a very strong legislative committee and the state executive committee of the party. He is the only representative, but hopes to secure the passage of at least some of his measures.

Illinois.—Illinois stands next to Wisconsin in the number of Socialists elected, having four representatives in the state Legislature. The members meet regularly every week, preceding the opening of the Legislature for the study of general legislative problems and the preparation of their measures. They have prepared and presented so far about thirty bills, covering various phases of the Socialist legislative program. Others are in preparation and will be presented later.

Washington.—Comrade Kingery, the only representative in the state Legislature in Washington, has the assistance of Comrade J. Fred Ferris as secretary of the legislative committee. Comrade Kingery is working upon his measures and hopes to present a fairly complete list.

Montana.—Comrade Conner had to face a contest of his election. He has won in this fight, however, and is now ready to take up his work.

Kansas.—The comrades in Kansas have met at the very outset a most disgraceful and high-handed procedure on the part of the representatives of the plutocracy. A contest was instituted against Comrade Stanton and the matter was thrown into the courts. Comrade Stanton won the case by overwhelming evidence and was sustained. In spite of this fact, however, the state Senate, by a large majority, threw him out of the Senate. This leaves us only two representatives in Kansas, Comrades Miller and Wilson. These comrades, however, are preparing their bills carefully and have introduced a considerable number of them. Copies of their bills are being forwarded to the information department.

The work of the Socialists in the state Legislatures this winter will undoubtedly be far more comprehensive and inclusive than ever before. The high-handed and desperate measures resorted to by the Kansas state Senate will only tend to strengthen the class spirit of the working class and is sure to help the cause. In all of the states the representatives of the Socialist party in the Legislatures are doing earnest, consistent and effective work in the preparation of their measures. All of the groups are exchanging results of their work and each securing the benefit of that of all the others.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington, February.—Socialist women are wanted to march in the great pageant which the National Woman's Suffrage Association is staging in Washington on March 3d, before the inauguration crowds. If enough women wage-workers can be enlisted, a complete section of the parade will be given over to them.

Those in charge of the pageant are experiencing great difficulty in getting enough working women to make up this section. This is natural enough, since the working class is poor and cannot afford to make the trip to Washington. But the women in charge of the pageant believe that among the many visitors to Washington for the inauguration, especially from nearby states, there may be numbers of women who are Socialists or Socialist sympathisers and a special invitation is extended to such women to participate in the parade.

If enough can be enlisted to form a section they will be headed by the banner: "The Toil of Women Helps to Make the Nation Rich."

The marchers in this section will carry banners and will wear over their ordinary clothes simple tunics of dark blue and a Portia cap of the same color. These costumes will be supplied without charge. Women and girls over 14 years of age are eligible. The only expense is a fee of 10 cents to pay for the cost of the banners. In Washington meetings are now being held in stores, laundries and factories to arouse the interest of working women in the pageant, which is to be the greatest demonstration for equal suffrage ever made in this country. Any woman interested should communicate with Suffrage Headquarters, 1420 F street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Although the Democratic party made a successful campaign last fall largely on the pretense of being the friend of the working class, the rules committee of the House, dominated by the Democratic leaders of Congress, has stifled Representative Victor L. Berger's resolution calling upon Congress to investigate the garment workers' strike in New York.

The resolution was referred to the committee on rules, of which Representative Robert L. Henry of Texas is chairman. Henry is a staunch friend of the working class—just before election. It was he who took favorable action on Berger's resolution calling for an investigation of the Lawrence, Massachusetts, strike—just as the Democratic party was preparing to enter a presidential campaign. But Mr. Henry, after election, takes a different view of this New York struggle in which thousands of women are struggling against intolerable economic conditions. The resolution has been pigeonholed, and Henry refuses to call a meeting of his committee to consider it.

"The workers themselves are responsible for this defeat," said Berger, "because they have sent to Congress only one representative of the party of the working class. If we had fifty Socialists in Congress, or even ten Socialists, even though we would be a minority, we could force this resolution through. But one man alone can do nothing but protest."

As a result of the indictment of the editors of the Appeal to Reason for violation of the arbitrary postoffice censorship, and within the past few days, the suppression by the postoffice department of a series of articles on sex-hygiene which was being published in the New York Call, Representative Berger has introduced in the House a resolution calling upon Congress to investigate the postoffice censorship of publications. The resolution provides for a special committee composed of members re-elected to the next Congress and permits this committee to conduct its investigation after the adjournment on March 4.

In Berger's opinion there is no excuse for this latest action of the postoffice censor. The articles were written by Margaret G. Sanger, a trained nurse, and dealt with the question of sex-hygiene in a dignified and scientific manner.

"If we permit any petty officials to decide what is obscene and what is not, or what is dangerous and what is not, then we might as well go back to the Middle Ages and let the priest act as censor," said Berger. "More than any constitution in the world, and more than all the juries on earth is a free and untrammeled press, the bulwark of liberty, and we must guard is as such."

HELP NOW IS A MATTER OF LIFE OR DEATH.

Half a million starving.

In New York 90,000 garment workers are on strike.

The strike affects approximately 500,000.

This is the eighth week of the strike.

The conditions which forced the garment workers to strike are indescribable. They slaved in sweltering sweat shops; in fire-traps! Thousands of them slaved as long as eighty hours a week. Thousands of them for as little and less than $5 a week. Most of them without steady employment. All of them horribly overworked, shamefully underpaid and brutally ill treated.

The conditions of the striking garment workers and their dependents are appalling! Many are fainting on the streets. No food; no fuel; no clothing; no shelter; hundreds dispossessed daily. Capitalist judges show no mercy. Children attend school cold and hungry, wearing rubbers instead of shoes. Self-respecting men and women find themselves compelled to go about begging for bread in a desperate attempt to save themselves and families from starvation.

The Socialist party, Local New York, has undertaken to provide all it can for these suffering and starving strikers. We have established four lunch-rooms for the strikers and their families. These lunch-rooms are now indispensable. To close them down at this time would be a calamity and a crime. In order to keep them open we have bled our local comrades to the bone, and yet they continue to respond.

Now our funds are low—very low. But we are determined to keep the bosses from starving the strikers into submission.

Comrades, we respond to every appeal in the struggle of the working class, no matter where it comes from. Now we must appeal to you. And you must and should RESPOND AT ONCE. To the rescue, comrades! There is no time to be lost. Act at once!

Send money; send food; send clothing; send whatever you can. Send it quickly; get others to do likewise; do it now! YOU can save the striking garment workers from being starved into submission. This strike concerns YOU! Every worker everywhere—the working class. If the striking garment workers lose you are defeated. If the striking garment workers win you are the victors. YOU can help them win. Help yourselves by helping them.

Fellow-workers, comrades, sympathizers, altogether! Act quickly and generously in the spirit of solidarity! A united working class is the world's greatest victory.

All contributions will be acknowledged through the Socialist and labor press. Send whatever you can and all you can to the Executive Committee, Socialist party, Local New York, 239 East Eighty-fourth street, New York, New York.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF SLAVERY.

Have you ever considered how the Southern slave masters got their incomes? Was it not by taking part of what their slaves produced and calling it their own?

And have you ever thought of how the present ruling class—the capitalists of today—get their incomes? Is it not by taking part of what their WAGE slaves produce and calling it their own?

Is there really any difference except in form and name applied?

Was there ever a slave owner in ancient or modern times that had so many slaves as the steel trust, the oil trust or any of the hundreds of other trusts?

In colonial days the English capitalists found one of their main sources of income in supplying English colonists with slaves. By the treaty of Utrecht in 1713 Great Britain secured the monopoly of the slave trade. This monopoly was controlled by royal favorites and was an important source of income to the crown.

As soon as the raising of slaves became profitable the slave breeding states began to object to further importation. But the slave trade received support from another quarter. One of the principle industries of Massachusetts and Connecticut was the manufacturing of New England rum from East Indian molasses. This rum was then taken to Africa and after ample admixture with water was exchanged for negroes, who were then sold to the Southern planters. The ship proceeding from the Southern posts to the West Indies to receive its load of molasses would go on to the New England distilleries and so on. It was from the profits of this trade that the Puritan fathers of our country received a large portion of their incomes. Peter Fanueil was one of these traders, and Fanueil Hall, the "cradle of liberty," was built from the profits obtained from smuggling rum and capturing slaves.

The present system takes on the same aspect of exploiting human flesh and blood. The industrial masters of today build "peace mansions" from the profits derived from the millions of underpaid wage slaves; where plans are laid for more armaments in the mad search for new markets, in order to dispose of the surplus products, augumented by the still cheaper wage slaves imported from the old world.

The profits wrung from the wage slaves of today are infinitely greater than from any chattel slave at any time. Do you not see that those who work under the present system of wage slavery are merely the servants, the conveniences, the puppets of a modern aristocrasy, just as were our ancestors in Europe in the days of feudalism?

When men make a profit from your labor and demand half of what you produce for the privilege of working for them, you are one-half slave; when they get three-fourths you are three-fourths slave.

The workers today receive an average of less than one-half of what they produce and the masters say where they may work, when they may work, how long they may work, how much they may have, and dictate the conditions of their lives as certainly as ever did a slave master of black men.

The day is coming when the men who create all wealth will refuse to toil and slave and struggle for the profit of a master class.

WHY WORKERS WAR.

By Oscar Ameringer.

No working class interests were at stake in the war between the North and the South. As already stated, it was a struggle between slave owner and capitalist. At the bottom was the tariff question. But besides slave owners and capitalists there were other people in this country.

In the South there was a large poor white population, contemptuously called "white trash" by the slave aristocracy. This class, comprising nearly nine-tenths of the total population of the South, tilled the hillside farms too poor to raise cotton. This class neither exported nor imported. In fact, it had precious little to buy or to sell. Every hillside farm produced what it consumed and consumed what it produced. The poor white farmer raised a little corn, converted it into moonshine dew, or cone pones and consumed it himself. He planted a little tobacco and cured, smoked chewed or snuffed it. A few sheep furnished wool to be carded, spun and woven by the women folks, and the cloth was made into clothes by the same hands. A cow or two furnished milk while alive and meat and hide for shoes when dead.

These people made their own furniture, built their own shacks and hammered together their own coffins. Outside of iron and salt, they were practically independent of the world's market. Few of them could vote. None could be elected to office. As a class they were despised not only by the slave owners, but even by the slaves.

Yet, when the war broke out it was this poor, needy, illiterate, beggarly class that shouldered rifles and put on "coon-skin caps" to rush to the defense of an economic system that had degraded them for generations.

What did these poor people have to do with free trade or tariff? If there was one class that could gain, materially, socially and politically through the annihilation of the slave power, it was the poor whites of the South. But instead of attending strictly to their own knitting, they fell all over themselves to furnish cannon fodder for people who held them in the utmost contempt. Owning nothing worth while fighting for, they fought for principles, justice, God, fatherland, the flag freedom, etc. Those who felt the necessity of more substantial reasons claimed that they were fighting for the niggers. Poor, deluded dupes. They didn't have any niggers. Only about 8 per cent of all the Southern people possessed slaves. But men are not what they are, but what they think they are, and a man who has niggers on his brain will fight a darned sight harder than the gentleman who has niggers on his plantation. The Civil War furnishes ample proofs that Karl Marx was right, eternally right, when he said: "The ruling ideas of every period are the ideas of its ruling class."

Did the slave owners go to war, too? Sure thing. These gentlemen enjoying exemption from the sordid struggle for existence had but little work for their brain and consequently allowed this otherwise rather useful organ to sleep. They faced the approaching struggle with the same stupid bravado that a bull calf faces a locomotive. What idea did these gentlemen of leisure have about the strength of the North? To them the roaring furnaces, the fire-belching mills, the million spindled looms, the miles of shining rails, the heaving iron horses, the modern catacombs of coal and metal, the harvesters and reapers had no significance. Living in another age, they dreamed of a struggle of muscle and brawn, when in reality it was a struggle between brute force, and brain and machine.

"The war will only last until after breakfast," or at any rate not more than thirty days. "Stick a corncob on a broomhandle and poke it at a Yankee and he'll run," are samples of the assinine witticism indulged in by the empty-headed slaveocrats.

Under such pleasant circumstances it was only natural that the young society buds should don natty gray uniforms, and as lieutenants, captains, colonels, majors and generals, lead the poor white trash into war. But unfortunately the war lasted over breakfast, dinner and supper. In fact, it soon dawned upon the aristocratic swells that war, after all, was hardly a place for refined folks. Worse and moreover some of the nicest young men of the very best Southern families actually got killed. And still worse, got killed by people to whom they never had been even properly introduced. Something had to be done to save "the flower of the South." The government, always the handmaid of the ruling classes, came to the rescue. After the fall of Fort Donnelson, the Confederate Congress, composed of slave owners and their lawyers, passed a series of acts which exempted all men who owned more than twenty slaves from military service in the Confederate army. The number of slaves required to exempt the owner, later on, was reduced to ten. Other property owners who owned no slaves could escape service by paying certain stipulated sums or by rendering other than military service to the government. Needless to say, the poor white trash was not consulted on a matter which made service in the Confederate army voluntary for the rich and compulsory for the poor.

It would not be fair to say that all slave owners availed themselves of the exemption clause. Many fought to the end of the war like brave men. But many others did crawl home to mammy through the hole so conveniently provided by their government. It was not an uncommon practice then for big slave owners to divide their slaves among their sons in order to keep them out of the war.

The Southern trader class was looked down upon by the slave aristocracy. Moreover, this class had no direct interest in the struggle. At the same time, traders are entirely too sharp to risk their hides for such spooks as flags, principles, justice and eternal rights. To give this class something tangible to fight for, the Confederate Congress repudiated the debts owed by Southern merchants to Northern jobbers and manufacturers. Since this total indebtedness was estimated at between fifty and three hundred million dollars, we have sufficient reasons why the Southern middle class fought for independence.

This class and the professionals, who stood to the slave owners in about the same relation as the retainers of medieval times did towards the feudal lord, furnished most of the officers for the patriotic poor whites, who were the only ones who had no nickles under their feet.—Life and Deeds of Uncle Sam.

CALIFORNIA IRON ORES.

Deposits in the Eagle Mountains Described by the United States Geological Survey.

The iron ores of the Pacific coast have until recently received but little attention. Numerous deposits have been known to exist, but they have generally been regarded as too far from centers of consumption and fuel supplies to be worked at a profit and too small to warrant the expense of erecting furnaces within reach. The deposits at Minaret, Madera county, California, are said to be among the largest in California and perhaps in the West. They occur on the summits of the Sierra Nevada. Probably next in size, but of greater commercial importance, are the Eagle Mountain deposits, in Riverside county, California.

The United States Geological Survey has just published as Bulletin 503 a report on the iron-ore deposits of the Eagle Mountains, by E. C. Harder. The examination and mapping of these deposits from the first detailed investigation of the iron ores of California made by the Federal Survey and are a continuation of similar investigations in the Iron Springs district in southwestern Utah, made several years ago.

The Eagle Mountain Range is one of a large number of bare ranges of rocky mountains in the Mohave and Colorado deserts. The higher peaks of the Eagle Mountains rise about 4,000 feet above sea level, and the edge of the desert that surrounds the range on the west, north and east averages about 1,500 feet above sea level.

The principal iron ores of the Eagle Mountains occur on the north limb of the dome in a chain of discontinuous deposits, six and one-half miles long, trending across the summit of the range in a northwesterly direction. They extend three miles west of the summit and three and one-half miles east. The ore-bearing zone reaches in places a width of 4,000 feet, but individual ore deposits do not exceed 500 feet in width. A moderate estimate of the total quantity of mixed ore and gangue material available in the deposits now exposed, assuming that they extend several hundred feet down, is about 75,000,000 tons. Of this quantity about four-fifths is assumed to be ore, most of it of very high grade.

No iron ore has been mined in the district, the principal obstacle to the establishment of the iron industry in southern California being the absence of fuel. The nearest deposits of coking coal are in Colorado, the lignites and bituminous coals of Washington and Oregon being unsuitable for this purpose. It seems likely, however, that before many years extensive mining operations will be started in the Alaskan coal fields, and then large quantities of coking coal will be shipped to Pacific coast ports, thus making possible the establishing of blast furnaces and steel plants.

WATER POWERS OF THE CASCADES.

Report Issued by the United States Geological Survey in Co-operation With the State of Washington Shows Great Undeveloped Water Power.

Well to the west of the great rock barrier which in the early days of the republic was assumed to be the natural western boundary of the United States lies another great belt of elevated land surmounted by a very chaos of rugged peaks and pyramids—the Cascade range of Washington and Oregon. In these mountains exists an inexhaustible store of potential wealth, much of it belonging to the nation—not precious or useful metals, for mines however rich must eventually become exhausted, but a wealth of running water, an endless chain revolving with the seasons. In the opinion of the hydrographic engineers of the United States Geological Survey few areas in the United States present more favorable opportunities for the development of water power than that traversed by the Cascade range. The general altitude of the crest of the range is 6,000 to 8,000 feet above sea level, and the higher peaks extend into the region of everlasting snow. From Mount Rainier in Washington to Mount Shasta just south of the Oregon-California line, both more than 14,000 feet in elevation, many snow-covered peaks are the perpetual fountains that supply the flow of strong rivers running westward to the coast. The precipitation of the area is heavy, the Cascade range receiving about 100 inches of rainfall a year.

The streams of the Cascades possess in high degree the requisite characteristics for the successful development of water power, namely, steep gradient, abundant water, and comparatively uniform flow. Add to these the enormous resources of timber, metal, and other minerals, and lands as yet developed only in small part but promising an extensive future market for water power, and it becomes apparent that the large areas of country surrounding the Cascade Plateau have in the undeveloped power of their streams very great potential wealth.

Federal and State Co-operation.

The United States Geological Survey, in co-operation with the Washington State Board of Geological Survey, Henry Landes, state geologist, is making a comprehensive survey of the water resources of this area in that state. Water-Supply Paper 313, just issued by the federal survey, entitled "Water Powers of the Cascade Range, Part II," is the second of a series of reports resulting from this work, the first having been issued in 1912, as Water-Supply Paper 253. This second report deals with the drainage basine of the cowlitz (except the Toutle), Nisqually, Puyallup, White, Green and Cedar rivers. It includes all monthly estimates of river discharge derived from data collected by the water-resources branch of the geological survey in co-operation with the State Board of Geological Survey and by private persons. River plans and profiles made by the topographic branch of the geological survey are also included. The possibilities of developing power on the streams are described in as much detail as is warranted in a work of this kind. Complete surveys and plans for development of unused power privileges have not been attempted, such work being more properly left to those who are contemplating actual development. The purposes of the report are rather to show the power resources of the basins described and to indicate in a general way the relative value of the individual power privileges.

Important River Surveys.

The river surveys, which constitute one of the essential factors in the analysis of power, were made during the field season of 1910 by Bayard Knock and W. B. Lewis of the topographic branch of the United States Geological Survey, under the direction of T. G. Gerdine, geographer. A supplementary survey of the upper portion of Cispus river was made during August and September, 1911, by Charles Leidl and W. O. Harmon, under the direction of Fred F. Henshaw, district engineer.

Field reconnaissances were made in most of the basins to gather information relative to water supply, topographic features, and other general conditions which should be considered in the interpretation of stream-flow records and river-profile representations. These reconnaissances were made by G. L. Parker, assistant engineer of the United States Geological Survey.

The summaries of the available power in each basin are computed from the average flow for the lowest week on record and from the flow that could be realized from possible storage. The flow with storage is computed on the basis of the continuous discharge that can be maintained by the release of the storage during the most extreme drough on record, considering the length and severity of low-water periods.

Copies of both water-supply papers 253 and 313 may be obtained free of charge on application to the Director of the Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

CAPITALIST CLASS HYPOCRISY.

Preaches "Freedom of Labor," But All It Wants Is the Right to Scab.

Exploiterdom has resurrected from the phraseology of the Manchester school a few slogans with which it attempts to play toward the working class the rôle of moralizer and scientific economist. The slogans, "Freedom of Labor" and "Self Responsibility," originate with them. What is behind this fact? Economic development has abrogated the "Freedom of Labor" even for the employer in a certain sense. Trusts, syndicates, etc., limit to the individual employer the extent of his production, fix the selling price to some extent, and often apportion the markets. "Freedom of Labor" for the employer reduces itself in a fast-growing measure to the "right" to treat his employés in as bad a manner as he pleases, or as circumstances allow him. The right "to be boss in his own house" he only insists upon towards the workers. In the fixing of conditions of labor none but him has a right to have a say; the selection of workers he claims as his exclusive, inalienable right. He wants to decide autocratically whom he shall employ and whom not.

The state as an employer claims still greater latitude in its autocracy. It assumes the right to exclude citizens holding views at variance with those of the ruling class from employment in government establishments. It has even the temerity to demand, in return for the "favor' of allowing him to be a governmental official, that a citizen forego the other rights of a citizen. Thus do the representatives of the ruling class understand their right of "freedom of labor"; but for the workers it is a "right" to perform any kind of work. The right of the workers to strike is a nightmare of the exploiters, strikebreaking being, of course, a deed worthy of praise and protection.

Capitalist morality even desires to deprive the individual worker of the spirit of solidarity and comradeliness fostered by organization. It happens that organized workers sometimes go on strike because a few of their number do not play their part properly toward their fellow workers. If the exploiter fears a loss of profit because the prosperity of the establishment rests upon the skill of the strikers he may condescend to discharge the "suckers," provided the others will return to work. If this offer is accepted the press of the enemies of the trade unions will raise a howl of indignation about Social Democratic "terrorism." But in reality the workers only made a very modest use of the "freedom of labor." Why, if the employer has the right to discharge a worker because he does not like his nose, should not the workers have the right to leave their work to escape the presence of scoundrelly characters? The howl of terrorism on account of such actions springs from inconsistency bred of hypocrisy and capitalist interests.

The most disgusting figure cut in this respect is that cut by the Christian trade unionists. They even regard it as justified to exclude or victimize a worker from employment on account of his political views.

This dual standard of ethics shows itself likewise in the slogan, "self responsibility." It resounds in one's ears during battles over social legislation. Labor protective measures, according to a certain capitalist element, have a demoralizing effect. They smother "self responsibility," lame the energy, abrogate care for existence, and lead to carelessness and nonchalance. Thus does exploiterdom reason.

But if one views the practical affairs of life with open eyes it is easy to discern the fact that the employers are only too prone to punish practical demonstrations of "self responsibility." The workers, however, who allow themselves to be used as lackeys in this ignoble work are praised as national heroes, even if they are the most characterless of persons.

Under capitalist rule the individual worker becomes impotent, an object of unrestrained greed for profit. Only in unity with his shopmates, his class comrades, can he protect himself against capitalist aggression. "Self responsibility" dictates the duties of solidarity. The workingmen must learn to know that if they rely upon the grace of a merciless capitalist class, then it will force them to the ground, reduce their incomes below the minimum necessary for existence, condemn them and their families to a life of misery and privation, undermine their health and hasten them to early graves.

Conditions today make solidarity the citizen's virtue, which can best protect the public interest. No worse social crime can there be than the breaking of solidarity. And in that category strike-breaking takes the first place! In most cases it springs from dirty, despicable egotism; that egotism which seeks to gain advantages at the expense of others. At best the irresponsible act of the strikebreaker springs from deficient understanding; but whatever may cause it, it injures the fellow workers and is harmful to the general interest. But in the eyes of the employers the strikebreaker is a citizen of esthmable qualities. His mean and harmful actions shall be protected by laws and be ennobled! And this is again termed to insure the "freedom to work"! But, in fact, strikebreakers' protection is destined to foster the "freedom" of exploitation, of profit-mongering.

So behind all capitalist untruthfulness, behind the moralizing of the ruling class, behind its phrascology of the "freedom of labor" and "self responsibility" nothing else is obscured but the brutal endeavor to subjugate labor, and to remove all obstacles in the path of capital in its race for dividends.—Berlin Vorwaerts.

ILLUSIONS DISPELLED.

Shams of Capitalism Can No Longer Help But Be Seen.

We take it as a matter of course that the growing of wheat and corn and cotton, of fruits and vegetables, the raising of sheep and cattle and hogs, the mining of coal and iron and copper, the making of bread and shoes and clothes, the building of houses and the transportation of people and goods shall be done for profit; that the providing of food, clothing and shelter shall not be first and foremost to sustain life and supply human needs, but that those who control the production of things may make profit.

We are neither surprised nor indignant when mines are shut down and factories closed because prices are so low that it does not pay to operate them, even though we know that many people lack coal or are without shoes and other necessities and that the cessation of work in these industries will bring others to want. Born and raised under this system we imagine it always was, always will be and, too lazy to think it out, accept whatever is as right.

That all industry should be commercialized—a dollar and cent proposition from start to finish—seems quite proper, even if it does work out disastrously for those who do the work and need the goods.

But business methods and morals are not confined to the factory and market place. We know that laws in the interest of the rich and powerful are many and rigidly enforced. We are beginning to know that the few laws intended to protect common folk are unconstitutional, that the lawyers are always on the side of the fat fees, and that a poor man has no standing in the courts.

Thrifty congressmen and legislators crook the knee to the men who furnish the campaign funds, chip in the jack-pot and dictate the nominations; they obligingly submit and enact bills prepared by corporation attorneys and as cheerfully commit to the graveyard bills introduced in the interest of the workers.

We are awakening to the fact that newspapers are published to make money, not to furnish news. Most of their revenue comes from the advertisers who effectively resent the publication of anything distasteful—to them. Newspapermen must eat, and in order to eat must have a job. Editorials are dictated in the business office, the editors merely clothe them with words.

The people of the land of make-believe tell us their troubles and abuse the theater trust which judges the merits of plays and players by the box-office receipts.

Poets and painters, sculptors and architects, with some splendid exceptions, are mercenary pot-boilers who practice their art for what there is in it. Singers and orators, story-tellers and historians give the public whatever the manager, editor or publisher will pay for—that which brings the best prices.

The members of the faculty listen to the advice of the regents as to the trend of the university's teaching; the preacher respectfully breeds the opinions of Mr. Worldly Wiseman, pillar of the church.

We are a patient and long-suffering people, but there is a limit; there are some things we will not permit to be commercialized and easily first among these are our public schools.

And this is the hope and the purpose of many employers who pose as advocates of technical education. They would use the schools as incubators in which to hatch fledgling mechanics, trained in an atmosphere of prejudice against unionism.—Exchange.

ORGANIZATION IN THE INDUSTRIES.

The striking fact concerning present time conditions is that in spite of the recent elections throughout the United States, in spite of wars and rumor of war throughout the world, there is still witnessed the incessant war between labor and capital. In almost every country strikes are increasing in dimensions and frequency, and even the staidest nations—in the strictly literay sense of the words— are displaying manifestations of economic dis content which should certainly give pause.

It is immaterial whether the people blame the agitators or not, just as long as the cause remains there will be agitations and discontent.

That man is certainly dull of sight who can think that this stage of things does not presage a complete change in the industrial system of the world. It may continue for a number of years, but no discontent from below has even been successfully stifled. It has been time and time again repressed only to burst out with redoubled vigor, and with energy that no repression could overcome. It is because this is true that it is essential that something must be done to meet the emergency. We know very well that unless the workers are organized and face this future that is before them, prepared to take advantage of everything as it arises, these conditions as they grow more acute will grow more acute in their misery.

Thus it is that the industrialists preparing within the shell of the old system—to use Marx famous figure—the new system which shall take its place, and at the same time organizing the workers in that solidarity which only people who have a logical program wherewith to face the future. Their program is logical because it is supremely adjusted to present day economic conditions, taking due notice of the cause of those evils and fully prepared to end them by ending the system of exploitation which causes them.

Production at the present time has outstripped the control of the individual, and therefore to enjoy the proceeds of production individual control has passed forever. Syndicates which centralize in the hands of a few the labor of all naturally do not distribute according to the needs of that social labor—on the contrary there are those in control today who enjoy the proceeds of other people's labor in abundance; who merely owning stock and bonds but doing no labor are entitled to plenty, while many who labor incessantly are all the time on a borderland of starvation. Under the present system these propertyless workers are an essential to modern industry and the greatest function of the industrialists is to organize them to assume control sooner or later, that this control may bring to them necessaries of life in needed abundance.

Meantime there are those who have tariff panaceas for present time discontent and for the present time high prices, but when it is recalled that the protctionists out of power in Great Britain promise protection as a panacea for high costs of living and in the United States the Democrats in power are promising a revision downwards of tariff and the abolition of protection as the only dope what wonder that contradictions like these do not impress anything and arouse no faith in the nostrums. The Democrats have fortunately obtained control so that they can prove that their theories are barren and bear no hope of remedying the evils of which they themselves are a part.

There are just two alternatives before the world today. These gigantic means of production and distribution have so far outstripped individual control that it seems useless to argue that we face either an industrial Socialism or an industrial feudalism or state capitalism. Roosevelt represents this latter alternative in his policies with the government a huge operator for all the bond holders of the nation. That is government-owned utilities, and although the interest must be paid upon the bonds, it is overlooked that such government ownership has limitations which real ownership has not. Unprepared by an industrial organization to meet the future, there will be no other alternative but to accept industrial feudalism.—Nome Industrial Worker.

IN THIRTY YEARS.

Not since the funerals of Wilhelm Liebknecht and Paul Singer, the great German Socialists, has Europe beheld such a tremendous outpouring as that which attended the burial of Franz Schumeier, the Austrian Socialist member of Parliament, who a few days ago was assassinated by one of those miserable wretches known in Continental Europe by the misfit name of "Christian Socialist," which is there used to describe a "good Catholic" and a Jew hater.

More than half a million men and women attended the ceremony, and so tremendous was the crowd that the transportation facilities of Vienna, a city of 2,000,000 people, were utterly unable to handle it, over 100,000 people coming into the city on foot. Never in all its history has the great city of Vienna witnessed such a funeral, and it has buried kings and statesmen by the dozen, and staged some of the most magnificent funeral pageants that Europe has known. But so great was the multitude on this occasion that they stood for miles packed around the cemetery, unable to enter, while the victim was being buried, and the grave piled like a miniature mountain with masses of red carnations and laurel wreaths bound with garlands of red streamers.

This funeral calls to memory another which took place just thirty years ago in Highgate Cemetery, London, when Karl Marx was laid in his last resting place by a small group of friends, and one solitary man, his lifelong friend, Engels, spoke a short farewell address over the lonely grave. And though the dead man was by all odds the most powerful figure ever produced by the Socialist movement, London remained oblivious and unaffected. That little funeral cortege passed along its streets unobserved; the traffic halted not, and the lone policeman on his beat probably gave it no more than a passing glance.

And but thirty years have passed, and now when we go forth to bury our dead a giant metropolis of Europe halts until the ceremonies are over. The traffic itself becomes a subsidiary to the spectacle, and but an inadequate one at that. The dead man is buried not only by the city but by the nation, nay, by all the nations. From every country within traveling distance come representatives of the cause with which the dead man was identified. And from those out of reach come by wire orders for floral offerings, that they too may be represented. From America, Australia and far-off lands whose remoteness makes the personal attendance of a representative impossible.

And those who control the land and sea cables which hold the world together in instant communication, those who hate and fear Socialism, flash over those same wires the news that the dead man was given a funeral that no European monarch, emperor, potentate or statesman was ever before given or can expect in the future.

And in the lonely Highgate Cemetery in London lies the other dead man in his grave; the man who gave the working class of the world the sword with which they shall hew their way to freedom through the opposition of kings, emperors and potentates, their armies and their parasites, who shall tumble the crowns of the kings, the parchments of nobilities and the "vested rights" of the modern capitalist potentates in the dust, to establish economic freedom among mankind.

Those who mocked at the teachings of the dead man of thirty years since, and who hounded him from land to land as a dangerous but visionary and impractical disturber can now judge of the reality of the teachings and their effect by the funeral of this Austrian Socialist. To them it is a sinister portent that cannot be gainsaid. To us, it is an omen of victory, though the dead man was of us. In the tramp of those myriad feet we can discern the marching on of the cause of Socialism, and so, too, can our enemies, though they may pretend ignorance.

It may be that for many of us the old Scripture texts have lost their validity, for we are of all faiths and no faith, in that particular respect, but where are those today who when they bury their dead can as truly say as the Socialists of the world, that the grave is swallowed up in victory? And what man shall say that the next thirty years may not bring its full realization?—New York Call.

In Memoriam.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in His wise and never-erring judgment, to take unto Himself our beloved brother, James Spurrier, who departed this life on earth on the 15th day of January, 1913, reminding us that in the midst of life we are in death, and by our brother's decease Mrs. George Westenfield has lost a devoted uncle and Bryan Miners' Union No. 64 a loyal member and brother; therefore be it

Resolved, That our charter be draped for a period of thirty days, that a copy of this resolution be spread on the minutes and a copy be given to the deceased's relatives and friends in this, their time of sorrow and bereavement.

When draws life's journey to its end,
Oh, light eternal shine!
As through Death's vale our way we wend,
Be with us, strength divine.
Then earth's dark night shall wane to day;
Heaven's morn shall chase its gloom away—
Light everlasting shine.

POETICAL

YOU'LL BE A MAN, MY SON.

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting, too;
If you can wait and not be tired of waiting,
Or being lied about, don't deal in lies,
Or being hated don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise;
If you can dream—and not make dreams your master;
If you can think—and not make thought your aim;
If you can meet with Triumph and Disaster
And treat these two imposters just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you've given your life to, broken,
And stop and build 'em up with worn-out tools;
If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose and start again at your beginnings,
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you
Except the will which says to them, "Hold on!"
If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch;
If neither foes nor cooling friends can hurt you;
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a man, my son!

—Rudyard Kipling

GREED VS. MANHOOD.

"Please give me work," the poor man said,
"To buy my wife and children bread;
For two long months I've had no job;
I am one amongst that countless mob
Of unemployed."

The boss not even turned his head
To see which man these words had said,
But answered in a voice so rough:
"I need no men; I have enough
To make my pile."

No sweaty brow, no calloused hand,
Are on the men who own the land;
But what care they if you don't eat,
Or have to beg out on the street,
Just to exist.

When will the working class get wise?
Might is ours when we organize.
And with this strength we'll make things hum
And put the grafters on the bum—
Or shovel muck.

W. R. REID.

"JUST ONE OF MANY."

She stood at the corner one winter night,
The winds were blowing a blast,
As she gathered the shreds of a tattered shawl.
She looked up at the sky o'ercast.
And away in the West she saw a star
That beamed with a kindly light.
She smiled, brushed aside a falling tear,
And went "where the lamps shone bright."

"Give me a drink—please, just one more,
To deaden this horrible pain,
And make me believe in my drunken dream
That I am a 'woman' again.
Why do men say that Fate decrees,
As truth, what ministers tell,
That women as slaves must feed man's lust
And sit in the 'Gates of Hell?'

"Whisky, please—and fill up the glass;
I like it—it makes me forget
That I once was a woman pure and good
Ere I started to pay the debt.
Yes, born in the country, came to town,
A livelihood to obtain;
But small was the wage I got in return,
Though I slaved and labored in vain.

"Say, were you ever hungry?
No one willing to give you bread?
Or tramped the streets of the city
Till you wished that you were dead?
I have, and I know the feeling,
And there's always a man and a place,
When one of our kind is down and out,
Can enter the killing race.

"I had a heart, a body and soul,
And a name that was good and fair;
I gave up all for a roof and food,
Then I went to live 'down there.'
Now I'm one of a hundred others
Who travel the self-same way—
All slaves of some 'Christian citizen,'
Who takes our hire as pay.

"His wife is a social leader;
His house a palace within;
We pay for the jewels and dinners
With the wages of our sin.
His store, just one of the many,
Hires slaves who dare not tire,
Who to feed and clothe the body,
Must accept a harlot's hire.

"And on the bodies of woman—
On the souls of the women who fell—
Through his greed for business and profits
They now sit at the 'Gates of Hell,'
While he prays to 'his Father' in Heaven
For grace to do what is right;
His slaves their vocations are plying,
Like scavengers in the night.

"Just one more whisky, mister;
O God, am I going mad?
Just to be human one more day—
A woman pure and glad!
An outcast? yes, what of it?
Others the same story tell.
Dear God, some day let us meet such men
Down at 'the Gates of Hell.'"

W. E. HANSON, Butte, Montana.

THE SLAVE MARKET.

We will turn back the page of history
Some fifty years or more,
And read how they bartered mankind,
Sold slaves in the days of yore.
There's a block in the open market place,
Where a beast in the guise of a man,
Displays his human merchandise,
Which men will buy who can.

And around the block are gathered
Men who traffic in human flesh,
Who laugh in glee at the plaintive moan
Of the slaves they further enmesh.
"They're only niggers and have no souls;
God intended them to be slaves,"
To scourge and torture, whip and kill
Till they fill their shallow graves.

"Here is a likely young nigger—
A male just turned nineteen;
Just examine his limbs and muscles,
His body lithe and lean;
Warranted tractable, docile,
Will do whatever he's told;
Works long hours without tiring.
How much do you bid in gold?"

"Here is a bright young woman;
She's a mother with one little child.
We will offer them both together;
She's warranted gentle and mild.
Her master is tired of her—
The child? Well, it is his own.
He engaged in wild speculation,
Now needs money to pay the loan."

Men and women and children,
The story unblushing is told,
Were only so much merchandise—
Were exchanged for yellow gold.
And when we read the story,
Our hearts with anger flame,
But we're blind to present conditions,
Think slavery only a name.

Come with me to the mill and factory,
Where the little children stand
Before the spools and spindles,
With the threads in their tiny hands.
They are slaves to a mighty "system,"
Birth accursed, suffering slaves,
Who continue to turn out "profits"
Till they fill their little graves.

We will go to the grimy bunkers,
Where the children are breaking coal,
Where the "system" is working smoothly
And Death is taking its toll.
Here are slaves not bought at auction,
But slaves on account of their need;
They are giving their lives to the monster
Of the "system's" graft and greed.

In the marts of trade the women
Must sell their souls for bread,
And the army is ever increasing;
You can hear their measured tread.
And today the slave market is glutted,
As it was in the days of old—
Women's virtue and lives of children,
As were blacks for the white man's gold.

If this be prosperity, hearken,
Ye masters with hearts of stone;
If ye had a thousand lives to live,
For this ye could not atone.
Draw your righteous garment about you
When you have reached your goal;
Each step you advanced was a sacrifice
Of a human life and a soul.

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

SOME PEOPLE are yelling for peace, while the steel trust continues in the business of manufacturing armor plate.

THE DISCONTENT and unrest of labor are the absolute proofs of the growing intelligence of the working class.

THE EMPLOYES of the Gould system bought diamonds for Helen Gould as a wedding present. The fool-killer has work to do.

MULTI-MILLIONAIRES who rob labor, and then on Thanksgiving Day or Christmas, throw a few bones to the hungry, are called humanitarians and philanthropists.

THE RAILWAY EMPLOYES of Great Britain have amalgamated under the name of "The National Union of Railway Men." The new organization, under an industrial form, starts out with a membership of 200,000.

THE DURANGO DEMOCRAT declares that the people of Egypt should congratulate themselves that Morgan, while sojourning there, did not take anything but indigestion.

WHILE THE CORPORATIONS were using the militia to suppress the striking coal miners in West Virginia, these same corporations were bribing the Legislature to elect a capitalist representative to the United States Senate.

THE GARMENT WORKERS have put up a stubborn fight in New York, and regardless of the outrages committed by thugs and prostituted policemen, the strikers are slowly but surely forcing the bosses to step from their lofty pedestal and recognize the fact that labor has some rights which cannot be ignored, even by economic tyrants.

JOSEPH D. CANNON, organizer of the Western Federation of Miners, who has had charge of the strike at Mineville, New York, has been sued for $20,000 damages. This trifling amount is wanted by John J. Navin, a justice of the peace, who has been imposing penalties on strikers that meet the approval of Witherbee, Sherman & Company.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER has had a commission investigating the cause of prostitution.

The commission labored strenuously for many months and finally came to the conclusion that the cause of prostitution was poverty. The question now arises, will John make any effort to abolish poverty, the cause of prostitution?

THE WORKING CLASS has been voting for "friends of labor" since labor was permitted to exercise the right of suffrage, and yet the laboring people are still groaning in the misery of poverty and want.

When labor votes for its class interest, the labor movement will be drafting fewer resolutions of protest against industrial slavery.

THE FIGHT in Mexico is a battle of commercial brigands for the spoils of capitalism. The common herd, garbed in the livery of labor, is paying the death toll. Men who sit in cushioned chairs in gilded dens in Wall street will reap the golden harvest from the carnival of slaughter. The laboring class has not yet learned to yield obedience to that injunction which commands: "Thou Shalt Not Kill."

THE REFORMERS of Denver are endeavoring to purify the moral atmosphere, but morals require something else besides denunciation from pulpits and tracts circulated by religious peddlers to make it possible for a woman to command a wage for her labor that will enable her to live, and morality will rise from the gutter and soar towards the stars. A wage that merely prolongs a miserable existence, will never elevate the moral standard of the woman made desperate through want and hunger.

THE UNITED CIGAR STORES COMPANY has 1,100 retail stores in the United States and the gross earnings for the past year reached the colossal sum of $32,000,000. During the year 1913, this giant in commercialism will establish 200 more retail institutions and it is claimed that the revenue for the present year will reach $40,000,000. The man of limited capital is foolish to make an attempt to compete with a combination that covers a continent. How about America being a free country.

THE AUTHORITIES in West Virginia under instructions from their masters, the coal barons, arrested "Mother" Jones and held her as a prisoner in a box car. But the authorities fearing an uprising on the part of the striking miners released the woman of four-score years, who knows no fear when fighting for human rights.

An industrial system that demands that a woman in her eightieth year shall be held as a prisoner in a box car guarded by State Militia, should be consigned to eternal oblivion.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES of the legislature of Pennsylvania has enacted into law a bill making it a crime to carry a red flag in a public procession. It is strange that the great statesman of the Pennsylvania legislature did not frame a bill making it mandatory on the Federal government to eliminate every vestige of red from the Stars and Stripes.

The far-seeing solons must have thought that making it criminal to bear a crimson banner in a public procession, must certainly be a death blow to Socialism, but these corporation-owned lick-spittles will discover in due time that every knock from the mortgaged chattels of a master class, is a boost for socialism.

THE United Mine Workers of Illinois, in state convention at Peoria, passed a resolution to the effect that 82,000 miners of the state of Illinois would declare a strike in case war is declared either by or against the United States

The resolution is to be forwarded to the International Workers' convention for adoption.

When the workers who do the fighting, realize the import of such a resolution, there will be less widows and orphans to mourn the death of husbands and fathers, who have been swept off their feet by patriotism. Those who breed the quarrel should bear the brunt of battle, for the workingman should be interested in no fight save the struggle to throw off the yoke of capitalism.

UNDER THE HEADING, "Opposing the I. W. W.," the Iron City Trades Journal, published at Pittsburgh, Pa., has the following editorial comment:

"The American Federation of Labor is engaged in a fight to the finish with the Industrial Workers of the World, and it is no wonder, because the Federation represents the best intelligence of organized labor, while the Industrial Workers declare that they are ready to burn, slay, cheat, rob, commit any sort of crime in fact, in order to destroy the present form of society and build a new one on its ruins.

"Naturally, the Federation is opposed to that kind of program, and so is the rest of the world except a few that are enlisted in that terrible organization that wise men everywhere object to and feel that it is a dangerous combination of men more intent upon an evil than upon a good purpose, or, at least, profoundly intent upon a certain purpose and ready to resort to any, even the wickedest means, to compass it."

THE CHURCH, through its preachers, has posed as "the friend of labor." The ministers of the church declare that they are doing all in their power to bring capital and labor together on a Christian basis. The effort of the church to bring capital and labor together, is to blind the vision of the worker to the fact, that the exploiter and exploited can no more be brought together on a Christian basis, than the robber and the robbed, the lion and the lamb, the fox and the chicken. The exploiter is doing the same thing as the church for every grabber of dividends is taxing all his ingenuity for arguments to convince the worker that he is a partner with his boss.

The intelligent slave, struggling with poverty, clad in rags and existing in a hovel, knows that his interests are not identical with a master, who is robed in broad cloth, rides in an automobile and who lives in a mansion.

Labor and capital will get together when labor has in its possession all that labor creates.

"BILLY" SUNDAY, ex-baseball player and now evangelist, has been in Pennsylvania for some time, carrying on revivals for revenue.

Some of the ministers of the gospel have criticised Sunday severely and "Billy," with that meek and lowly spirit which characterized the Nazarene, has branded them as "lobsters."

"Billy," in a recent revival, while having a religious fit, declared:

"The doctrine of the universal fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man is the worst rot that was ever dug out of hell, and the minister who first preached it was a liar."

If the "fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man is the worst rot that was ever dug out of hell," then it is about time that the dupes who are putting up the funds to keep this freak on the rostrum should lock their coffers and notify this dispenser of "hot air" that his services are no longer needed.

"Billy" is not to be blamed for getting the "mazuma," but there is something the matter with the noodles of men who gather to witness this contortionist go through his stunts.

"WHY DO YOU OBJECT to Socialism?" asked the section hand of the blanket man who had stopped to rest by the side of the railroad. "It will destroy the home," he said, as he threw his home onto the ground and sat down upon it to continue the conversation. "It looks like you ought to destroy that home and get a new one," said the section man, contemplating the ragged blanket. "Do you think it would destroy any homes if you were to employ one who wished to work and give them the full value of the product?" "That would destroy our incentive, and besides there would be nothing left to reward the capitalist for his hard work and abstinence. It is not right to make the people divide up, anyway."

The section man looked at the wanderer for a few minutes in astonishment and then said: "You have nothing today because you have always been forced to divide your product with the capitalist class We, the Socialists, want to stop dividing with the fellow who refuses to work and insists that we shall provide him with all kinds of luxuries. The trouble with you is that you have a capitalist's code of morality and a blanket stiff's position in life."

The wanderer gathered up his home and moved slowly off saying something about the necessity of having some law passed to stop this agitation, as it would destroy the churches and make people immoral to listen to it.—Oakland World.

CHARLES POST of Battle Creek, Michigan who has beggared the English language for invectives and epithets to hurl at organized labor, is now the only member of "The Trades and Workers Association" which was launched by "Gripe Nuts" some two years ago.

The saw-dust promoter, after fighting organized labor for years concluded that he would establish a rival organization that would ultimately supplant the American Federation of Labor, and accordingly, secured a four-story building with splendid hall and equipped with shower baths, electric lights and library as headquarters for an organization whose principles were to abolish strikes and lockouts, blacklists and boycotts.

But, alas, the dream of the maker of mysterious cereal compounds has collapsed, and now, the building in which "The Trades and Workers Association" was to formulate plans to bring about the Brotherhood of Labor and Capital is empty, and calling for a tenant.

Old "Postum" and "There's a Reason" is a failure as an organizer, for regardless of the verdancy of countless thousands of "Rubes" who can be caught by almost any kind of a bait, there were but few who were so brainless as to be duped by the bunco-game of the genius who discovered the health-giving ingredients of pulverized peanut shells.

It is now up to John Kirby to take hold of Post's failure.

AN EXCHANGE, under the head of "Labor Notes," had the following:

"The Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen pays out approximately $2,000,000 a year in the United States and Canada to satisfy death and total disability claims.

"In the first four factories investigated by the New York committee of safety out of the list of thirty furnished by the striking garment workers, doors connecting with stairways were found locked where workrooms were crowded with operatives. In every case the law was plainly violated.

"The latest report of the American Federation of Labor shows that its membership has increased about 77,000 in the last six months It is planned to have workers in America send pamphlets to their friends and relatives in foreign countries who are contemplating coming here to earn a livelihood, pointing out the advantages of unskilled laborers joining the ranks of the federation.

"The United Mine Workers of America spent nearly $750,000 for strike benefits during the year ending December 1, 1912. The total expenses incurred during the year aggregated $1,108,991.09, of which $269,036.35 was for salaries and $22,000 for printing. There is in deposit in banks $238,902.50, and outstanding checks aggregating $17,640.05, making a balance on hand on December 1, 1912, of $221,262.06"

THE ANTI-TRUST BILLS passed by the Legislature of New Jersey with the approval of Governor Wilson, have met with the objection that they outlaw labor organizations. The New York Times. which was one of Mr. Wilson's principal supporters, says that "it is fairly evident that Governor Wilson's bill No. 1 will call for wholesale indictments of the labor unions of New Jersey."

We see no occasion for surprise that Mr. Wilson's anti-trust program includes labor organizations with combinations of capital. Mr. Wilson has made it quite plain that he favors the freest competition An organization of workingmen to increase wages and shorten the hours of labor is as repugnant to the laissez faire theory to which he holds as a restraint of trade by monopolics.

The individualists have not pressed their opposition to labor organizations openly for the reason that they have deemed it inexpedient. They have relied upon court interpretations of anti-trust laws and the writ of injunction to accomplish their purpose.

When you hear a man condemning Socialism because "it would destroy the freedom of the individual," you may be sure that if he had the courage of his convictions he would denounce organizations of labor as a denial of the right of contract and an invasion of the liberty of the citizen to do as he pleases.

The labor union is based on the theory of co-operative effort. The ideal of individualism is every man for himself.—Milwaukee Leader.

WHILE JOHN H. PATTERSON, president of the National Cash Register Company, and a number of other officials of that institution were fined and sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from one year down to three months for violating the laws of the United States, it will be noticed that there was no unseemly haste demonstrated to railroad them to jail while appeals were taken to the higher courts, as was the fate of the defendants in the Iron Workers' case at Indianapolis, the conclusion of which was followed by a very pious comment on the part of Attorney General Wickersham, that prince of political frauds, to the effect that the laws are enforced against the rich and poor without any discrimination.

Nor should anyone lose any sleep in trying to estimate the approximate time that will elapse before those famous open shoppers of Dayton begin to serve their prison terms. Patterson and his fellow conspirators have announced that they will carry their cases to the United States Supreme Court for a final decision, and there are many, many loopholes in the law, particularly for rich and distinguished persons who employ high-priced attorneys to defend them.

However, the working people of the country will probably gain one immediate advantage as a result of the conviction of the National Cash Register Company officials, and that is they will most likely not be compelled to listen to any more lectures from John H. Patterson and his crowd about what a lawless lot the laboring men really are.—Cleveland Citizen.

THE LARGEST PENSION BILL ever passed by Congress was railroaded through the House on the 18th inst., by a vote of 219 to 40, carrying appropriations aggregating $180,300,000. This enormous sum is paid out to soldier "veterans" and their relatives for work of militarism, for non-productive, for property-wasting, life-destroying work. The great army of veteran laboring people who have been maimed, crippled and disabled in the service of productive work, in the process of wealth creation, they are not considered by the capitalist Congress in Washington. The old veterans of labor may starve, die in the poor house, in the insane asylums—what does it matter to the corporation lawyers and corporation lickspittles who make up the great majority of the United States Congress? But to appropriate hundreds of millions for militarism is considered part of their so-called patriotic work.—St. Louis Labor.

The above shows that labor is getting what it voted for. If labor votes for liver, labor must not expect to receive porter-house steak.

Labor supports an industrial system that demands an army and navy to maintain it, and should file no complaints when millions of money are appropriated for machines of murder to prolong a profit system that improverishes the multitude and enriches the few.

When the working man casts a ballot for himself, instead of his master, Congress will cease to squander money for Gatling guns and cannon on the land and floating steel-clad monsters on the seas.

Labor is voting for war, instead of peace, and furthermore, labor does the fighting.

JACK BRITT GEARITY, writing under the head of "The Mother of Tomorrow," says:

"There are two words in our language forever sacred to memory—Mother and Home! Home, the heaven upon earth, and mother, its presiding angel." In these golden words 'Gene Debs pays tribute to the woman who bore him and so multitudes of men think of their mothers— as of the sweetest memory of life.

And within the heart of every normal woman stirs the instinct of motherhood, the thing over which men sing epic songs, of which they paint gripping portraits, and yet most men alone indulge in smutty sex stories, treat their wives shabbily and fail to see any reason why woman should have the ballot.

But he who stops in his masculine conceit long enough to give a moment's thought to the matter, must realize that we can never have a free race, never a healthy, clean-minded race of men and women until woman is free, economically as well as politically. Water never rises above its source, and the race can progress only as fast as its mothers progress.

Woman's sphere and woman's work may be in the home, but the home is as wide as the world today, and her influence as deep as life itself, which springs from her. There is no subject which in anw affects her children—education, pure food, clean streets, leisure for life—in which she is not quite as deeply interested as any strutting lord of creation.

The fullnes of life, the joy of labor and love and leisure shall be the heritage of the whole race when, as Robert Blatchford dreams, the time comes—

"Yes. Mother is politics, religion, drill sergeant, elementary school and many much better things, all rolled into one."

MRS. LIBBY MAC DONALD, a short time ago in Chicago, delivered an address on the subject of "Race Suicide" and her ideas will certainly not harmonize with that blustering braggart known as "Teddy, the Terror."

The following extracts taken from the address of Mrs. Mac Donald shows that she is a woman of advanced thought and has a broad grasp of the economic problem.

"The butchers want more children to feed cannon; both the army and the navy chiefs are clamoring for more; the great industrial barons want more children born to keep up the full quota in the ranks of the army of the unemployed, thereby maintaining competition among the laborers and thus keeping wages at a minimum.

"Why should proletarian women continue to breed victims, whose only inheritance will be toil and misery? The French women understand the situation and the great decrease in the birth rate in France is spreading a well founded alarm among the heartless exploiters.

"There is no race suicide in refusing to bear children. There is no crime in this refusal, as hireling priests are instructed by their capitalistic employers to preach. The crime is on the other side. It consists in adding to and augmenting the amount of human suffering already existing by bearing more children to suffer.

"Women suffragists are mothers, and mothers do not believe in that absurd system of militarism which demands that men die for their country. We want our men to live for their country, and until the system is abolished every wife should refuse to bear progeny.

"The Boy Scout movement is the latest crime against women that the state has perpetuated.

"Refuse to bear another child until you are assured that that child will not be sacrificed upon an altar of bloody war. Race suicide rather than furnish food for the cannon's insatiable mouth!"

The above sentiments expressed by Mrs. Mac Donald will receive the hearty approval of every woman who is not blind to the infamies of an economic system that places profit above human flesh.

The gentler sex have it within their power to declare a strike against furnishing material for the battle-field.

EUGENE V DEBS penned the following in honor of Woman's Day, February 23rd, 1913:

"Had I at my command the fabled horn of Gabriel, whose blast is to summon earth's dead on resurrection morn, I would be tempted to mount high Olympus, crown this hour and proclaim to all the world the emancipation of womankind.

"Until that hour strikes, in which the womanhood of the world is freed from economic and political slavery, this earth can never know the meaning of liberty.

"In its final analysis, every burden, every wrong, every injustice of our so-called civilization rests at last its crushing weight upon the womanhood of the world.

"For many centuries this condition has obtained. Man has been born of woman enslaved, and he has, in turn, suffered enslavement.

"The most glorious feature of the present world-wide revolution and its most potent feature for the weal of mankind is the millions upon millions of women who have bravely and boldly shattered the social and economic shackles of the ages and who are inviting their sisters of every state and clime to join with them in demanding their freedom and enfranchisement.

"With the power and responsibility of the ballot will come a mental awakening such as the womanhood of the world has never known.

"Intelligent consideration and discussion of the mighty problems of this age will become a part of the mental life of every man and woman to the great and permanent profit of the race.

"Once unlock the fetters that for countless ages have cramped and warped and starved the soul of woman and you have opened the very doors of heaven.

"The political enfranchisement and the economic freedom of women means the birth of a race of freemen.

"No event in the upward, onward, Godward course of the race was ever fraught with such portentious meaning as is the emancipation of the womanhood of the world.

"And the Socialists of the world welcome their sisters in revolt. With souls aflame and hearts afire we face the rosy dawn of a new civilization. and we welcome woman's emancipation as the harbinger of the glad new day.

THE FOLLOWING appeared recently in a dispatch of the daily press and had for its object the laudation of President Wilson as a courteous gentleman:

"Princeton, N. J., Feb. 22—Although within the next ten days he will become the first citizen of the land, with $25,000 a year to spend for traveling expenses, President-elect Woodrow Wilson today put in two hours rubbing shoulders with a chrowd of the plainest citizens, and, incidently, bearing his share of the discomfort of travel on an overloaded train of day coaches that stopped at every way station between New York and Princeton, whither he was journeying.

"I wish you would tell the man who manages this road," said the president-elect to the conductor, who took his ticket, "that it is very badly managed."

Governor Wilson started for Princeton on the Pennsylvania train that left New York at 12:12 p. m. The coaches were packed so the governor and his secret service guard went into the smoker, where a seat was found for him. His presence in the smoke-filled car caused animated curiosity, but as he had to change trains at Newark he didn't mind the attention he attracted or the short ride in the bad air.

"But the next train was more crowded. Governor Wilson stood in the aisle of a day coach with men, women and children packed about him. A seat was out of the question:

At Elizabeth the crowd thinned slightly and the president-eleet got a seat beside a stranger. The train had hardly started when a little boy stepped up to him and said:

"I want to shake hands with the president-elect."

Governor Wilson smiled, shook hands and said:

"How old are you, my boy."

The boy said he was 6, and just then the governor observed the child's mother. who was standing in the aisle. Rising quickly, he removed his hat and said:

"Take my seat madam."

She protested, but Governor Wilson insisted and again had to stand in the crowded aisle until more passengers got off and a seat became vacant."

The above statements in the dispatch contained in the daily press, is complimentary to President Wilson, but in the act of the president of the United States giving his seat to a mother, he did nothing more than is done by thousands of men every day whose chivalry towards the gentler sex finds no place in the columns of our daily journals.

The fact that Woodrow Wilson has been selected as the "first citizen of the land" does not exempt him from according to woman that deference which every true gentleman pays to "the hand that rocks the cradle."

President Wilson in tendering his seat to a mother and standing in a crowded railway coach, merely performed an act of courtesy that is typical of every man, who has not forgotten the respect that is due to womanhood.

J. STITT WILSON, the Socialist mayor of Berkeley, California, recently delivered an address at Los Angeles, taking for his subject: "Jesus, the Carpenter, Hero of the Common People." The following extracts are taken from Wilson's address to show that the mayor of Berkeley, California, is cognizant of the fact that many ministers of the Gospel who pretend to follow in the footsteps of the Carpenter, are glaring frauds and worship at the shrine of Mammon:

"His whole life shows His devotion to the common people, and His antagonism to the ruling classes, and these later were responsible for His mock trial and ignominious death.

"There have always been at least two distinct classes in the civilization of the world. We find these classes in patricians and plebians, lords and serfs, masters and slaves, and in our own day in the capitalist class and the working class. So it was in the day of Jesus. And non adequate or rational interpretation can be given to the place of Jesus in history or the significance of His teaching that ignores the historical setting of His career.

"When over and over again in history, we find religious bodies that bear His name, championing the cause of the mighty, defending the interests of the powerful, silent in the presence of great social wrongs that beat and bruise the people, it is time to repeat with tremenduous emphasis the simple truth that any religion or so-called gospel that does not espouse the cause of the people against social injustice cannot know God, but taketh His name in vain, and denies the spirit of the great Brother of Men.

"The Socialist wants life for the people; abundant life; complete life. The Socialist wants a social condition that our minds will have a chance to expand and develop, and find joyous expression in a condition that will let the love for man find a daily outlet in the actual affairs of our life, instead of a mere profession of love one day in the week.

"Somehow or other, the Socialist movement is at this very moment glorifying and exalting human life as no movement has ever done since the appearance of Jesus. It does not say: "God bless the High and Mighty,' it say: 'Bless and free the Sweated Woman, the toil-broken masses.'

" 'Give us this day our daily bread;' the Testament say. Indeed, the Socialist movement scarcely is so bold. It prays, 'Give us the chance to earn our daily bread, and save us from exploitation at the hands of the capitalist class, when we have produced that bread '

"When I think of religious teachers and religious bodies, and members of churches, using that sacred name and memory with which to bolster up and make honorable and just the brutal, greedy, mammon-worshipping capitalism, a pain seizes my heart, I feel tears in my heart too deep to shed, for Jesus of Nazareth belongs not to the titled and robed and reverened defenders of capitalism but to the tired, wounded, bleeding and struggling common people, whose cause he championed, whose lives he loved, and for whose freedom he died."

FOUR HUNDRED MEN have declared a strike on the Brittania mines, British Columbia. The B. C. Federationist gives the following report of the strike:

"All the miners, carpenters and loggers are out on strike from Britannia mines. For some time previous to last summer there was friction between the official of the Britannia mines and the miners. The trouble arose because the mine officials objected to the miners being organized, and because they refused to allow the secretary of the miners to visit the men during the men's time. Finally matters reached a climax and a board of arbitration was appointed by the minister of labor under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. The board reported in favor of the men, but the company refused to accept the finding of the board, and from then on the miners' secretary was not allowed to visit them because the company would not allow him to go on their property.

"Things looked very black for the miners, but anyone who knows anything of the history of the Western Federation of Miners will realize that matters must be very bad indeed if they give up a fight. After the setback of last summer, the miners kept their organization together in secret, and finally, at 4 o'clock on Christmas morning last, they held a meeting and elected officers, among them being Kerr McNeil, who was chosen as secretary. The company learned of their action and trouble again began to brew. Finally, matters again came to a head, and last Tuesday night, Mr. Wilie, the superintendent, told McNeil that his services were no longer required. The men held a special meeting at night. Those who were supposed to go on at 7 p. m. asked permission to lay off until 8 p. m. in order that they might attend the meeting, but they were told that if they did not go on shift they would be fired. The 7 o'clock shift went to the meeting. A committee was appointed to visit Mr. Wilie and ask why McNeil was fired. Wilie replied that he could fire whom he liked, and refused to reinstate McNeil. The committee reported back, and on a vote being taken the miners decided unanimously to strike. The result is that about 400 men quit work, including the carpenters, and the loggers who cut the timber for props, etc., in the mines.

"A preliminary meeting of the striking miners from Britannia was held last Thursday afternoon in the Labor Temple, Vancouver. About 150 men were present, which was a good attendance, considering that the meeting had been hurriedly called.

Mr. C. Pattinson of the United Mine Workers of America was present from Nanaimo, and upon being asked to address the meeting, did so. He reviewed the circumstances which had led up to the coal miners' strike which, he said, was for recognition of the union and the right to organize, a protest against discrimination and for better working conditions.

"He further stated that the coal miners were just as firm as ever, after five and a half months' strike.

"Arrangements were made to spread a knowledge of the strike amongst the men who might otherwise be persuaded to go to work at Britannia, and to inform labor bodies in surrounding cities of the situation.

"The headquarters of the miners are at room 216, Labor Temple, Vancouver, and all members should report there, both to give and receive the latest information. The secretary will be on duty."

THE FOLLOWING appeared in the local columns of a Denver daily journal last week, and demonstrates that after 1900 years of Christianity, we are about as brutal as tht savage who lays no claim to civilization:

"Three hundred women, many thinly clad, left the restricted district on Market street yesterday in compliance with the order of Mayor Arnold and the fire and police board. The edict, published Saturday night, directed that Denver's redlight district be permanently closed and that all women of Market street houses leave that section of the city at once.

"Many of the women begged the police pitifully to be permitted to stay in their abodes until they were able to obtain money enough to enable them to leave the city or to hire rooms in uptown lodging houses. Only a few had sufficient clothing to protect them from the cold.

"One girl, scarcely more than 18 years old, who has been to the county hospital for the past month, was driven from the 'crib' in which she lived, wearing bedroom slippers and a dress of cotton. She went to a cheap lodging house on Larimer street, where hundreds of other women were forced to go. Several of the women were unable to pay the expressmen who hauled their trunks to other parts of town.

"The evacuation attracted a crowd of several hundred to the district, who viewed the general exodus with evident interest. A feature of the closing was the generosity of a truckman, who donated his services all day to the unfortunate women, and carted their baggage to the uptown rooming houses free of cost.

" 'One of the women came to me and asked for money to rent a room,' said a patrolman, who walks a beat near the district. 'The women are all down and out. It was one of the most pitiful sights I ever saw.'

"Not all of the women waited until yesterday to be forced from their quarters. Some left the district Saturday night, when the closing order became known. Those who remained were the poorest of the district's residents.

"In many instances the girls cried when they were told that the order was final and that they must leave the street by night."

The above statement of facts in a Denver journal is not creditable to the people of any city.

The abolition of the "redlight" district was demanded by what is known as the "Christian Citizenship Union" of Denver. This so-called "Union" of Christians is made up of bigoted maniacs and feverish fanatics, who are never enjoying happiness unless they are throwing brick-bats at poor, unfortunate wretches. Christ, whom they pretend to follow, would never have demanded that "Mary Magdalenes" be driven out of their hovels into the cold of a wintry night.

The "Christian Citizenship Union" has been dominated by a few imported evangelists from Chicago, whose shricks against moral malaria for the past few months, has unbalanced the mentality of other psalm-singing freaks, who have but little conception of the cause that drive women to dens of shame.

Were the members of this so-called "Christian Citizenship Union" permeated with the spirit of real, genuine Christianity, they would have made some provision for the social outcasts, but no, these "Holier than thou" people left the evicted wretches "to paddle their own canoe" as best they could. The Burlington Railroad Company is about to be granted a revocable permit to build its tracks through the "redlight" district, and it may be, that some of the evangelists are in the employ of the Burlington to make tenantless all property in the "bad lands" so that a railroad company may become the beneficiary in purchasing property at depreciated values. "Nuf ced."

The Law of Human Brotherhood

(By W. E. G.)

EVERYWHERE one is oppressed with the mania for reform, which largely finds its expression in wordy resolutions, and the enactment of laws, freakish, foolish, childish and otherwise that fail to cure.

We have laws innumerable to regulate most every action and phase of life, their enforcement is about as productive of desired results as Don Quixote's assault on windmills.

For the most they go no deeper than to remove effects of causes which are continuously at work producing more effects, hence more fool laws, and so on ad infinitum.

We are governed by Universal Law, which we as individuals, as a people, or race cannot ignore without causing effects which can only be removed by living conformably to the law.

Nature is kind and beneficient and in no hurry, "serenity in action tranquility in motion" mark all her operations from the unfoldment of a flower, the growth of a man, or the development of a race.

The law of gravity, like all her laws is so continuous in its operation that we are almost unconcious of it.

Things are continually dropping out of our hands, and falling to the earth, a knife, a fork or coin eludes our grasp, or the elusive collar button rolls under the bed.

Many, many times a day do each and every one of us unconsciously observe the ceaseless operation of this law of gravity. Wouldn't it be farcical if we were to advocate laws prohibiting collar buttons from rolling under the bed, or coins from falling to the floor, and furthermore tax ourselves to maintain salaried officials for their enforcement? Yet this is on a par with most of our reform legislation.

You might seemingly defy the law of gravitation by holding a feather above your head, but only for a moment of time, the hand that holds the feather must come down in obediance to law.

As the law of gravity could for a time be defied by holding up a feather, so the law of social oneness has been ignored and the race through selfish ways of life built up an artificial civilization which is about to fall through its own cumulative ponderosity. As the feather ultimately falls to the earth, so we as a race will have to come finally, through knowledge, to a realization of the great Universal Law of oneness and human solidarity.

We have revolution and uprising in every part of the earth; the progress of days in every civilized country is marked by violence; in the midst of abundance we have dire poverty. All of our so-called human institutions for the care of the poor, the insane, the halt and the blind; our systems of police and espionage, our armies and navies are but evidences of something fundamentally wrong in man's world. The earth was made for man's habitation, and not for merchandise for a few.

Stop! Consider, think it over.

You and I were born into this world, bountiful to prodigality, was there one spot in the remotest part of the inhabitable earth where we could say here will we work and laugh and live? No! Human greed has fenced it round with ownership. Just lift up your eyes and see how very little of the earth is really used, and how productive that little is, we deny each other access to the remainder and spend our lives in paying each other rent for the privilege of living upon it.

What is all this higher cost of living but added rent; added on every bit of food, raiment and shelter.

In America we have millions of manless acres and hordes of landless men; we have a tremendous industrialism based upon a wrong principle of individual profit instead of service to all.

It is tragic that men barter the soil of earth for gain and operate all industry for profit, thus bringing disaster to millions, who, deprived of their birthright to live as men with homes and as useful members of society, become the very menace of the social order, competing with each other for an intermittent wage, and forced as workers, out of the circle of home builders, into the army of the non-attached whose unnatural,, abnormal manner of life, create the environment fertile for prostitution, vice and crime.

Everything in our world operates through the law of cause and effect. Just now the forces of reform in every large city are trying to stamp out prostitution, which is simply the effect of wrong living made possible through unnatural conditions that have their roots in the ignorance that persists in ignoring the great Universal Law of Human Brotherhood which we are not living, and until we do, the evils will increase. There is an intimate relation between the real estate signs that mark the lots, plats and acres owned but unused land that one sees on every hand (nourishing weeds instead of men) and the slums of our cities with their dens filled with the women of shame. There is an intimate relation between the violence and poverty that stalks over man's world and the great sky scrapers and great factories where all industry is directed and operated for profit of the few.

Man was made for BROTHERHOOD and not for EXPLOITATION. There is the law of desire for companionship, fellowship and cooperative brotherhood which is as ceaselessly operative as the law of gravity. No fact in life stands out more clearly than this need of social brotherhood.

Men cannot live alone.

In our mutual work for bread and search for happiness we are compelled to co-operate; in our failure, through greed and selfishness to live conformably to the great law of our being can be traced all of the social evils from which we suffer.

No external application of rules, regulations or laws will ever cure these evils; understanding of and conformity to this fundmental law of HUMAN BROTHERHOOD is the only remedy.

The General Strike

XII. THE INTERNATIONAL POSITION.

By Robert Hunter.

A DELEGATE to the International Socialist Congress at Amsterdam in 1904 records the fact that the Congress took no interest whatever in the discussion of the General Strike. All the leaders were in special committee formulating a resolution on the compromising tactics of some of the French Socialists. Millerand had entered the French Cabinet, and that real departure from political class action entirely overshadowed the utopian proposition of the General Strike. When some one urged that the committee take a recess from its special work to deal with the important matters before the Congress, Bebel's patience, it is said, gave way. "Nonsense!" he said, "Trifles! All Trifles! A rump (Congress)can attend to all that! This here is the real issue!"

This fairly expresses the attitude taken by the chief Socialists of Europe as well as the attitude of the International Congress on the subject of the General Strike. So far as I can discover those who attend the International Trade Union Conferences have not thought the matter worthy of even a moment's discussion, while the International Socialist Congresses have always treated the discussion of the General Strike with some disdain.

At Paris, in 1889, a resolution in favor of the General Strike was defeated after having been briefly combatted by Liebknecht. The latter declared the General Strike impossible because to his mind the working class would never attain a sufficiently powerful cohesion, organization and unity. The Congress of Brussels in 1891 did not discuss the matter, but limited itself to voting a motion upon strikes in general, declaring them "two-edged swords." The Congress at Zurich in 1893 did not take up a resolution, which was voted in committee, urging the political and economic organization of the working class in order to utilize if possible the General Strike. At London in 1896 the Congress voted the following resolution:

"The Congress considers strikes and boycotts are necessary weapons to attain the objects of Trade Unions. What is immediately essential is the thorough organization of the working class; as the successful management of a strike depends on the strength of its organization."

A minority report was brought into that Congress urging that the workers make a study of the important question of the General Strike and that it be considered at the next Congress. Guerard, a French Trade Unionist, declared: "On behalf of the minority I wish to protest against the action of the majority on the Economic Commission, who have not once allowed any discussion on the question of a General Strike, although the French workers attach the greatest importance to this question. We know it is now too late to discuss it in this Congress but the matter ought to be discussed later. The General Strike is the most revolutionary weapon we have. Will the Congress at least recommend the workers everywhere to study the details of the question until the next International Congress so that at the next Congress they may be in a position to come to a definite resolution on the General Strike?" Despite this appeal, the Congress declined to adopt the minority report evidently of the utter impossibility of an International General Strike.

At Amsterdam, in 1904, the discussion came up upon a resolution presented by the Socialists of Holland. A special committee was therefore formed to prepare a resolution and to present it to the entire Congress. The Hollanders, the Belgians and the Germans stated in the committee that the General Strike, if one understands by that the stoppage of all work at a given moment, is impossible, although they were all of the opinion that a strike which extended itself to include several crafts could, in certain circumstances, gain some political end or prevent some reactionary assaults upon the rights of the workers. The French alone were vigorous in their support of the General Strike, and Briand, the master-orator and self-styled father of the General Strike, came in person to capture the Congress. Briand, however, appears to have made little impression, and finally the committee recommended to the Congress a resolution, part of which follows:

"Whereas it is desirable that Socialists declare themselves upon the General Strike,

"Whereas the conditions necessary for the success of an extensive strike are strong organizations and the voluntary discipline of the workers, the International Socialist Congress declares:

"That the General Strike, if one understands by that 'the complete stoppage of all work at a given moment,' is impracticable,because such a strike would render the existence of the proletariat, as of every one else, impossible."

This definite conclusion of the Congress did not, however, prevent it from expressing the belief that the General Strike might in time become a very powerful weapon in the hands of the workers. But the Congress did not accept the belief that "the emancipation of the working class could be the result of any sudden effort." It, therefore, warned "the workers not to let themselves be influenced by the propaganda of the General Strike of which the Anarchists make use to deter the workers from the real and incessant struggle—that is to say, from political, trade union, and co-operative action;

"And invites the workers to augment their power and to strengthen their unity in developing their class organizations, as upon these conditions will depend the success of the political strike, if this, one day, should be found necessary and useful."

The above resolution states the position of the majority of those who discussed the question. Briand, of France, and Dr. Friedeberg, of Germany, were the chief advocates of the General Strike. The latter had issued a phamplet on the subject which had been distributed at the Congress, but it was shown that the doctor was quite alone among the Germans in the advocacy of this proposition. Despite the fact that few, if any, speeches were made against Briand and Friedeberg, the Congress overwhelmingly voted the Holland resolution.

A short time before the Amsterdam Congress, the French Socialists had held their Congress at Lille. The General Strike was there discussed at length. Lafargue, Guesde, Vaillant, Delory and others made brilliant speeches. "A resolution in favor of the General Strike," declared Guesde, "would not augment the influence of the party among the working class. It would destroy it, as it would be the condemnation of political action." "Who are the advocates of the General Strike?" asked Lafargue. "They are Briand and Pelloutier, who have sought to found a party in opposition to the Socialist party:"

Some of the French delegates, seeking to gain favor for the idea, urged that no matter how foolish the General Strike is, the workers had been fascinated by the idea, and it would be the part of wisdom for the Socialists to indorse it. Osmin answered this argument by saying: "Henry IV., wishing to captivate Paris, said 'Paris is well worth a Mass,' and he turned Catholic. There are people here who wish to captivate some Paris workers and so they say, 'Paris is well worth a General Strike Resolution.'" Chauvin touched on the same question when he said: "If there were only some strong Trades Unions in Paris that would be the end of the General Strike agitation." "It is a dream," said Guesde; "it is unbelievable that millions of workers should be ready to die of hunger for their class, when for their class they will not even trouble to vote."

Immediately after the Congress at Amsterdam the Germans held their Congress at Bremen. Under the influence of Friedeberg, a few Socialists had demanded that the question of the General Strike be discussed at the next National Congress. Very little time was given to the discussion of this resolution, but Karl Liebknecht, who believes that the General Strike may be useful at times as a political weapon, utterly demolished the Anarchist conception of the General Strike.

"I separate myself from the ideas of Comrade Friedeberg with all possible energy. His ideas run foul of the most fundamental interests of the party. They are in opposition to everything the party has done up to this moment. Anarchy is the logical consequence of Friedeberg's ideas. The General Strike understood in this manner deserves the words of Auer: 'General Strike; general helplessness.'"

It is, of course, of little importance to most Americans what the decisions of Europe may be on any matter. And certainly no international decision should be the means of prejudicing our minds against any weapon that may prove of value to the working class. It should, however, be made known to Americans that nowhere else in the world can one obtain so accurately the opinion of the working class upon any subject as at the International Socialist Congresses. The National Socialist parties always restrain themselves from entering upon the field covered by the trade union organizations. But at present the trade unions have no international congress and millions of trade unionists are directly represented at the International Socialist Congresses. The resolution above given is, therefore, not only the opinion of "political" Socialists, but also the opinion of the overwhelming mass of trade unionists.

It is to be regretted that such organs as the International Socialist Review and such Socialists as are affiliated with the I. W. W. constantly misstate the position of the international movement. They advocate direct action, including the general strike and sabotage, claiming at all times that they represent the opinion of the international movement. As a matter of fact, they represent tactics which have been condemned so many times in Europe that it is utterly impossible even to record the instances. Direct action has never appeared in the movement as a companion of political action. It has invariably presented itself as a rival, fundamentally antagonistic to political action. Whether advocated by Bakunin, Nieuwenhuis, Merlino and other anarchists, or by the distinguished doctors Friedeberg, Lagardelle, and Sorel, the theorists of French syndicalism, direct action has invariably been presented as antagonistic to political action.

"The worker who turns away from the party to become a convert to the general strike, thinks that he has become more revolutionary," says Guesde, "and they ask us to strengthen with our own hands this fantasy, to destroy our own work, and to undermine our own party. I cannot conceive of it."

The Legislature of Arizona

THE GENTLEMEN who have been honored as lawmakers of Arizona are in session, and as usual, there is manifested considerable difference of opinion as to what measures are most conducive to advance the interests of the newly admitted state.

That the Legislature of Arizona has among its numbers devoted disciples of corporations and employers of labor, cannot be doubted for a moment, when such a bill as the following passed the Senate of Arizona:

"An Act for the employment of prisoners in jails.

"Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona:

"Section 1. Whenever any able-bodied male person is confined in the county jail of any county or the jail of any town or city, having been convicted of a misdemeanor or of the violation of an ordinance of such town or city and being confined in punishment therefor, the sheriff of such county or the marshal or chief of police of such town or city shall, when possible, compel such person to work at hard labor eight hours of every working day; provided, however, that the provision of the sections shall not apply to any cases where there are less than three persons so confined in jail or jails at any one time.

Sec. 2. Whenever any able-bodied person is so confined in the county jail, having been convicted of the non-support of his wife or minor children, the county shall pay toward the support of such wife or minor children not less than fifty cents nor more than one dollar per day for each day such person shall so work, provided that such wife or minor children would otherwise be a public charge.

"See 3. All Acts and parts of Acts in conflict with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed.

The above measure is a vicious act, and could only be drafted and adopted by men who look upon the working class with contempt.

Laboring men are about the only people who are sentenced to jail, as the upper strata of society is generally so fortified by bank accounts that wealth is seldom found in prison.

The above measure was drafted and passed by the State Senate of Arizona for no other purpose, save to furnish hungry employers with cheap labor.

The second paragraph of the bill was inserted, to hide to some extent, the infamy of the first paragraph. The second paragraph was inserted in order that a deserted wife struggling to support herself, through neglect of a callous husband, would become a pathetic picture for the law-makers to contemplate, and through sympathy for impoverished wives and children, it was presumed that the members of the Senate would lose sight of the real intent of the bill.

Under this act strikers could be arrested and sentenced to jail, and as soon as they became inmates of a prison, they were eligible victims for greedy contractors.

The act, however, which passed the Senate of Arizona met its death in the house, and its death was brought about by the labor committee selected by the labor organizations of Arizona, which committee is doing splendid service for the labor movement of the State.

The following bills introduced in the Arizona legislature show that the labor movement is awake to the interests of the working class, and though both bills will meet the opposition of the corporate interests, yet, the labor committee entertains strong hopes that both measures will receive favorable consideration.

AN ACT.

Defining and prohibiting blacklisting and unlawful interference with laborers, and providing for the punishment thereof and the recovery of damages therefor and defining what shall be accepted as evidence in blacklist cases.

"Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona:

Sec. 1. This Act shall be known as the Arizona Blacklist Law

Sec. 2. A blacklist is hereby defined and declared to be any understanding or agreement whereby the names of any person or persons, lists of names, description or other means of identification shall be spoken, written, printed or implied for the purpose of being communicated or transmitted between two or more employers of labor, their bosses, foreman, superintendents, managers, officers or other agents whereby the laborer is prevented or prohibited from engaging in a useful occupation. Any understanding or agreement between employers, their bosses, foremen, superintendents, managers, officers or other agents, whether written or verbal, and it will make no difference whether the employers, their bosses, foremen, superintendents, managers, officers or other agents act individually or for some company, corporation, syndicate, partnership or society and it will make no difference whether they are employed or acting as agents of one and the same or of different companies, corporations, syndicates, partnerships or societies, will come within the meaning of this Act.

Sec. 3. Any employer, boss superintendent, manager, officer or other agent of any company, corporation, syndicate, partnership or society who shall allow, command or persuade any person to give a photograph or to fill out any written or printed form or to make any verbal statements or any other method or means of identification as to who his or her former employer was, or any employer, boss, superintendent, manager, officer or other agent who shall discharge any person or persons on account of his or her affiliation with or membership in any corporation, organization or society, or because of former discharge of or because of any blacklist of any former employer, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not more than one year, and shall be liable in damages to any person or persons injured by such violation to the amount of not less than one thousand (1,000.00) dollars, to be recovered by civil action.

Sec. 4. The violation of any of the provisions of this Act shall be taken as prima facie evidence of a blacklist.

Sec. 5. Each individual violation of the provisions of this Act shall constitute a separate offense; that is, this section shall be taken to mean that any individual, company, corporation, syndicate, partnership or society who shall blacklist more than one person is guilty of a separate and distinct violation of the provisions of this Act for each and every person so blacklisted.

Sec. 6. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed.

AN ACT.

To prescribe a minimum wage in hazardous mining operations, and to provide for the punishment of persons violating its provisions.

"Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona:

Sec. 1. That all underground work, all work in open pits and open cuts, all work in operating smelters, reduction works, stamp mills, concentrating mills, chlorinating processes, mine saw mills, cyanide processes, and all other work wherein machinery, powder or dynamite is used or employed under or above ground, in the mining industry, is hereby declared to be hazardous.

Sec. 2. That the minimum wage to be paid to all persons employed in any hazardous work as hereinbefore defined is and shall be four ($4.00) dollars per day.

Sec. 3. That any corporation, partnership, company, association, firm or person engaged in mining, and employing any person or persons in any hazardous work as such work is hereby defined, and every boss, foreman, superintendent, manager, agent, or other officer or representative of such corporation or person, who shall contract to pay or pay less wages than four ($4.00) dollars per day to any person for doing or engaging in any hazardous work as hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, the jury to fix the punishment in all cases of trial by jury; otherwise such punishment is to be in the discretion of the court; and each day during or for which such violation continues or such wages less than four ($4.00) dollars per day is contracted or paid and each individual paid less than four ($4.00) dollars per day, shall constitute a separate offence

Sec. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed.

An Editorial from the Metropolitan Magazine

THE MOST SERIOUS difficulty that The Metropolitan Magazine has had to contend with in its editorial policy is the almost incorrigible ignorance of the general public on the subject of Socialism. We hope we have done something in the last six months to dispel that ignoranee. Yet we know that our own small efforts are constantly nullified by the strenuous and misleading attacks of the capitalist press all over the country. A month or two ago Colonel Roosevelt was shot by a lunatic. The newspapers stated as a matter of course that the man was a Socialist. Later on they were forced for the most part to retract this falsehood. But the impression was already created; and a good many of the most ignorant of the editorial writers left their readers to suppose that if the poor wretch was not a Socialist he ought to have been; he was certainly, as the New York Times put it, an anarchist, which was practically the same thing. A few weeks later came the election, and the Socialist party doubled its vote. Such a result was the more astonishing because the campaign of Colonel Roosevelt appealed to the most progressive element in the country and did undoubtedly win over thousands of those who in other circumstances might have voted the Socialist ticket. The effect on the press has been to make it misrepresent the aims of Socialism more violently than ever.

Socialism a Power for Peace.

When leading newspapers publish editorials which any intelligent schoolboy would be ashamed to write, you cannot blame the average citizen, who is generally too busy to think for himself, if he swallows a good deal of the rubbish as gospel truth. It is fortunate, therefore, when events occur which enable us to point out that Socialism is the very antithesis of anarchy; that the Socialist thinker so far from being a destructive, dynamiting force, is the most peaceful, most practical, most civilizing agent in the world today. For the last two months Europe has been hovering on the brink of war. The correspondents of the great dailies have described the statesmen of the leading powers as struggling impotently to avert the terrible disaster. Nearly everyone has taken the danger for granted. And yet no one can explain for the life of him what there is for the great nations to fight about. We all profess to regard war as a relic of barbarism, yet the leading statesmen of Europe and the leading journalists of two hemispheres regard it as quite natural and inevitable that France and Germany and Austria and Russia should fly at one another's throats just because a little conflagration has started in the Balkans. The Socialists are the only people in Europe who see the utter absurdity of the whole situation, and they are the only people who take practical measures to prevent war. They hold a meeting in Switzerland and declare that they will not allow the powers to fight. And they are strong enough today to make war among the great nations almost impossible. In France and England and Germany Socialism dominates organized labor. And labor can prevent war by paralyzing the nations that threaten hostilities. In Europe the power of labor is a recognized facto in the life of the nation. And in the long run labor, when thoroughly organized, must be all powerful. Socialism has won over labor in Europe, and Socialism is opposed to war; and therefore war among the great powers will become an impossibility. While the Carnegies are talking, the Socialists are acting. What the trained diplomats are unable to accomplish, Socialism can and will accomplish in a very short time. The so-called upper classes of England and Germany, backed by the capitalist press of both countries, have done their best to make an Anglo-German war inevitable. They have failed so far to accomplish a war, and they will fail in the future, because the Socialists will not permit a war. If war became really imminent, the Socialists would call a general strike in both countries, and the armies could not stir a foot. For the first time in the world's history, a peace movement has become practical; and Socialism has made it practical.

Rational Aims and Practical Remedies.

In America, Socialism is still very far from dominating organized labor; but every day the two movements are coming closer together. If our Socialism had reached the point which it has reached in Europe, there would have been none of the dynamite outrages which have recently been exposed to view and have thrown distressing discredit on the labor element in this country. What the average citizen has to realize, and the sooner he realizes it the better, is that labor is a huge power which is just shaking itself free from its chains. It is composed of many elements, some of which are extremely dangerous to the peace of the community. Our future prosperity and happiness depend largely on the actions of this new and tremendous factor. The problems are not insoluble, but they are full of difficulty. The main object of the Socialist party may be described as the desire to guide the workers in their fight for better conditions, and to provide remedies which will give them what they must have without a bloody revolution. Socialism, so far from being a menace, is the one hopeful and constructive factor on which we shall all have to rely more and more in future. And there can be no greater harm done to the country at large than is done by the ignorant writers in the press who wantonly lead the public astray by pretending that the Socialist party is aiming at anarchy. The time indeed is not far distant when our business men will realize that the Socialist party is the one firm rock that stands against anarchy.

Another thing that the average citizen is slowly beginning to realize is that government ownership, which is a cardinal feature of Socialism, is far more practical than he has heretofore been willing to admit. There is a popular belief that government ownership necessarily means dirty politics and unlimited graft. That is because graft and politics are closely connected in the public mind. But the truth is that graft chiefly flourishes where private ownership of great industries has conflicted with public interests. It is precisely the great private businesses that have created graft on a large scale. The Harrimans and the Archbolds of the business world (to go back no farther than our own generation) have been the original sources of all great corruption. If Standard Oil and Union Pacific had been owned by the government, there would have been no room for the Penroses. The prime reason for graft is the fact that private owners of large enterprises desire to do things which the government of the people forbids; in order to do these things it is necessary to purchase the assistance of government officials who thereby betray the people. If the government itself owned these enterprises, there would be no need to bribe government officials. And as a matter of fact, nearly all government enterprises are carried on without much graft and with great efficiency. In our own United States the postoffice is perhaps the most efficient organization in the country. It is so efficient that one ceases to wonder at it. Compare the postoffice, which practically never fails in the matter of punctual service, with the privately-owned express companies which are guilty of constant delays and miscarriages, and you realize at once how greatly government management exceeds in efficiency private enterprise. It may be said without exaggeration that government ownership and management is in all countries the most successful kind of ownership and management. By far the most efficient service in Russia is the railroad service, which is entirely in the hands of the government. The Russian railroads may not be as well equipped as our own; but nothing in Russia is so highly developed as it is in America with the exception perhaps of music and painting and literature. In mechanical contrivances, Russia is a long way behind us; yet her railroads are much cheaper than ours and just as comfortable, and, except in the matter of speed, just as efficient as ours. Because they are owned by the government, they represent the highest state of efficiency in the country.

The Profits in Railroad Wrecks.

The fact is that, mechanically speaking, we are the most efficient people in the world, and yet we have not nearly reached the state of development which we might have attained if we were not hampered by selfish private interests. We boast of our railroad system; yet our railroads kill more people in the year than all the railroads of Europe put together. We have become so accustomed to the preventable accidents that we forget to realize how much they are to our discredit. Indeed, our railroad efficiency is largely a myth. Look at the New York, New Haven & Hartford system. There is one of the oldest roads in America, constructed at small expense, running through the most thickly populated district in the country, which nevertheless has produced the most appalling accidents in the last few years, caused or aggravated by careless methods and obsolete rolling stock. Casual outsiders complain that the high price of labor and government restrictions make it almost impossible to operate railroads at a profit. This is pure rubbish. In spite of bad management, and in spite of high cost of labor, the New Haven can and does earn more than ten per cent. on its real valuation today. But its earnings have been watered down, and its finances crippled by the purchase of competing trolley lines at double their true value. The private individuals who run the New Haven know little and care less about real railroading and real development. All they want to do is to establish a complete monopoly at ruinous cost; and they are not above destroying commerce in doing it.

Not the Man But the System.

It is inconceivable that New England could be worse off if the people, through their government, owned the New York, New Haven & Hartford and the Boston & Maine railroads. It is inconceivable that they would not be much better off. They would then run their own monopoly, and they would have only themselves to blame if trade were stifled and passengers were needlessly killed. And that is the only remedy for the present deplorable state of affairs. It is a waste of time to call Mr. Charles Mellen a crook. Probably he is no more a crook than any of us, whether we be capitalists or labor leaders. He is simply the product of his environment. He has been brought up in a stupid, inefficient school, and he conducts his business in a stupid, inefficient way. But the people of New England would profit very little by the removal of Mr. Mellen. The opportunity for an equally stupid man to do mischief would always be there. That is why what is popularly called muckraking is so futile. It is a mere waste of time to call individuals crooks. Generally they are not crooks at all. It is the system that is wrong. If you or I, dear reader, had been brought up in the game as Mr. Mellen has been and were given his opportunities, we might act very much as he has done And there will always be Mellens as long as the railroad business is left to irresponsible individuals. When the average citizen maintains that the proper way to get railroad efficiency is to leave the roads in the hands of private corporations which are dominated by the banking interests, just ask him to pause awhile and consider the Erie road and the New York, New Haven & Hartford.

Information wanted of Mike Harrington, who transferred to Bingham Miners' Union No. 67 February 11, 1911, from Round Mountain, Nevada. Last heard of was in Mullan, Idaho, February 12, 1912. Address John Strasser, Box N, Bingham, Utah.

$25.00 REWARD.

A reward of $25.00 will be paid by Mrs. Linnie Lankford for information leading to the present address of her father, Duran Cheesman, who left Centerville, Iowa, about thirty-six years ago. He is now about 64 years of age, and it was rumored that a man answering his name resided in Idaho Springs, Colorado, a short time ago. Anyone knowing his present whereabouts will please write to George Duckworth, Centerville, Iowa. 4t

PSALM OF THE ARCH-ENEMY OF LABOR.

I am the avowed friend of labor; the solace of those who toil.

To the oppressed I say, "Partake of me. 'Forget your poverty and remember your misery no more.'"

I take the hard-earned dollars of the workers and give them nothing of value in return; the money given me yields only misery and wretchedness.

I claim to nourish the hungry, while I take the bread out of the mouths of their children.

I claim to satisfy the thirsty while I create an unquenchable thirst.

I claim to heal disease while I undermine the health of my victims.

I claim to stimulate the mind, while I dethrone the reason.

My slaves boast of their personal liberty, while the fetters with which I bind them grow constantly stronger.

Under my influence the loving husband and father may take the lives of those whom he holds dear; for I transform a kindly affectioned man into a very fiend.

All these things I do for the glory of the great god Profit, whom I serve continually.

I am the chief vassal of Profit. I am Alcohol.

THE CLASS WAR IN ONTARIO.

One of the successful weapons used by the workers in their industrial disputes with the capitalist class is the strike. In other words, we can see that to make the capitalist class yield to the demands of the workers, the strike is the weapon that shows them that the labor power of the workers produce the wealth of the world, and when they refuse to work no profits can be made.

Now let us turn to Ontario. Here we may see at first glance a serious war raging between the above classes. On the one hand are the poor workers, who own nothing but their labor power; on the other side are the idlers who enjoy the fruits of the labor of the workers.

The workers at the present time are forced to live on cheap food, wear poor clothing, and withstand a climate which reaches to 60 degrees below zero. And still they would feel that they were citizens; that they are sons and daughters of free and prosperous Canada, if they were allowed to continue their conflict without the interference of the powers of government in behalf of the kings of industry.

Warned by previous conflicts between labor and capital, that, to be successful in the struggle, it would be necessary to conduct the strike in the most peaceable manner; therefore in the conduct of the strike the most peaceable methods were adopted.

But what happened? The enmies of labor saw that if the strike is conducted in the manner in which the strikers are conducting it, it will end in success for the enemies of capital.

So they began their tactics of provocation. On December 2nd, the police shot into a peaceful parade of strikers, without the least reason for the police to use their guns. Next, thugs armed with police powers began to use all means to intimidate the strikers; arrests were made for simply walking the highways. Innocent men were hailed before the court by Thiele gunmen; their only crime was that they were working men and appeared to be strikers. Many of these men were held in jail without bail and finally liberated without a trial, or dismissed for lack of evidence against them. Some were forced to leave the country in desperation, some were forced to go to work by the "peace officers" with threats of long terms in prison if they refused; but if they would be good strike breakers they would be liberated.

Then came December 20th. The crowd was present as usual at the South Porcupine station on the arrival of the train. On this day no one was expecting anything unusual to happen, especially the strikers were careful so as not to give the police a pretext to call the gathering an unlawful assembly. However, the police did not need any pretext; they boarded the train and proceeded to throw off the traveling public who were going about their usual pursuits. Four men were beaten and arrested. Their crime consisted of being present at the station, and not understanding the English language. They were sentenced to six months' imprisonment at hard labor by Magistrate Thomas Torrence. These four victims have to suffer imprisonment for six months, not for any crime they committed, but as a warning to scare others, as the magistrate said when passing sentence upon them.

Oh, where are you, oh Justice? How long will we be treated in this vicious manner by men who are paid good salaries to watch that every one is protected in their rights?

Now let us turn to something else. On January 21st sentence was passed by the same magistrate on three men whose crime appears to be a violation of the "Industrial Disputes Investigation Act." These victims were Wm. Holowatsky, an organizer for the Western Federation of Miners, and Peter Cleary, a member of the local union convicted of inciting to go on strike, and fined $500 or three months in prison, and Percy Croft, convicted of going on strike, and sentenced to pay a fine of $50 or sixty days in prison. Their cases were appealed. Magistrate Torrence, willing to serve the master class against the workers was anxious to send them to jail at once. Perhaps three months in his majesty's boarding house would kill them. The united protest of the working class compelled the government to release these men on parole, pending the hearing of the appeal.

In conclusion, let me illustrate to all those whose thoughts and sympathies are with the working class, and who wish to prevent more drastic measures being taken to stop the awakened rebels of Porcupine in their demand for their rights: A strong protest is required, and the conditions demand that prompt action be taken if we wish to be treated like men, and not like chattel slaves.

A general strike in the mining industry of Ontario would be the best and most effective way to get the demand of thousands who are suffering, while the Canadian and American "Rockefellers" enjoy the fruits of their labor.

Let us act and act quickly. No law which brings us back to the days of chattel slavery should command the respect of fear of the working class. All laws are subject to change and should be changed when they prove unjust to the majority. The "Industrial Disputes Investigation Act," when put into operation, interferes with the liberty of the individual and of the organized working class.

Althought the act appears to be two-sided, appears to protect the capitalist and the wage slave, when we study its workings we see that it favors the rich against the poor. The "Lemieux Act" provides that those who declare a lockout, and those who go on strike without first giving thirty days' notice, are guilty of a breach of the law. Employers who declare or those who incite a lockout or go on strike, are subject to a fine of from $50 to $1,000; those who go on strike to a fine of $10 to $50 for each day or part of a day they are on strike. Now when we compare employers and employés, we come to the conclusion that even though the employers and the employés were equal before the law, the law is still severe on the working man, who may be fined such a heavy penalty that he must be put in jail for being unable to pay it. It is very easy for the employer to pay a fine when he exploits the workingman every day out of four-fifths of what he produces, so that the employer never is sent to jail; he never will know what prison life is.

The "Lemieux Act" simply gives the employer the opportunity to fill up his industry with new men, and discharge all those who are most active in a demand for better conditions. The act provides for thirty days' notice; this gives the capitalist an opportunity to break a strike before it is declared according to law.

Therefore we must apply the natural law, the law of self-preservation. the right to exist. When we see that our destinies are menaced, when we see the best opportunity to better our condition, the time and the place at which an industrial war would be to our advantage, is the time for us to make our fight, and not give the enemy time to prepare to conquer us.

Be courageous and loyal to your class interest ,so that your enemy must yield to your demands. Now is the time for action; do not wait until the enemy is armed against you with all the weapons at his command.

Action has to be taken, and must be applied soon if we wish to help the Porcupine miners in their struggle, which is one of the world-wide struggles of the working class.

PORCUPINE MINERS' UNION NO. 145, W. F. M.
PUBLICITY COMMITTEE.

REVIEW OF THE STRIKE SITUATION IN BINGHAM CANYON, UTAH.

Bingham Canyon, Utah, 1913.

On July 13, 1912, a meeting of Local No. 67, W. F. M., was held. This being the regular meeting, the members present discussed pro and con the industrial situation in and around the mines in the Bingham district, and finding said conditions were intolerable, decided to call a meeting of the membership for the purpose of devising plans and arranging a wage scale for future consideration.

Unfinished business July 27, 1912. At this meeting a wage scale committee consisting of the following brothers: Newton, White, Jacovich and Locke, was appointed.

August 10, 1912.—Ex-Board Member J. C. Lowney arrived from Denver and took charge of the meeting, and arranged for further meetings to be held at the Highland Boy mine, and also at Upper Bingham. There was at this time, also, a similar campaign being carried on amongst the various craft unions, the International Association of Machinists, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, the International Molders' Union of North America, the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Iron Ship Builders, the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen and Firemen, and the associated Union of Steam Shovelmen in the district (as a result of the deplorable industrial conditions), each having their investigating committee in the field also. All of the unions involved having their committees duly appointed by this time, it was found necessary to call a mass meeting of all concerned in order to arrange for a joint action, as it was shown this method would be much more effective in dealing with the mining companies involved. At the mass meeting that followed, this action was taken and the various joint committees were also appointed to act in the future. A scale of wages was presented by the committee in charge, demanding a flat increase of fifty cents per day over the prevailing scale of August, 1912, the price of copper being at this time close to eighteen cents per pound, which scale was agreed to and also adopted unanimously by the members with the insertion of recognition of their union, all the other unions having taken similar action, and at a joint committee meeting which followed later, it was decided to present to the management of the various corporations involved their joint ultimatum; this action being duly carried out, and as a result it developed that the various mining interests absolutely refused to countenance or to treat with organized labor of any kind, but that they would be willing to talk the matter over with a committee composed of their employés, this action being satisfactory to the organizations involved. It was next decided to approach their lordships as a committee of bona fide employés, but when they again appeared on the carpet for a further hearing, they were informed that as there was nothing in common between the two interests, and as their time was too valuable to be used up in entertaining labor agitators, the door closed at this juncture, thus ending any further attempt on the part of labor to further interview the muckworms of plutocracy. The joint committee reported their findings back to their respective organizations, and as a result a strike vote was taken and the ballots cast showed over nine to one in favor of a walkout. On September 17, 1912, a mass meeting was called for the purpose of taking final action, and also to decide on whatever date the walkout was to take place; there being present at this meeting also a number of eminent labor leaders; one of these, and not the least prominent in the movement, was our venerable president, Chas. H. Moyer, of W. F. M., who, in a masterly address, pointed out that in case this strike was finally decided on as a last resort, "that you men who will vote here tonight, and not myself, will be responsible; that on you, and you alone, depends the outcome of your action here tonight. In the event you finally decide by your ballots to strike, you may rest assured of the support of the W. F. M. and organized labor in general, both moral and financial," and after a few final remarks concluded by stating that if the enthusiasm and solidarity which is so apparent here this evening is any criterion, there can be no doubt as to the outcome and that victory full and complete would surely crown our efforts in this controversy.

At this juncture a motion was placed before the body that a strike be declared to take effect on the following morning (September 8), at 8 a. m. Motion carried unanimously. Al call for a rising vote was also adopted, and when all those who were in favor of the motion were requested by the chairman to rise to their feet, out of more than 1,200 members present not one remained in his seat. This important matter being disposed of, there simply remained the carrying out of the plans pursuant to said action, and as soon as the indicator pointed to the hour prescribed, every industrial gun in the strike zone was at a standstill, spiked as if by magic; or, in other words there was nothing doing The enormous profit that was the boast of most of the mining interests involved, was also cut off for some time to come. You see, it is absolutely necessary that labor must be constantly employed in order that dividends may be continually forthcoming. The strike continued, however, there being no attempt made by the companies involved to resume operations. On October 8th there had been circulated a false report, to the effect that the strike was settled and that the former employés were returning to work. On that very same day the members of the steam shovelmen's organization held a meeting and voted unanimously to affiliate with the strike movement and with a firm resolution never to return to work until a settlement satisfactory to all concerned was positively assured.

On October 9th, the Highland Boy Company attempted to resume operations with a small force of scabs and about twenty-five so-called deputies, consisting of seasoned thugs and high-grade assassins. These mercenary hirelings are also of the brand that has been known to have prodded pregnant women with their bayonets, and knock down little children with the butts of their guns. On the same day, a few of the organizers happened to be walking along the county road, which passes through the company property and close to the mine entrance. On observing a few men coming along with their lunch buckets as if going to work, Organizers Alferovich, Jakovich and myself approached within hailing distance, and was about to speak to them when at that moment there came thundering down upon them one of those degenerate maniacs by the name of Sage, with eight or ten of his kind, with the brand of Cain all over them, and demanded of Goggin what right he had to interfere with persons going up and down the road.

I again tried to inform this leper that I was not interfering with or obstructing any one, and also that the road in question was the property of the public and that I was merely exercising the right which is secure to every citizen. "Right be damned," was the rejoinder, and at the same time hitting me over the head with his gun and knocking me down. No sooner did I get up, than again I was knocked down, and just as soon as I pulled myself together, I was ordered to immediately leave and not show up again if I did not want my head blowed off. The party, however, started back down the cañon in obedience to the mandate received, but did not get very far until they were accosted by another one of those groveling Jackals of plutocracy, named Sweitzer, who had been riding up and down the cañon terrorizing the inhabitants and howling like a roaring lion seeking whom he might devour. "What in the h—l are you fellows doing here?" he yelled out to the boys on their way down the cañon, "By G—d, let no S— of a B— interfere with any man that wants to go to work." At these words, O'Berto of Oregon W. F. M., resisted, and at that juncture was told that if he, O'Berto, did not close his mouth, he would put him where he belonged. While this ignominious recreant was thus heaping his virulent maledictions on those innocent men, another specimen of a similar type also appeared by the name of (S-T-E-A-L.) This notorious wanderoo, he, too, like his consort, began to purge himself of his squalid oratory, but the boys were gone by this time and whiskers was left to cool off and also replenish his oral cesspool for future use.

October 11, 1912.—By this time, the Utah Copper Company had collected from all over the civilized as well as uncivilized world, a lot of most dreadful and vicious-looking human criminals that ever came down the avenue, who were also dubbed deputy sheriffs, composed mostly of white slavers, panderers, thugs, yeggmen, procurers, second-story men, safe crackers and the like.

On the morning of the day in question, a number of these so-called human ghouls were turned loose to terrorize the inhabitants of this otherwise peaceful settlement, nearly all of whom were Greek laborers, formerly employed by the Utah Copper Co. who were living collectively in their elaborate mansions of various styles and sizes, composed of powder boxes and other debris gathered from the scrapheaps and dumps of the surrounding community. In a few minutes there came thundering down upon them this notorious band of marauders, howling and yelling like mad men, without warrant of law or justice, breaking into houses, driving the inhabitants to flight, devastating their property, breaking into their trunks and boxes, stealing their money and other valuables, and carrying on such a reign of terror the like of which was unheard o in any civilized country.

One young Greek boy (Mike Katrakis), who was fleeing for his life from this horrible scene of trepidation, was called upon to halt and on extending his hands heavenward, in compliance with the mandate received, was shot through the leg, which member was afterwards amputated, in order that the boy's life might be saved.

Several others, non-combatants, being more or less seriously wounded, were taken to the various hospitals, where they could remain while on strike for a living wage, and to heal if possible the wounds inflicted on them by those hired assassins of plutocracy. It will be necessary to call your attention to amendment four of the constitution of the United States of America in this connectiou, to-wit: The rgiht of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue. But upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the person or things to be seized.

BEN GOGGIN, Organizer W. F. M.

AN INTERESTING REPORT FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

(From Robert F. Wilson.)

Washington, February.—On March 4, 1913, the term of Representative Victor L. Berger, the first Socialist ever sent to Congress, will be at an end. Thereafter, for the next two years, the party of the working class will have no representation in the national Legislature.

Berger will stay at his desk here until the last minute of his term, which will be the minute before 12 o'clock noon of March 4. On March 5 he will leave for Milwaukee and for the next two years will divide his time between his duties as editor of the Milwaukee Leader and traveling to the far ends of the country, lecturing and urging the working class to return a strong delegation of Socialists to Congress in 1914.

That Berger has achieved an extraordinary record in Cougress is conceded even by his bitterest opponents in the capitalist parties. One of his chief accomplishments has been to break down a great deal of prejudice against the Socialist party, held by millions of bourgeoisie of the country. To these people the Socialist was a sort of cross between a horned devil and a red-handed assassin. Berger's bills, resolutions and speeches have opened the eyes of these people and have won throughout the country a sympathy for his most radical proposals that would have been deemed impossible two short years ago. Purely as a matter of advertising the term of Berger in Congress has given the Socialist party and Socialist principles more publicity and a better and more effective publicity than the party could have secured by spending millions of dollars.

"I have really accomplished more than I ever dreamed or expected," said Berger, as he was closing his office. "But if a single Socialist could accomplish so much, twenty-five Socialists in Congress could not only prevent a great deal of capitalistic legislation, but they could compel the other parties to pass much of our own legislation. For that reason the Socialists must make a great effort during the next two years to return a large delegation to the Sixty-fourth Congress."

The principal concrete benefits of sending a Socialist to Congress have been the securing of the Lawrence investigation, which resulted in a settlement of the strike; the Hanford impeachment, which resulted in the resignation of Judge Cornelius N. Hanford of Seattle shortly before he was eligible to retire on a pension; and recently, the introduction of a resolution which undoubtedly had a big effect in causing the fifty-four eastern railroads to accept arbitration under the Erdman act for their differences with the Brotherhood of Firemen.

Indirectly, equally large benefits have been assured. Socialist principles have been expounded upon the national stage in Washington, from where they were heard by millions of Americans not otherwise reached with propaganda. More than 2,000,000 copies of Berger's speeches have been distributed, and 100,000 copies of the Socialist platform of 1912, which was printed in the Congressional Record, were mailed to all parts of the country under Berger's frank.

The Milwaukee man has been more than the representative of the Fifth Wisconsin district. He has been Congressman-at-Large for the working class of the United States. His mail has been so heavy with appeals to right wrongs in all parts of the country that much of the time he has been compelled to hire three clerks to keep up with it. He has settled individual cases by the hundreds, and on several occasions has been able to suggest and have adopted departmental reforms which have benefited thousands. Much of Berger's success in Washington has been due to his genial personality which has unversally made friends for him and for his party, but back of this has been the consciousness in the minds of members of Congress that Berger, the man, was but the representative of a million voters.

The Present Session.

Berger's record in Congress up to the present session has been thoroughly analyzed and published. But, during his last days in the present Congress, he has completed a record which stands unequaled in its benefit to workers. Although during much of the present session he was tied down to the investigation of fire insurance companies in the District of Columbia —largely a local question—nevertheless, he found time to keep up his work as representative at large for the Socialist party of America.

On December 16 he introduced a resolution for the government to take over and operate the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, on the ground that it constitutes a complete transportation monopoly in New England. Berger took advantage of the general dissatisfaction against the New Haven which was rife at the time, and thus gave to this Socialist measure a very wide publicity.

On January 27 he introduced a resolution asking for an investigation by a special committee of the New York Garment Workers' strike. In this resolution, Berger argued that the strike is one warranting federal interference on the ground that the garments produced in sweatshops and carried in interstate commerce menaces the health of the entire country. He forced the rules committee, to which this resolution was referred, to put itself on record as refusing to consider this working class measure and also showed up the so-called union labor representatives, not one of whom offered any support to the resolution, and thus showed the country that the working class can place no dependence on old party representatives whether they claim allegiance to the working class or not.

On February 13 a resolution was submitted by Berger demanding an investigation of the postoffice censorship, which is being used arbitrarily by minor officials to limit and harass a free press. The particular instauces which brought forth this resolution were the indictment of the editors of the Appeal to Reason for that paper's expose of conditions in Leavenworth prison, and a very recent case in which the postoffice suppressed an article in the New York Call dealing with sex hygiene.

The Firemen's strike resolution, authorizing the confiscation of the fifty-four eastern railroads and their operation by the postoffice until a department of railroads could be created, submitted on February 15, was the culmination of Berger's legislative record. It is undoubtedly true that this resolution had much to do with the decision of the railroad officials a day or so later to accept arbitration under the Erdman act, the point on which the strike was threatened. While the resolution had no concrete value until a strike was called and continued for a week, nevertheless its moral effect was tremendous, and it unquestionably would have been seized upon by millions as to the solution for the economic distress which would have been produced by any prolonged tie-up of the railroads. The railroad owners realized this, and so did capitalist editors generally, and the following editorial from the reactionary Springfield (Mass.) Republican was a typical expression of this feeling:

"Congressman Berger, the Socialist, is taking advantage of what is probably his last opportunity as a representative, in introducing his resolution regarding the threatened railroad strike. No one just now will regard it seriously, but within two weeks after a genuine tie-up of the fifty-four railroads east of Chicago by the firemen, the Berger resolution might seem to millions of people to embody the vital necessity of the hour. Seizure of the roads by the President of the United States, with directions from Congress to operate them, would be drastic, but, on the other hand, any prolonged tie-up would bring many cities face to face to starvation. Under the conditions of distress and general business dislocation that would prevail, the people would stop at nothing to relieve the intolerable situation. The railroad companies and the firemen have this to think of, while disputing over the forms of arbitration."

His service on the sub-committee which investigated the fire insurance companies in the District of Columbia did not give Berger much opportunity to be of national service, except as it enabled him to bring out some samples of typical capitalistic finance by which millions of people are robbed of huge sums of money. But in the course of this investigation Justice Ashley M. Gould of the District Supreme Court, a director in one of the companies under investigation, was called to the stand and this gave Berger an opportunity to tell this typical federal judge what the working class think of jurists who ally themselves with business. Berger's examination horrified the other members of the committee—all of them lawyers—and brought beads of perspiration to Gould's brow, especially when Berger cited the cases of Hanford and Archbald to show what is beginning to happen to judges who allow their business instincts to run away with them.

Berger also this winter was successful in acting on the appeal of settlers adjoining forest reservations against the great lumber companies operating in these districts and paying the homesteaders starvation prices for their timber. Going directly to Chief Forester Graves, Berger suggested a plan whereby the government in auctioning off its excess timber to the lumber companies might include in the parcels the timber of the settlers, thus acting as sales agent for the homesteaders in securing better prices for them. While this matter is still pending, the solution is regarded favorably by the forest service, and indicates what can be done by a representative whose point of view sees the interests of the individual rather than the petty regulations acting as a protection to the plundering activities of big business interests.

Past Sessions.

Berger's activities for the Socialist party began from the day he reached Washington, April 4, 1911. From that day on his activity has been unceasing. He drew up a resolution (which was introduced April 5), demanding the withdrawal of American troops from the Mexican border. Immediately afterward he introduced a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment giving Congress the right to call a constitutional conventiou, and followed it with a resolution demandiug an investigation of the kidnapping of John J. McNamara. On April 27, 1911, he introduced his famous resolution for a constitutional amendment abolishing the Senate, the veto powers of the President and the invalidating powers of the courts. A number of other Socialist measures preceded his bill providing old age pensions, his joint resolution for a commission to report on old age pensions being introduced July 31.

The first regular session of the Sixty-second Congress began December 4, 1911, and on that day Berger put iu a bill repealing the anti-trust act and providing for the co-operative ownership and operation of monopolized industries. His principal measures during this session were:

January 16, a resolution for a constitutional amendment granting woman suffrage; January 16, another old age pension resolution, directing the commissioner of labor to investigate the question; January 31, a bill providing for federal ownership and operation of railroads, telegraphs, telephones and express companies; February 1, a resolution to investigate the strike on the Harriman railroad lines; February 5, a bill giving self-government to the District of Columbia; February 7, the Lawrence strike investigation resolution; April 24, bill adding wireless to his government ownership bill of January 31; June 7, the Hanford impeachment resolution; July 10, a bill providing for the employment of all unemployed persons who desired work. This was one of the most radical and far-reaching bills ever introduced into Congress.

Berger's speeches have been one of the most important phases of his service. He has spoken on many subjects on the floor of the House and has thus given the country a well-defined idea of the Socialist attitude on most of the present-day problems. He first acquainted the members of the House of Representatives with some of the fundamental principles of Socialism in his speech on the wool tariff, delivered June 14, 1911. At the conclusion of this speech members of the House fired a number of questions at Berger, similar in all respects to the questions encountered by the soapbox Socialist orator on the street corner. His principal speech of his service was one delivered July 18, 1912, in which Berger took up the complete Socialist position on the collective ownership of the resources of the earth, the tools of industry and the facilities of transportation, and showed to the capitalist parties that the working class must have its owu party to give expression to its own class interests. This was the only purely Socialist speech delivered by Berger, excepting one a few days later when he gained permission to print the Socialist platform in the Congressional Record; his other speeches, while upon Socialist doctrines, being directed to some specific matter of legislation before the House.

Lively debates followed most of Berger's speeches and he is always granted very close attention by the House, members usually flocking in from the cloakrooms when he began to speak. The capitalist legislators seemed eager to learn Berger's views on national problems, but three or four clashes in which the wit and keen analysis of economic conditions by the Socialist representative came out victorious, members of the House have been very chary about arguing political questions with him on the floor.

Other speeches delivered by him include an argument for the old age pension. one favoring an eight-hour day on government contract work, one warning "insurgents" that they cannot accomplish results by remaining in the old parties, one criticising starvation wages of workers in the District of Columbia, his speech on the Lawrence outrages, his address favoring a citizen soldiery, and his speech advocating the Hanford impeachment resolution.

In addition, Berger's standing as the representative of a great mass of voters has given him great influence in the different departments of the government. He has taken up and carried to a successful conclusion a uumber of immigration cases in which exclusion orders had been issued by the secretary of commerce and labor, the most prominent being that of Theodore Malkoff, who had been one of the crew of the cruiser Potemkin, which had joined the mutiny. Except for Berger's interference, Malkoff would have been returned to Russia, where he would have been executed.

Berger secured from the postoffice departmeut an order permitting mail carriers to wear cool blouses in warm weather, thereby adding much to the comfort of this body of workers.

This sketch of Berger's record does not by any means include all of his work but has simply touched the high spots. His record is one to which every Socialist and progressive workingman can point with pride. He has fulfilled all of the promises made by the Socialist party and has demonstrated that the hope of those who toil for their just share of the benefits of civilization lies in the political party of the working class the Socialist party.

CALUMET MINERS' UNION HOLD SUCCESSFUL PROPAGANDA MEETING—W. J. TOUPIN MAKES STRONG PLEA FOR ORGANIZATION.

Calumet Miners' Union No. 203 held a rousing educational meeting last Sunday evening in Wilmers hall. The crowd packed the hall to the door and standing room was at a premium. It is estimated that fully 399 people were turned away. The most remarkable feature was that all had to pay ten cents admission. This is quite a contrast when not even two years ago they were unable to even get a score of people to listen to a speaker when it was free. The secretary of the union reported that there were people present speaking seventeen languages and dialects. All nationalities were present, even Cornishmen. The only ones who were not present were Americans and blue-bellied Yankees.

It must have been with a sad heart that the spies reported Monday that the hall was filled to overflowing and no incendiary remarks were uttered by the speakers. It is needless to say that no one said that capital and labor are identical. All the speakers were agreed that labor was entitled to all it created and the capitalist had to take his place in the ranks or go hungry.

W. J. Toupin showed it was useless to strike without organization; he showed that the strike was an obsolete weapon, that when the workers were all organized, they need not resort to a strike; that they could demand what they wanted, when they wanted it and get it.

Further, the speaker showed how the different crafts scabbed on one another in the past, but through the organization and education the workers are shown that we are all brothers and that the boss skins all alike regardless of religion or nationality. He further showed that we are obliterating religious and nationality lines and that we are making headways in battering down race hatred. He declared that when we had the anti-Japanese agitation a short time ago, it was none other than that splendid militant organization, the Western Federation of Miners, that showed them the solution of the race problem. "Take them into your union and pay them union wages, and if the boss does not want yellow labor, hire white labor, but pay all the union scale." Presto! the jingoes hushed their voices The workers got on to the capitalistic war scheme and the plutes crawled into their holes. He also showed how organized labor is handling the negro problem in the same way, by referring to the molders admitting colored men into their unions. Mr. Toupin declared that the workers had to either lift the poor workers up, or the poor workers would drag them down to their level. Space forbids any further comment, but the address should be printed in pamphlet form and distributed by the thousands. In closing, the speaker urged the voters to vote for the party that stood for the working class; that was financed by the working class and intended to serve none other than the working class.

John Välimäki addressed the audience in the Finnish language. John can always be depended on giving something of great educational value and this address was up to the mark. Thos. Strizich addressed the audience in Croatian, Mor Oppman in Hungarian and Anthony Romano in Italian. At the end of each address the speaker was greeted with long and loud applause.

The Carl Marx orchestra, the pride of Calumet Socialists, furnished the music. It will be a surprise to our readers to learn that about one-third of the audience was made up of ladies.

At the next educational meeting of the miners, the speakers will be asked to discuss the union label and a special effort will be made to get out the women. The different unions realize what a tremendous advantage it would be to get the women educated to demand the union label when they do their shopping. After Easter a label dance will be given in which all organizations, such as cigarmakers, tailors, shoemakers and all crafts known as the label division of organized labor, will be urged to attend.

At the close of the speaking refreshments, consisting of coffee cake. apples, oranges and carbonated drinks, were served free.—Weekly Call, Hancock.

TO CONQUER THE WORLD.

Self Education on the Workers' Part Is Essential.

Almost all ages have attached some importance to general education and have left recorded ideals—the most sublime—often sufficiently inspiring to induce many an earnest dreamer to endeavor to remodel the world according to them. The question ultimately forces itself on such: "How is it that the present life of misery, led by the mass of humanity, is all the result?" Surely, the ages tell us, not from lack of knowledge.

No! But this knowledge, this immense power, in whose possession has it been? It has been held by the privileged few, whose instruments, all governments, religions and parties have been, in turning it to their profit and in keeping in ignorance, and consequently in subjection, the masses. For the few have those grand ideals, the highest cultivation of every human faculty, the pursuit of knowledge for the love of it, and of all that makes life beautiful, been possible; and that they might have the necessary leisure, the limits of the education of the many have been circumscribed by immediate utility.

Examining what passes for education in our public elementary schools, we find that the aim, divested of all its trappings, is merely to provide a suitable groundwork for further technical training; that the conditions under which it is carried on make almost military discipline and repressive methods inevitable (what more fitting preparation for our future wage slaves'), while the false notions with regard to their true interests and position in society are implanted during the most impressionable age. For the better the child is fashioned to the tastes of his masters, the greater is their power over him when a man. Later, he has to fit into some particular groove in the workshop, for which a little specialized training may be requisite. This for many completes the system. Nevertheless, the results of such technical, specialized education have been by no means negligible, and are becoming less so as capitalism, in turning every scientific invention and discovery to its use, demands more specialized and less general skill on the part of the artisan.

Knowledge begets a desire for more, and the workers are forming a habit of acquiring what is not exactly of immediate use to their masters, indeed, of what may be the very reverse. This, combined with the increasing hardships of their lives, is urging the workers to claim not only the world of knowledge and science, but also the world of material things as their due heritage.

A true understanding of his real position by a worker trained in the ordinary way, presupposes a deal of destructive work, for early false notions often develop into almost ineradicable prejudices, and he enters the fight, if not terribly embittered, at least tamed and saddened at the thought that he has only realized what to live for when his life is well nigh spent. While never relaxing in our struggle to make such a waste of life impossible, before that end is accomplished, it is surely wise to economize effort by making the way easier for those whom we hope will enter our ranks. This is done by giving instruction in scientific Socialism, part of which task is undertaken by Socialist study classes. They should all through aim at counteracting the effects of ordinary school teaching in as far as they are evil, and at dispelling the illusions there conjured up, by instilling a thorough knowledge of the true history of society. In these lessons the lives of the people of our class, the growth of their institutions and their progress under repression, receive due prominence, and dry-as-dust lists of dates, battles and names of uninteresting personalities are relegated to their proper place. Those who have watched the efforts of the child mind to retain disconnected facts and grapple with abstract dogmatic teaching, will look forward with hope to the effects of systematic lessons of this sort. The real position of the class they belong to and what constitute its true interests can not fail to be brought home.

As a preparation to the children for what is in store for them, descriptions by workers engaged in the various industries of the actual conditions under which they work are invaluable. While useful information is given about all kinds of materials and processes, the pressing need to change existing conditions is emphasized, and the failure for this purpose of the present form of organization according to craft is shown.

Instruction in all that goes to make useful units of a great working class organization is given, and the simple duty of spending what leisure time one has in social service is impressed.

The combined result of such teaching should be a recognition by the worker of the mission of his class as the greatest, the noblest that any class has ever been called on to fulfill, and a determination to do all in his power for the emancipation of his class.

The other purposes which these study classes serve have already been dealt with—how they may be made to minister to our aesthetic needs and serve as a means of quenching "that constant thirst among us for fuller and truer social intercourse."

Visits to art galleries, museums, theaters and picture halls we would substitute for the bands-of-hope, work parties, Boys' Brigades, etc., of Church Sunday Schools. In short, we would "acknowledge and investigate every reality in the universe and admit no phantoms," and although we are conscious that this is pursued often in haphazard style by methods halting far behind, still, is it not an ideal worthy of our best efforts?

To women especially would I appeal. Too often are they content to wail sentimentally over existing conditions.

"But now there sounds a cry that asks not tears, Stern silence now and fixed resolve were fitter."

They must realize that just as they have had their full share in the heritage of slavery and serfdom of the ages, so must they take their share in overcoming it, and that the might of all of us thrown into the struggle will hasten the assured victory.—C. F., in Glasgow Socialist.

WHICH SYSTEM DO YOU PREFER?

Under This System.	Under Socialism.
The men who make the fabrics wear rags.	The men who work will get their full product.
The men who build houses live in rented hovels.	Every man can afford to own a good home, clear of all indebtedness.
The men who make the automobiles walk.	No man will be enabled to live by working others.
The men who build the railroads tramp between the rails, seeking work.	Every laborer will be enabled to travel and see the world.
The men who till the soil eat the refuse and sell the best so they may buy some soil.	The world will be transformed into a thing of beauty and will bring to those who made it.
The men who work the hardest have the least.	The producer, the farmer, will have the best of everything, and will no longer be in debt for the land he work.
The men who have transformed that world have legally no right in the world.

PORTLAND CEMENT IN 1912.

Estimate of United States Geological Survey Shows Increase of Three and One-Half Million Barrels.

According to returns received by the United States Geological Survey up to January 15, 1913, it is estimated by Ernest F. Burchard of the Survey that the total quantity of Portland cement manufactured in the United States in 1912 was approximately 81,941,998 barrels. It is believed that this estimate is within 1.5 per cent. of the exact figure. This quantity represents an increase of 3,413,361 barrels over the 78,528,637 barrels manufactured in 1911, or 4.3 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement during 1912 are estimated at 84,750,291 barrels, compared with 75,547,829 barrels in 1911, an increase of 9,202,462 barrels, or 12.2 per cent. The production in 1912 was thus held in check sufficiently to permit a material reduction in the stocks of cement at the mills at the close of 1911, which amounted to nearly 12,000,000 barrels.

The continued increase in the production of Portland cement is significant in view of the fluctuations in the output of other leading mineral products such as coal, iron and copper. The curve of production of Portland cement, although not now rising at so rapid a rate as during 1909 and 1910, is still pointing upward and has yet to take its first downward drop.

Business Conditions and Prices.

Practically all mills report having to contend with adverse business conditions during the first six months of the year. Prices were lower than the average for 1911 during this period, and some plants reported the lowest prices for which they had ever sold cement. After the middle of the year, conditions improved materially, and generally during the last four months of 1912 the demand for Portland cement was sufficient to keep most mills running at full capacity. In the Lehigh district, production was curtailed slightly, in order to diminish the accumulated stocks. Production and shipments in New York show the greatest proportionate increase of all districts. In the southeastern states the increase in production and shipments was gratifyingly large, as it was also in the vicinity of Chicago, and in Iowa and Missouri. Certain plants in Kansas were much hampered by the failure of the supply of natural gas, and were obliged to shut down temporarily while installing coal-burning devices. This feature contributed to the decrease in production in the great plains states. In the Pacific coast states and in certain of the Rocky Mountain states, production did not keep pace with that of 1911, owing to the lack of demand for cement for large public works.

The average price for the whole country of Portland cement per barrel in bulk at the mills will probably show a slight decrease when complete returns are received, although at the close of the year prices were much better than they had been during the last two years.

Production by Districts.

In addition to estimating the total production and shipments of Portland cement during 1912 it is possible to present fairly complete statistics of production and shipments by districts.

Lehigh District.—Eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, which together form the leading Portland cement manufacturing district of the United States, produced approximately 24,449,523 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 25,972,108 barrels in 1911. This represents a decrease of 1,522,585 barrels, or 5.9 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approxi mated 25,905,257 barrels, compared with 25,192,464 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 712,793 barrels, or 2.8 per cent. There were 20 mills reported as active in 1912, against 24 in 1911.

New York.—Mills in the state of New York produced approximately 4,490,180 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 3,314,217 barrels in 1911. This represents an increase of 1,175,963 barrels, or 35.5 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 4,547,195 barrels, compared with 3,058,463 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 1,488,732 barrels, or 48.7 per cent. There were seven mills reported as active in 1912 the same number as in 1911.

Ohio and Western Pennsylvania.—In Ohio and Western Pennsylvania there were produced approximately 7,239,775 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 6,756,313 barrels in 1911. This represents an increase of 483,462 barrels, or 7.2 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 7,400,885 barrels, compared with 6,654,269 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 334,348 barrels, or 11.9 per cent. Three mills were report-reported as active in 1912, the same number as in 1911.

Michigan and Northeastern Indiana.—This district produced approximately 4,449,274 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 4,519,726 barrels in 1911. This represents a decrease of 70,452 barrels, or 1.6 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 4,451,838 barrels, compared with 4,550,896 barrels shipped in 1911, a decrease of 99,058 barrels, or 2.2 per cent. There were twelve mills reported as active in 1912, the same number as in 1911.

Kentucky and Southeastern Indiana.—Mills near Ohio river in Kentucky and Indiana produced approximately 3,071,467 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 2,818,820 barrels in 1911. This represents an increase of 252,647 barrels, or nine per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 3,134,874 barrels, compared with 2,800,526 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 334,348 barrels, or 11.9 per cent . Three mills were reported as active in 1912, the same number as in 1911.

Southeastern States.—Mills in the states of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama produced approximately 4,664.454 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 4,049,063 barrels in 1911. This represents an increase of 615,391 barrels, or 15.2 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 4,961,662 barrels, compared with 3,723,183 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 1,238,479 barrels, or 33.3 per cent. There were nine mills reported as active in 1912, against eleven in 1911.

Iowa and Missouri.—The output of Portland cement in Iowa and Missouri amounted to approximately 7,557,090 barrels in 1912, compared with 6,067,449 barrels in 1911. This represents an increase of 1,489,641 barrels, or 24.6 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 7,792,163 barrels, compared with 5,932,856 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 1,859,307 barrels, or 31.3 per cent. There were eight mills reported as active in 1912, against seven mills active in 1911.

Great Plains States.—In Kansas, Oklahoma and central Texas approximately 5,760,938 barrels of Portland cement were produced in 1912, compared with 7,010,396 barrels in 1911. This represents a decrease of 1,249,458 barrels, or 17.8 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 6,152,378 barrels, compared with 6,332,698 barrels shipped in 1911, a decrease of 180,320 barrels, or 2.8 per cent. There were fifteen mills reported as active in 1912, against seventeen mills active in 1911.

Rocky Mountain States.—Colorado, Utah, Montana and western Texas together produced approximately 2,298,649 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 2,124,930 barrels in 1911. This represents an increase of 173,719 barrels, or 8.2 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 2,234,766 barrels, compared with 1,994,790 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 239,976 barrels, or 12 per cent. Seven mills were reported as active in 1912, and the same number in 1911.

Pacific Coast.—The states of California and Washington produced approximately 7,258,542 barrels of Portland cement in 1912, compared with 7,278,274 barrels in 1911. This represents a decrease of 19,732 barrels, or 0.3 per cent. The shipments of Portland cement in 1912 approximated 7,483,852 barrels, compared with 6,770,242 barrels shipped in 1911, an increase of 713,610 barrels, or 10.5 per cent. There were eleven mills reported as active in 1912, the same number as in 1911.

In Memoriam.

Cobalt, Ont., Canada, Feb. 25th, 1913.

Resolutions of condolence re death of William C. Langley.

Whereas the Grim Reaper has once more invaded our ranks and removed from our midst our esteemed brother, William C. Langley, who passed away suddenly on February 11, 1913, and

Whereas, In the death of Brother Langley, Cobalt Miners' Union has lost a true and valued member and the labor movement a valiant champion, who ever stood in the forefront of the fight in the battle for human freedom; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we extend to his relatives our heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of bereavement, and that we drape our charter for a period of thirty days; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this local, a copy sent to the deceased's relatives and a copy sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication.

POETICAL

"ONLY A MINER."

W. E. Hanson, Butte, Mont.

He's nothing but a miner, an easy-going mutt,
Who swings a pick and shovel; he's addled in the nut;
For if he knew his value, just take the dope from me,
He'd see the supes and bosses damned to all eternity.
He's the man who does the stoping, the one who digs the ores;
The shafting and the mucking has a lot of copper sores.
Sometimes the most complacent man that ever can be found;
To him seasons mean but little, half the time he's underground.

If he works like "hell and blazes," never has a word to say;
Is contented with conditions, don't want advance in pay.
If he does the work of two men with a shovel number two,
With a head-piece that is numbered five and long ago was new,
He's just the man the company will give a chance to work,
They know that they can dictate, and he will never shirk;
And when election day comes round, the "boss" down in the stope
Will tell this "citizen" how to vote, and fill him full of dope.

Of how this "generous company" have his interests at heart;
They want to "better his condition," for this is but a part
Of their pre-election tactics to make a "one-man town,"
And they know the dub who falls for it is a contented clown.
"Obedience to the master class" is taught him by his church,
Tells him not to read nor reason, "it will leave him in the lurch."
So with a hat—a number five—and a shovel number two,
His "masters" own him hide and hair, and know what he will do.

But there are a lot of miners whose hats are No. 8;
They're doing lots of thinking, and just as sure as fate
In their time they may have handled a shovel No. 2,
But the number fast is dwindling—there are only left a few,
And all the "boys"—the miners—Irish, Dagos, Finns and Micks,
Choose the very smallest shovels and the very lightest picks;
They profit by experience—with their thumb up to their nose;
Give the hand a turn significant, to the bosses when they pose.

As friends of toil and labor, their talk that sounds so fair,
The miner knows is nothing only "rarefied hot air."
The church has now enlisted to help the "master calss,"
But what they aim and hope for will never come to pass;
Both curse and damn the Socialists, are sorry, sick and sore,
But instead of killing them, by their acts are making more.
Wait 'til they wise the miner, who handles shovel No. 2,
They'll make a Socialist of him, and he'll know what to do.

Heart and soul, I'm with the miner, 'twas he who made the town—
Some who profited the most by him would kick him when he's down.
Give a smile and kind word to him, when you pass him on the trail,
Though he may not be a picture, with his old tin dinner pail.
He and all the miners like him handled shovels No. 2,
And made this town "a good old town" for folks like me and you.

"EQUALITY."

W. E. Hanson, Butte, Mont.

I roamed through the "Underground Kingdom,"
Where we all are equal at last,
And saw what we all will come to
When days of Life's journey are past.
And all around me were scattered
Little mounds of damp, brown earth,
All alike both in size and color,
And equal alike in worth.

This mound, it once ruled a kingdom,
Was a prince at the hour of birth;
And I pondered and gazed in wonder,
For it now was a mound of brown earth.
What availed all his kingly splendor?
All his fame—'twas a passing breath;
He left his possessions behind him,
And obeyed the command of King Death.

And not far away lies another—
Who was it—a Pope or a King?
It was neither—a poor, lowly beggar,
Who had naught to the "kingdom" to bring.
He had known what it was to suffer
Every day of his life since birth;
But behold! he is now the king's equal—
Has returned to a mound of brown earth.

And between them a mound that is smaller,
But with odor and color the same;
And imagined it might be some "princeling,"
Or some hero of glorious fame.
And then—as in mist came a vision,
As sunlight that sifts through a fog—
And answered, "'tis neither king, pope nor beggar,"
It once was the poor beggar's dog.

Is it wise to boast of our wisdom?
To look on God's poor with disdain?
Is it noble to gloat o'er our power—
Court honors both empty and vain?
Is it wise for those in position,
To enslave the toilers at birth?
For when Life's little day is over,
We are only mounds of brown earth.

True—in life we may not be equal,
But 'tis man—not God has said so;
We all travel the self-same highway,
And in time to the same Kingdom go.
And the one who rules over a Kingdom,
And the one who's an outcast at birth,
In the underground realm commingle—
For all become "mounds of brown earth."

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

HIGH FINANCE is responsible for the slaughter in Mexico. The murders and assassinations can be laid at the door of Wall street.

DURING the year 1912 more than 1,000 men were killed in the coal mines of Pennsylvania. Such is the toll demanded by profit.

CARDINAL GIBBONS opposes granting independence to the Philippines. Strange that the cardinal, who is looked upon as a religious man, should take the same position as the exploiters.

THE LEGISLATURE of Michigan is considering a measure which provides for a State Constabulary. The bill is drafted from the Pennsylvania law and is being backed by almost every rabid exploiter of Michigan. The bill provides for 100 armed men to be used during strikes and to be paid for by the state.

The labor organizations of Michigan are fighting the bill and hope to kill the infamous measure that provides Cossacks for industrial oppressors.

THE GENTLEMAN who was known as President Taft, is now Howard Taft and has retired to private life.

The laboring people of this country will not regret his departure from Washington.

LABOR sometimes starves to death, but no one ever heard of capital going hungry.

The "identity of interest" gag is becoming so ancient and ludicrous that even numbskulls cannot swallow such false philosophy.

THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the Socialist party has lost "Big Bill." The membership of the Socialist party by a vote of 22,500 to 11,000 has declared that Ponderous William, with his "direct action" and "sabotage," can no longer use his official position in the Socialist party to minister to the I. W. W. and at the same time gather a few ducats for himself.

THE FOLLOWING is taken from the B. C. Federationist, relative to the Britannia miners' strike:

"The miners who are on strike from the Britannia mines report that the situation remains unchanged. At the meeting held last Monday in the Labor Temple steps were taken to carry on the strike and to receive reports from pickets, etc. It was further stated that all unions having members working at Britannia Beach have withdrawn them . The mine and the tunnel camps are now practically deserted with the exception of six shift bosses. The company has had no success in trying to get men to take the places of the strikers, in spite of the fact that they are being actively assisted by the employment agencies in the city."

A FEW WEEKS AGO the daily press contained a number of reports concerning members of the Legislature of West Virginia who accepted bribes for the election of a United States senator. That votes were bought was not even denied, for the debauched members of the Legislature were caught with the goods in their possession. It was thought for a time that all the guilty parties would be prosecuted, but the principal witnesses cannot be found and it is said that the prosecution will be dropped. The question now arises, who bribed the principal witnesses?

The same agencies that bought legislators and used the militia of the state to terrorize striking coal miners, made it worth while for the principal witnesses to disappear.

THE PROFESSIONAL PARASITE with distorted face who reels along the street seeking opportunities to quench his thirst, and the fashionably-dressed lady in an automobile, whose tapered fingers were never soiled by honest labor, are both the products of the capitalist system.

Socialism would remove the drunken tramp and the workless maiden, but such a change in our boasted civilization meets with the most vigorous opposition from press and pulpit.

Why?

Simply because press and pulpit have been subsidized by the economic power of those great combinations whose dictums are laws to things in human shape who lack the stature of real men.

TWENTY-FOUR of the twenty-nine defendants of the National Cash Register Company were convicted under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust law.

Fines and jail sentences were imposed on these promoters of monopoly, but no one has noticed any serious expression on the faces of those gentlemen who have refused to respect the Sherman Anti-Trust law.

They have appealed to a higher court, and people who are sane and have watched judicial tribunals dealing with law-breakers with bank accounts, will not for one moment entertain the opinion that the convicted plutes will pay any penalties. "Equal before the law" is one of the most ghastly jokes that can possibly be perpetrated on men of ordinary intelligence.

THE UNITED MINE WORKERS of the State of Illinois in annual convention in Peoria, made a donation of $100,000 in aid of the striking coal miners of West Virginia. Such a generous contribution shows the mettle of the union coal miners of Illinois. The coal miners, as a whole, are men of courage and determination and in every instance where a conflict reaches serious proportions, the sturdy men of the United Mine Workers never hesitate in responding generously to an appeal for aid.

The United Mine Workers propose to win the fight in West Virginia and will empty the treasury of every local union in the organization if necessary, to wipe out corporate despotism and thug-brutality in the coal fields now ruled by martial law. The coal barons, when the battle is over, will know the cost of the fight.

THE MANY FRIENDS of James Kirwan, who was formerly a member of the executive board of the Western Federation of Miners and who has served the organization as secretary-treasurer, will regret to learn that his wife has passed into the Great Beyond.

Mrs. Kirwan had lived in the Black Hills since her girlhood days, and was most highly esteemed by a host of friends. Since her residence in Denver, she had endeared herself to all who came within the range of her acquaintance. She was a domestic woman, fond of home and an ideal wife and mother.

She leaves three little children to mourn her loss, and the thousands of miners throughout the jurisdiction of the Western Federation of Miners will sympathize with the husband who must reconcile himself to his loss and summon all his courage to fight the battle of life for his motherless babes.

FOUR CLOTHING MANUFACTURERS of New York were arrested a short time ago, charged with the crime of murder. Their names are as follows: Max Orenstein, Max Weisberg, Louis Wernstein and Abraham Fiolkoff.

Abraham Steinberg, the business agent of the Buttonhole Workers' Union, was murdered because of his activity during the clothing strike and one Harry Wagner, who was hired to commit the crime, has confessed. Wagner in his confession declares that he was promised $500 to kill the business agent, but that his paymasters gave him only $70.00 of the amount. Wagner had forged some checks and the clothing manufacturers threatened him with imprisonment, unless he yielded obedience to their demands that he should remove the business agent.

The near future will reveal some interesting developments concerning the killing of Abraham Steinberg.

IT IS REPORTED that in the State of Pennsylvania fifty thousand children under sixteen years of age are at work, consequently deprived of a seat in our public schools. A statistician says: "Of all the children in the United States up to sixteen years of age, only twelve per cent are in schools."

Such a showing reflects but little credit on a nation that boasts of freedom and lauds the conditions under which the masses of the people live. It is the children of the laboring millions that are denied the opportunity to develop themselves mentally. The paltry wage of the parent and the increased cost of living, snatch the boy and girl from the schoolroom to become slaves in the prisons of profit, where childhood is slowly murdered to coin dividends for that class of privilege, that scorns to recognize the rights of common humanity.

When will labor strike a blow for real liberty?

WEST VIRGINIA has been Russianized by the authorities who are merely the puppets of the coal barons.

"Mother" Jones, C. H. Boswell, editor of the Argus, John W. Brown, Charles Batley and Paul J. Paulsen were practically kidnapped and brought into the territory that was under martial law.

"Mother" Jones was in Charleston, some twenty miles outside the strike zone, but regardless of this fact, she was seized by official hirelings, who are but agents of the mine owners, and rushed into the territory covered by martial law, in order that a military court might bring in a verdict against her.

When the powers of a state are prostituted to wreak vengeance against a woman who has reached the eightieth milestone in life, it is no wonder that men and women of the working class are losing confidence in the so-called majesty of the law and reaching the conclusion that under the lawless reign of capitalism, Justice has become a corpse.

THE GARMENT WORKERS of New York have scored a victory, that while not complete has served notice on the manufacturers that organized labor is becoming a power, and that men and women who stand together for justice can force relentless greed to weaken and concede some rights to which human beings are entitled.

The Garment Workers have made a stubborn fight, and though confronted by biased courts, though terrorized by thugs and awed by policemen pledged to aid a master class, yet these dauntless men and women, who were the victims of fines, imprisonment and brutal insults from thugs and uniformed ruffians, stood their ground until haughty industrial czars reached the conclusion that men and women of the working class were worthy of more consideration than had been paid to them in years gone by.

The solidarity of the Garment Workers paralyzed the clothing industry in New York and forced tyrants to acknowledge the strength of real unionism.

IN THE STRIKE of the Garment Workers of Rochester, New York, a garment worker by the name of Ida Brayman was shot dead by her employer. Six thousand of her associates marched in the funeral procession and paid their last tribute of respect to her, as her lifeless remains were lowered into the bosom of Mother Earth. What became of the employer who foully murdered this penniless slave who was engaged in a struggle with her associates to secure a wage that would make it possible for her to live? Her employer was investigated by a grand jury, but as this grand jury was made up of exploiters whose foreman was the leading banker of Rochester, it was found that Ida Brayman was killed through the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of her employer .

Had Ida Brayman, as a striker, shot her employer, a grand jury in Rochester would not have stretched its imagination to such an extent as to find her guiltless of murder.

The old chestnut that "we are all equal before the law" is receiving some severe jolts in these days, when the Dollar is God.

THE EMPLOYMENT of boys as messengers, which has necessitated their visiting the segregated districts in our large cities, was condemned by the Chicago vice commission, but your capitalist is little concerned about morality save when his profits are endangered. Then he is terribly distressed over the immorality of "confiscation."

Boys are still delivering messages and in some of our larger cities girls are employed. Mrs. Mae-Wood Simons tells us that in Chicago, girls are employed as messengers, both night and day, at risks which we need not enumerate.

When the Western Union Telegraph Company persisted in its partnership with the New York pool rooms, the only way by which it could be reached was in holding its directors personally reponsible. When they found that their partnership with the lower order of crooks and blacklegs could no longer be concealed, they had no difficulty in dissolving it.

The directors of the corporations which are employing girls for messengers should be pilloried along with the procurer and white slave dealer.

There is a way.—Milwaukee Leader.

MAYOR GAYNOR of New York who has posed as a Democrat and who believed in Democracy, has forwarded a letter to the Kansas Legislature denouncing in vigorous language the Initiative and Referendum and the Recall.

The attitude assumed by Gaynor on such measures has aroused the indignation of some labor editors, who entertained the opinion that Gaynor believed in a "government of the people, by the people and for the people."

But these labor editors who are now gnashing their teeth in rage against Gaynor, have forgotten that the Chief Magistrate of New York was once a judicial autocrat whose decisions could scarcely be looked upon as being based on justice. Gaynor believes in a Democracy that will not threaten the fortress in which Big Business is intrenched. A Democracy in which the people rule is repugnant to the sentiments of a jurist who looks upon the common people as a mob.

Gaynor "hears his master's voice" and speaks and acts in such a manner, as to win the approbation of that element in society whose wealth is drawn from the labor of a class, that is just awakening to the brutality of an industrial system, that holds labor in the chains of slavery.

THOMAS SLADDEN was State Secretary of the Socialist party of Oregon. "Tom," as he was familiarly known, could make some noise with his mouth, and when "Tom" meditated on all the wrongs and cruelties inflicted on labor by heartless Capital, there streamed from the slit in his mug a torrent of denunciation that shook empires and threatened the fall of nations.

"Tom" was a revolutionist of the "red" brand and he believed in "direct action" and "sabotage." His frequent bursts of eloquence in support of tactics and methods that were deemed in violation of the Socialist programme, separated "Tom" from his job, and he disappeared from Oregon to seek other fields, where his enthusiasm as a revolutionist and a "red" might be better appreciated, but "Tom" is not lost, as he has recently been uncovered as a detective for the Southern Pacific Railway Company.

His friends who have reverence for direct "action" and "sabotage" may be pleased to learn that his home is at Sacramento, California, and that Tom, who was once a Socialist, a "red" and a booster for the I. W. W., is now drawing a regular salary as a spotter and sleuth for the Southern Pacific.

Pass the limburger!

CARDINAL GIBBONS in a late address denounced the Recall of Judges as "an insult to the dignity, the independence and the self respect of our judiciary."

The Cardinal, when delivering such a condemnation, must have had in mind such honorable jurists as Hanford, Grosscup and Archbald. Every judge on the bench who has received a bribe for a decision will declare in thunder tones that the Recall is "an insult to the dignity, the independence and the self-respect of our judiciary." It is somewhat strange that the attitude of judges on the Recall with shady reputations, are in complete harmony with one of the most exalted prelates of the Catholic church in America.

Baer, the industrial tyrant of the anthracite regions, will give his unqualified sanction to the sentiments of the Cardinal, and J. P. Morgan and Hairless John of Standard Oil, will approve of the sanity of that learned theologian and expounder of the Scriptures, who looks upon the people as a mob. The Guggenheims, the Fricks, Carnegies, Coreys, Schwabs, Belmonts, and every brigand and pirate in finance an eommerec, will applaud the stand taken by the Cardinal, but every man who believes in Democracy and feels that the people should be the sovereign power, will repudiate sentiments that do but little credit to a man who prates about Christianity.

THE DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION is now in power. Professor Wilson has seized the reins of government and the people who expect so much from a Democratic administration are now on the anxious bench, waiting for results.

The eloquent spell-binders of the Democratic party were profuse with promises during the national campaign, and as the people aided the statesmen of the Democratic party to reach the goal of their ambition, it is now up to the statesmen to "deliver the goods."

The people were told that the high cost of living was due to the tariff and that when Democracy became clothed with authority that the tariff would be so revised downward that it would be possible for our humblest citizen to satisfy his needs.

Again, that great statesman, William J. Bryan, who for more than sixteen years has had aspirations for the presidential chair, will be the chief counselor of the Princeton Pedagogue, and "the boy orator of the Platte," who has grown wealthy as a peddler of "hot air" on public rostrums, has been presented the opportunity to do some execution. The people will discover that there are some orators who lack statesmanship, and fears are now entertained that "Billy of the Platte" will fail to "make good."

William has been "busting" the trusts with heated atmosphere belched from a platform since 1896, and now that he holds the most prominent place in the official family of the President, acts must take the place of oratory.

HON. R. A. DAGUE now of Creston, Iowa, who has been a contributor of many articles to the Miner's Magazine and other publications, is of that type of man that commands the admiration of men who are struggling to make this old earth a better place in which to live.

Dague sprang into prominence as a resident of California and served as a State Senator. As an editor in his days of vigor and strength, he was recognized as a writer of rare ability, but above all, Dague always commanded the confidence of his fellow-men. Standing on the threshold of young manhood, he heard the cannon's roar at Fort Sumpter and he became one of the hundreds of thousands who braved the fire of shot and shell to preserve the nation as one, and to destroy the auction block, that relic of mercenary barbarism, from which was sold men, women and children of the African race. But while Dague was a soldier in the days of his youth, yet, to-day, he is a man of peace and believes that every question that affects the race can be settled without drawing the sword from its scabbard.

During the last two years of his life, he has been almost a helpless invalid, but though he is suffering from an illness that holds him a prisoner in his home, yet, his mind and pen are active, and with the hue of death upon his, face, he is still giving the best that is in him, to plant in human hearts, those seeds of fraternity that will yet bloom and blossom into the Brotherhood of Man.

Such men are greater heroes in peace than in war.

UNDER THE HEADING, "Toilers Get Nothing," The Labor World of Spokane had the following editorial comment:

"The largest pension bill ever passed by Congress was railroaded through the House last week, carrying appropriations aggregating $180,000,000. This enormous sum is paid out to 'veterans' and their relatives for work of militarism. This bill and the enormous amount carried with it is the creation of the corporation lawyers and representatives of the big interests seated in Congress who feel it is their "patriotic" duty to look after men and their dependents who did nothing but life-destroying, property-wasting work. No pension was granted to the soldiers of industry who do the productive work of the world. Oh, no! They may die in the poor house, they and their wives and children may starve for want of a little food, proper clothing and decent shelter. They are not considered although they are the real producers—in fact produce these $180,000,000 which go to pay these pensions. Yet not one penny does Congress appropriate for their benefit. When, oh, when will you ever awaken, ye men of labor!"

The laboring people of this country get what they vote for. The Labor World of Spokane is slightly in error, when it takes the position that the "Toilers Get Nothing." The toilers get all the burdens that are wrapped up in an appropriation of $180,000,000. From the sweat of the toilers will come the values from which such appropriations are paid.

As long as the toiler votes for his master, he is entitled to all the injunctions that come from courts, all the brutalities that are heaped upon him by police and militia, and he should not complain when he gets what he has voted for.

THE FOLLOWING appeared in an Associated Press dispatch:

"San Francisco, March 1.—D. C. Jackling, a Salt Lake City copper magnate, who has come to San Francisco to live, has leased the entire twelfth floor of a new wing to be added to a fashionable hotel, for a period of five years. Jackling plans to entertain his friends during the year the Panama-Pacific exposition and his headquarters, according to terms of the lease signed today, will cost him $24,000 a year, or $120,000 for the five years. He will furnish the rooms himself, and said he would spend $100,000.

"Jackling entered the hotel yesterday and asked for the manager. "My name is Jackling," he said. "I want to lease the top floor of your new wing for five years.' Architects at work on the plans for the addition were summoned. Jackling told them how he wanted the rooms finished, and the deal was concluded in less than one hour. He left for Salt Lake City, where the plans will be forwarded for his final approval."

The above needs but a little comment. A man who refuses to recognize organized labor and who looks upon a worker as unworthy of any consideration, can receive considerable space in daily journals relative to the lavish manner in which he squanders wealth. Jackling can afford to spend $120,000 in rent for the upper floor of a fashionable hotel and he can likewise afford to spend $100,000 to furnish the rooms of that upper floor in such regal style as to command the admiration of his friends.

The $220,000 that Jackling will pay for rent and furnishings will not be earned by him, but by the thousands of pauperized slaves who work for this despot.

Men of the Jackling type will continue to live in "indolent splendor" as long as the mentality of the working people remains blind to the infamies that grow out of an industrial system that feeds a parasite and starves a slave.

EUGENE V. DEBS in an article to the Terre Haute Tribune on the "early days of unionism" in that city gives some interesting history. He shows how difficult it was for the champion of unionism to reach the class that needed assistance.

In those days the man who spoke for labor was branded as an agitator and an agitator was looked upon as a criminal.

Debs closes his lengthy article in the following hopeful words:

"There has been a tremendous change in labor unionism since that early day when half a dozen attendants in an obscure back room was regarded as a great meeting. In that day the standing of a union in the community was at a low ebb and the "agitator" was looked upon as a mischief-maker and a nuisance, and a good many people haven't changed their mind about him to this day.

"But with all that has been accomplished in the way of organizing the working class the movement is still in its childhood. It is the greatest movement ever organized since The Carpenter aroused his fellow-workers in Judea against the slavery and oppression of the Roman empire. Its field of operation embraces the habitable globe. It knows neither race, nationality, color, creed or sex. It knows only the working class, the class which through all history has fed and clothed and sheltered the world, while itself has been housed in humble cottages, clothed in shoddy, subsisted upon crusts, and worn the badge of servitude.

"Wendell Phillips with his keen insight and prophetic vision saw that labor unionism was the foundation of the only real democracy and declared that the labor movement was the hope of the world.

"Upon ten thousand battlefields organized labor has fought the fight for the right to live, the right to enjoy, the right to be free. At last the world is beginning to recognize its power and its portent and the labor movement is hailed by all thoughtful men as the movement of humanity itself toward a higher freedom, a grander civilization and a diviner destiny."

The Miners of Joplin Are Getting Active

THE JOPLIN MORNING TRIBUNE contained the following report of a meeting of the Western Federation of Miners, held at Centerville, Missouri:

"An open meeting of the Western Federation of Miners was held at the city hall in this city last night. Many miners who are not members of this association took advantage of this opportunity and attended. The meeting was largely attended and was very enthusiastic, as much interest was displayed.

"At promptly 7:30, the meeting was called to order by James Houseman, president of the local lodge of the federation. Short addresses were made by Frank Murch of Lakeside, and Clyde Berry of Joplin. Their speeches were concerning the value of the federation. The main speech of the evening was made by Marion Cope of Joplin, an organizer of the federation. Mr. Cope, during the course of his address, stated the desire of the federation was to protect the interests of the workingman, as in union there was strength. They favored forming a strong union which could control the amount of wages.

"A minimum wage of $2.50 was suggested by the federation, with a sliding scale of increase in wages according to the increase in the price of ore. However, no member of the federation would work for less than $2.50 per shift. After the address, which was well received, Mr Cope gave an offer to take the application of any for membership. He also announced that on next Tuesday, at the regular meeting of the lodge, applications would again be received."

The Joplin Tribune likewise contained the following report of a meeting held at Webb City:

"At an open meeting last night of the Webb City local of the Western Federation of Miners, held at the Newland hotel, the existing shutdown of the mines was made the theme of addresses appealing to the miners to become better organized.

"Marion Cope of Joplin, district organizer, made the principal address. He said that the mine operators, through their 'union,' had decided to show down for the purpose of curtailing production in order to force up the price of ore. That was their privilege and they were not to be blamed for doing it. 'But,' he added, 'we must emulate the example set us by the operators. We must organize and through our union work to protect our own interests.'

"The speaker said the shutdown would undoubtedly be followed by a cut in wages and unless the miners organize themselves they must expect to accept whatever rate the operators feel able or willing to offer them.

"The meeting was attended by about 150 miners, and resulted in more than forty new applications for membership. The present roll of members of the Webb City local was stated to be over 200 and there are also locals at Carterville and several of the smaller camps.

Similar meetings of the federation are to be held tonight at Carterville in the city hall, and on Wednesday in Federation hall at Joplin."

The above reports in the Joplin Tribune indicate that the miners of the Joplin district are realizing more than ever that standing apart as individuals means that the men of the mines will remain as victims of the ravenous greed of operators who know no rights that conflict with profits.

The Western Federation of Miners for many years has sent some of its ablest organizers into the Joplin mining district and at times it appeared that their efforts would be crowned with success. But when success seemed near at hand, something would occur which practically nullified what was accomplished in the way of organization. The miners of the Joplin district must realize that ere the Western Federation of Miners can help them to obtain a higher scale of wages and more favorable working conditions, it is absolutely necessary for the miners of Joplin and vicinity to put forth an effort to help themselves.

No man can help another unless the party needing assistance is willing to make an effort to help himself If that is true of an individual, it cannot be successfully disputed when applied to men collectively.

There is no valid reason why the state of Missouri should not be thoroughly organized, and there is no reason why the miners of Missouri should not command a higher wage, when they once stand together as a solid body, determined to receive a larger share of the value of the product of their toil.

Legislation in California

CALIFORNIA Assembly Bill No. 1306, introduced by Mr. Finnegan, January 31, 1913. Referred to committee on mines and mining.

An Act to protect the health of underground workers in mines and tunnels, and regulating the use of drills driven by mechanic power and the forcing out of underground mines and tunnels smoke and gases generated by blasting powder and other explosives; and the ventilating of said mines and tunnels and prescribing penalties for the infraction of such regulations, and declaring that such infraction constitutes gross negligence in case of actions for damage to health of employés.

The People of the State of California do Enact as Follows:

Section 1. All drills used for drilling in underground workings in quartz mines or gravel mines or tunnels in this state, which are driven by steam, electricity, water power, compressed air or by other means, except hand power, shall be equipped with a stream of water, which stream of water shall be forced through a hollow cave in said drill or be made to play upon the collar of the drill hole in which said drill is being worked, so that said stream of water shall subdue and thoroughly saturate all dust that may be thrown by said drill.

Sec. 2. After each blast fired in any underground quartz mine, gravel mine or tunnel, where the drill holes for said blast have been made by a drill or drills equipped with steam, electricity, water power, compressed air or by other means, except hand power, before any employé in said mine or tunnel shall be set to work at the place of said blast or in the vicinity thereof, the gases and smoke caused by said blast shall be forced out by means of suction, air fans, or other means of ventilation, and no employé shall be set to work in said mine until the air has been diluted with pure air and rendered wholesome and proper for human breathing .

Sec. 3. Any mine owner, manager, superintendent, foreman or other person in charge of a mine or tunnel who allows any drill as set forth in section one of this act, to be operated without being equipped with a stream of water sufficient to thoroughly saturate all the dust thrown by said drill, or, who after a blast has been fired from a hole or holes driven by such drill, and before the gas and smoke caused by said blast has been forced out of said mine or tunnel, or the air has become wholesome for human breathing, sets an employé or employès to work where said blast was fired, or in the vicinity thereof, is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction he shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $100 for each offense, or by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and any employé who suffers any damage to his health because of the failure to equip said drills in any underground mine or tunnel with said stream of water, or to force out the gas and smoke after said blast, as above set forth, shall, in addition to the above penalty, have a right to collect indemnity therefor, and failure to observe the above set forth resolutions shall be taken by the court in which the action is tried as proof of gross negligence on the part of the owner or owners of said mine or tunnel, the party or parties responsible for the proper conduct of the same.

Sec. 4. The provisions of the above act are to be regarded as cumulative to the laws now in force for the protection of the lives and the health of those employed in underground mines and tunnels, and not as repealing any such now in force.

Sec. 5. This law shall take effect on the first day of November, 1913.

The General Strike

XIII.—THE VIEWS OF TRADE UNION AND SOCIALIST LEADERS.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

"WHEN ONE DOES NOT WANT to play upon words," says Van Kol, the veteran Socialist of Holland, "the general strike is but an anarchistic Utopia, an idea that springs up in countries where the Socialist movement is feeble or still in its infancy. It is a dangerous fantasy of badly organized workers. For a general economic strike demands a powerful class organization, an immovable solidarity, an invincible discipline, and with that powerful trade unions, commanding large sums of money as well as numerous resources of rich co-operative societies. And the day when the proletariat possesses all these means of combat, a general strike would be the worst of methods because it would possess other weapons which are more efficacious; less dangerous to the working class and more to be feared by the capitalist class. As long as the bourgeoisie can dispose at will of the armed forces—of the police, of justice and of legislation—this anarchistic dream will not be realized, and still less will one ever succeed in replacing by this means capitalistic production by the Socialist regime, which is a result of long social transformations, of an economic evolution more or less hastened."

"Let us then repudiate," continues Van Kol, "with all our might the general strike, that harmful and murderous weapon for the working class, condemned in advance to defeat; let us repudiate this method of combat which increases the misery of the proletariat, decimates its forces and afflicts it with powerlessness. Let us repudiate the general strike as well when it has an economic end in warring against the capitalist class as when it will have a political character and will be a question of the conquest of the state. Let us cast far from us this ill-fated idea which dislocates all Socialist democratic action and stakes all on a throw of dice—all to lose or all to gain—with the certainty of losing.

"When the day will at last dawn when we shall have with us the majority of people, even without having a majority in the parliament and in the government, when the working class organizations shall form an invincible revolutionary phalanx, in that day we shall know how to conquer without a general strike, which becomes superfluous as soon as it is possible. For as soon as we shall have such a force, the working class will reorganize the state and the means of production, the hour of deliverance will have rung. But in awaiting that hour, which must come, we must not resort to a device which is sonorous but empty, which dates from the earliest times of the working class movement and causes its efforts to diverge from our old methods of warfare that have withstood the test of fire. It is our duty to unmask this anarchist method, this ill-omened tragedy, and to warn the working class against this dangerous weapon that is harmful and powerless."

"I do not know if I may be considered an authority on this subject," says Vliegen, also of Holland, "because I have been a member of a committee which proclaimed and directed a general strike. In any event, I shall put aside this peculiarity, forget it as much as possible. In my opinion, however, it is already remarkable enough that this experience transformed me into an adversary of the general strike —I who was a partisan to it. It is significant, furthermore, that my opinion is not determined by the secondary circumstances which caused the loss of the strike in which I played a part, but it is based upon facts which appertain directly to the general strike itself, and which will consequently repeat themselves in every general strike.

"What is the general strike? How does it intimidate the dominant class? They answer us: By the arrest of production. When production ceases, all social life becomes impossible. No article of food is placed upon the market, navigation and communications by railroad are interrupted, famine appears. If it is in winter, there is no more fuel. And so on.

Yes; but who will be the first to suffer from the famine? The proletarian. And who from the cold? The proletarian. Evidently it is society as a whole that struggles in such a terrible crisis. But as in all kinds of crises, it is the proletarian that suffers from the beginning and the most severely.

"We saw that at Amsterdam, in April of the preceding year. The dockers were on strike, and the transportation of provisions by railroad was completely paralyzed. The bakers were unemployed. What followed? The bourgeois sent their servants to buy provisions even into the working class quarters, and the wives of the workers saw around them the prices of food supplies mount alarmingly. The gas fitters were on strike. The reserve of gas being almost exhausted, provisions of petroleum and candles were made. But who was able to make these provisions, and who, on the other hand, remained without light?

"Here is wht one might say as a resumé: If the general strike renders life impossible for everybody, it menaces first the proletarian Whatever branch of production one may care to look at, if it immobilizes itself, it will hurt the proletarian first of all. For its own salvation, the proletarian will be obliged to resume work."

"I consider the general strike," says H. M. Hyndman, the veteran English Socialist, "as a remedy proposed by men who have never reflected upon the economic situation and upon social conditions. It is a kind of sentimental attempt to hasten arbitrarily the development of humanity. And, like all sentimental tendencies, this one also in vain."

"Organization and discipline," says Harry Quelch, also of England, "are indispensable to the success of all strikes, but a general strike would necessitate the most vast and the most perfect organization, and the strictest military discipline, if it should succeed in a serious struggle.

"In a general strike," he continues, "if a minority of workers persist in remaining at work, that will suffice to paralyze the whole movement. With only a minority organized, the danger is that it may be the majority who may want to remain at work. That would be fatal, because it would be necessary to the success of such an enterprise that there be a complete organization capable of making work cease completely on a given day, with whatever end in view, if that were possible and I doubt it! It would be magnificent. But when the workers shall be sufficient organized, determined and disciplined to make such a declaration and to execute it in that manner, there will be no need for a general strike—they will be the masters of the situation. That is why I think that although we should not discard the general strike as a possible weapon for the future, it is very probable that we shall never have occasion to use it."

"I am of the opinion," says Keir Hardie, "that a strike, even when it is prepared, may only constitute a last resort, and—I insist again upon this point—it can only be an auxiliary to a political movement strongly organized. The failures in the attempt at a general strike, for which Holland and Belgium have been the theaters in these last years, prove that the strike is a weapon with two edges, a weapon which is shortsighted, and unskillful hands can inflict serious wounds on whosoever uses it."

"I am persuaded," says Hueber, the Austrian Trade Union leader, "that a general strike of the workers in one branch of industry is possible with the end in view of trying to obtain by means of a most intense struggle and by the complete interruption of production, an amelioration in the conditions governing the duration of work and salary. But, in order to be sure of victory, it is necessary that the Trade Union organization in question be strongly centralized, that it should unite 60 per cent of the workers of its branch of industry, and that its adherents should have taken care to prepare for themselves in time of peace a very rich treasury of war.

"To the question of knowing if the general strike is good to bring about the social revolution and consequently the Socialist regime of production, I answer plainly with the negative. The social revolution is not a war cry, a fashionable byword; it is the ultimate manifestation of a phase of economic development, a phase toward the achievement of which we are working in the breast even of the capitalist world.

"Let us create," he continues, "for all the trades, powerful centralized organizations, fit to overcome all obstacles; let us occupy ourselves in joining the trade unions to the co-operatives; let us see, to begin with, that the co-operatives resulting from this union are able to satisfy the daily needs of our adherents, and let us strive, at the same time to rally to us the associations of rural producers. We shall thus have facilitated the passage from the present regime of exchanges to that which the future promises us Let us agitate at the same time on the political field. Briefly, let us take possession of all the positions that offer themselves as useful and accessible, and we shall in this way have got through a great deal of the revolutionary Socialist work in acts and not in words."

"The Socialist Congress, assembled at Dordrecht," says Vandervelde, the Belgian, "last Easter, voted, as we know, the following resolution:

" 'The condition necessary to the success of a strike in mass is the strong organization and the severe discipline of the proletariat.

" 'The absolute general strike, in the sense that at an appointed moment all workers abandon work, is impracticable, because it would render all existence impossible, commencing with that of the proletariat. The emancipation of the working class cannot be the outcome of this sudden rising of all forces; but it is possible that a strike, spreading over a large number of industries, or over industries particularly important for the economic life, may be an extreme means of obtaining important social transformations or of defending oneself against reactionary attacks.'

"It is to analogous conclusions that I arrive, basing my views principally upon the experience which we have gone through in Belgium since the constitution of the working class party."

"A general strike, in the exact sense of the words," says Destree, another Belgian, "is the concerted suspension of all work whatsoever. It is useless to demonstrate that a strike of this kind is radically impossible. If such a strike could even speculatively be conceived, it would be evidently useless, because the day when the proletariat would be powerful enough, enlightened enough, organized enough, to realize such a strike, with a view toward a determined end, it would not need to have recourse to this roundabout method, but would be strong enough to accomplish directly the object of its will."

"The question is," says Anseele, also of Belgium, "if Socialism should aspire to organize the general strike in order to snatch from the capitalist regime that which it cannot give us at this moment. Evidently no. We do not want any Utopian general strike; we know whither we are going, we want to go there surely and stoically, with the consciousness of the difficulties which may arise on our way."

"In my articles on the new party program of 1891 (Neue Zeit 1890-1891, No. 50, page 757)," says Kautsky of Germany, "I pointed out the possibility that 'under certain conditions when a great decision is to be made, when great events have moved the labor masses to their depths, an extensive cessation of labor may easily have great political results.'

"Naturally, I am not using the idea of a general strike in the sense that the anarchists and the French Trade Unionists use the word. To these latter the political and especially the parliamentary activity of the proletariat is to be supplemented by the strike, and it is to become a means to throw the social order overboard.

"That is foolish. A general strike in the sense that all the laborers of the country at a given sign shall lay down their labor presupposes a unanimity and an organization of the laborers which is scarcely possible in present society, and which, if it were once attained, would be so irresistible that no general strike would be necessary. Such a strike would, however, at one stroke render impossible the existence not simply of existing society, but all existence, and that of the proletarians long before that of the capitalists, and must consequently collapse uselessly at just the moment when its revolutionary virtue began to develop.

"The strike as a political weapon will scarcely ever, certainly not in any time now visible, take on the form of a strike for all the workers of a country. It can also not have the purpose of displacing the other means of political struggle, but only of supplementing and strengthening them. We are now entering upon a time where opposed to the overwhelming power of organized capital an isolated non-political strike will be just as hopeless as is the isolated parliamentary action of the labor parties opposed to the pressure of the capitalistically dominated governmental powers. It will be even more necessary that both should grow and draw new strength from co-operation."

"Toward this abyss of a revolutionary general strike," says Jaures of France, "the proletariat is feeling itself more and more drawn, at the risk not of ruining itself should it fall over, but of dragging down with it for years to come either the wealth or the security of the national life. If the proletarians take possession of the mine and the factory, it will be a perfectly fictitious ownership. They will be embracing a corpse, for the mines and factories will be no better than dead bodies while economic circulation is suspended and production is stopped. So long as a class does not own and govern the whole social machine, it can seize a few factories and yards if it wants to, but it really possesses nothing. To hold in one's hand a few pebbles of a deserted road is not to be master of transportation. The working class would be the dupe of a fatal illusion and a sort of unhealthy obsession if it mistook what can be only the tactics of despair for a method of revolution."

Such are the opinions of a few notable leaders of the working class movement in Europe. There is not one veteran in the International Movement who dissents from the view that the general strike will be a dangerous and perhaps futile weapon in the struggle for working class emancipation.

Haywood's Letter to Moyer

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 22, 1913.

Chas. H. Moyer, President Western Federation of Miners, Denver, Colorado.

Sir:

IN THE OFFICIAL ORGAN of the Western Federation of Miners, issue of February 6th, there appears a statement under the caption "A Near View of Bill Haywood." The same purports to be from Adolph Germer; it could only have been written with your connivance and approval; you know that what he sets forth as facts regarding the collections made by me in behalf of Steve Adams are contemptible and malicious lies.

You have in the office of the Western Federation of Miners my report of all collections made and expense account incident to the same. You know that it was not I that failed of an accounting and you further know that up to this time though nearly five years have passed, the Western Federation of Miners has failed to make an adjustment.

In view of my standing with the working class I am entitled to a hearing and vindication. It is not for you, the jealous enemy, to condemn me ex parte. The Socialist party and organized labor generally are entitled to know the truth in connection with these charges, and to this end I demand that a representative committee be authorized to make a complete investigation and report of my stewardship of the finances of the Western Federation of Miners, this investigation to cover the entire period of my official connection with the Western Federation of Miners. You are to name two of the committee of five, I will name two who will be in all ways satisfactory to the Socialist and labor movement, the four members thus appointed to select the fifth member of said committee. This committee to have free access to all documents, papers, books, minutes and files of the organization.

You must agree to this investigation or stand branded of guilt worse than that of which you would convict me.

WILLIAM D. HAYWOOD.

Moyer's Answer to Haywood

Denver, Colo., March 6, 1913.

Mr. William D. Haywood, General Organizer, Industrial Workers of the World, Vancouver, B. C.

Sir:

IN REPLY to a communication under date of February 24, 1913, signed by you, in which you refer to a certain statement which appeared in the official organ of the Western Federation of Miners, issue of February 6th, which purports, as you put it, to be from Adolph Germer, permit me to say that Mr. Germer is the best authority as to whether he is responsible for the statement, and knowing the gentleman as I do and as you do, I have no doubt, and I feel confident that you have no reason to fear, but what he will inform the public as to whether he assumes the responsibility for the statement, and also whether the same was written with my connivance and approval. Therefore, my only purpose in taking notice of your contemptible communication, which you for reasons best known to yourself, caused to be published in a miserable sheet edited by a so-called labor organization which has done everything in its power to destroy the Western Federation of Miners, an organization to which you owe your undying allegiance, before it had time to reach me, is to inform you, first, that I have no knowledge as to whether you received the collections which Mr. Germer charges you with having received or not. Second, that when you say that I know that what he states as facts regarding collections made by you in behalf of Steve Adams are contemptible and malicious lies, that I desire to hurl the lie back into your teeth and challenge you to prove that I have any knowledge whatsoever of the collections referred to by Mr. Germer. Third, I admit that there is in the office of the Western Federation of Miners certain reports from you of collections made and expenses incident to the same, but whether all, as claimed by you, I am not informed. Fourth that when you infer that the Western Federation of Miners has failed to fairly adjust any business matters as between you and the organization, you again resort to that contemptible and malicious lie which you are so ready to hurl at me. Fifth, when you charge that you have been condemned by me, you speak without authority or evidence, and as to being jealous of your standing in the Socialist movement, the labor movement, or elsewhere, I will only say that the human being who would aspire to follow in the path which you have followed, which is known to those who know you best, would be a freak only second to yourself. Sixth, I fully agree with you that the Socialist party and organized labor generally are entitled to know the truth in connection with the charges made by Mr. Germer, which as I understand, are in effect that you collected certain moneys for the defense of Steve Adams which were not forwarded by you to the headquarters of the Western Federation of Miners, and when you demand of Mr. Germer,—who is making the charges, and not myself,—that he furnish the proof or stand branded of guilt worse than that of which he would convict you, and Mr Germer requests of the Western Federation of Miners such evidence as they may have regarding this particular matter, he will be furnished with the same, but this is to give you to distinctly understand that the present officers of the Western Federation of Miners will not surrender the headquarters of the organization to you or any committee you may select to have free access to all documents, papers, minutes and files of the organization, and no one knows this better than you do,—and no one is in doubt as to your purpose in making a demand that you would not consider for one moment were you still occupying the position which at one time you occupied in the Western Federation of Miners. As to the books, they are in the custody of the Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. Ernest Mills, as you well know, and you will have to consult him as to whether he will surrender them to any one other than the Executive Board or an auditing committee of our conventions.

In conclusion, permit me to say that your attempt to involve me in this matter, as you have, will not appeal to fair-minded men, although it will undoubtedly cause great rejoicing among the small coterie who have stopped at nothing during the past five years to poison the minds of the membership of the Western Federation of Miners against me, but having failed in their contemptible work, would destroy an organization of which you, of all other men, should be proud.

As to conniving with Adolph Germer, or any one else, in making charges against you, if you will permit your memory to go back a few short years, I believe you will remember that I was not backward in expressing my own views. I have not changed and should I at any time accuse you, as has Mr. Germer, I shall stand ready to furnish satisfaction in any manner you may desire, but until I do so I shall expect and demand that you discontinue the publishing of such letters as appeared in the Industrial Worker of Spokane, which was undoubtedly furnished by you and which appeared in the said sheet, as I have stated, before the original had time to reach me through the mails.

CHARLES H. MOYER.
President Western Federation of Miners.

P. S. While it has not been customary with me to transact either organization or personal business through the public press, yet, as you have resorted to that method by having published a letter which should have been considered personal, by you at least, until such time as I either failed or refused to acknowledge the same, my answer shall be given to the United Mine Workers' Journal and the Miners' Magazine.

PROTEST RESOLUTION.

Whereas, The editors of the Appeal to Reason, a Socialist paper published at Girard, Kansas, has been made a subject of constant persecution by Attorney Bone and associates, and believing that the present prosecution of that paper is only an exhibition of official spite and a fight against a free press in a free country, and if the officials of the Department of Justice are persecuting a free press they should be brought to account for their actions. We demand fair and impartial dealings with all, regardless of opinion; therefore, we, the members of Bisbee Miners' Union No. 106, of the Western Federation of Miners in its regular meeting held February 23, 1913, do file this protest through the United States senators and representatives from Arizona, and urge that they use every honorable effort in bringing about an investigation of the apparent injustice displayed in the case of the Appeal to Reason and its editors.

Attest: PATRICK H. FINN, President.

FEDERAL COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS AND DISEASES.

Washington, Feb. 28.—A bill to provide compensation for employés of the United States suffering injuries or occupational diseases in the course of their employment was introduced in Congress today by Representative Wilson of Pennsylvania and Senator Kern of Indiana. This bill has been drawn after careful investigation by the American Association for Labor Legislation and is to supplant the present law which among other weaknesses embraces only one third of the 350,000 federal employés, grants no relief for incapacity lasting less than fifteen days, and as the most liberal benefit grants only one year's wages even for total blindness or death.

The Kern-Wilson bill includes all government employés, it reduces the waiting time from fifteen days to three, and grants 66⅔ per cent of wages during entire period of disability. Special provision is made for the prevention of accidents and occupational diseases in navy yards and government workshops, and a new feature is compensation for occupational diseases, such as lead poisoning. If Congress passes this bill Uncle Sam will come much nearer being a "model employer" and America will have one compensation law up to the standard set by England, Switzerland and Germany.

LABOR LEGISLATION.

Johannesburg, Kern County. California, Feb. 23, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

After reading the article on Progressive Legislation proposed in Nevada, as published in the Miners' Magazine of Feb. 13th.

Am sending you for publication in the Magazine a copy of a bill introduced in the Assembly of California, by Mr. Finnegan. An act to provide for sprinkling attachments to drills operated by power, and the ventilating of mines and tunnels in the State of California.

Mr. Finnegan has also introduced Assembly Bill No. 752. An act creating the office of inspector of mines; fixing his duties and powers; providing for the appointment of a deputy and fixing the compensation of both; requiring certain reports and notices of accidents to be made to said inspector, and defining the duties of the Attorney-General and District Attorney in relation to suits instituted by the inspector of mines.

I am sure by publishing the bills in the Miners' Magazine it will be of interest to our members in the State of California, and I hope will help some of our members to take a greater interest in labor legislation, and the W. F. of M.

THE GOVERNOR OF UTAH MAKES AN APPOINTMENT.

Bingham Canyon, Utah, March 3, 1913.

A few weeks ago the daily press announced that Governor Spry had selected his miltary staff The Salt Lake "Tribune" gave it a write up on the front page and featured it with pictures of the satellites, among the rest was that eminent friend (?) of labor D. C. Jackling.

That Jackling's appointment was due to his ability as one versed in the art of war—not industrial war as he is a past master in grinding out profits from the sweat of industrial slaves—none I believe will have the temerity to affirm.

The appointment, therefore, must have been made for some ulterior purpose. Some who profess to know, claim the overnor has been the recipient of certain emoluments which if true—and the writer beleives it is—may account for the Governor's action in this and other matters pertaining to the "Interests" and may account for the assertion that the Utah Copper Company controls the State and County officials.

Not since the days of Peabodyism in Colorado, has the Chief Executive of any state had the effrontery to appoint a notorious labor crusher to a position of prominence, and Governor Spry in appointing D. C. Jackling an avowed enemy of labor and the representative of the predatory Guggenheim has not only insulted the working class of Utah, but has sullied the morals of the state.

If the Governor is not acquainted with a certain "Mr. Jack" episode of two or three years ago he might profit by an investigation.

Throughout the United States there is a growing contempt for the militia. The people are beginning to realize that it serves no good purpose and no longer view it with awe and admiration, and that if there ever was any excuse for the "tin soldier" that day has long since passed.

Particularly is the working class being impressed that the only service rendered by the "tin soldier" is to shoot down working people in time of strike and all the pomp, pageantry, guilt braid, etc., will not cover up the deception, and the action of Governor Spry in his appointment will accelerate the movement that will sweep the "tin soldier" and the satellites into oblivion.

In the meantime, or until the "tin soldier" and man like target officer D. C. Jackling are consigned to innocuous desuetude all honorable and liberty loving men will shun the militia as they would a pestilence.

E. G. LOCKE.

APPEAL FOR AID.

Akron, Ohio., February 24, 1913.

To All Organizations Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor:

For two weeks a part of the 23,000 Rubber Workers of this city have been on strike against intolerable conditions existing in the rubber factories. Some of the men are compelled to labor thirteen and one-half hours; others ten and one-half to earn a low wage. Reductions of 40 per cent have been forced on the workers with the past three months, resulting in a revolt which now involves 12,000 or more, definite figures being difficult to secure. The last reduction is approximately 35 per cent. In addition to the decrease in wages, the Taylor system (speeding up) was put in force with all its most objectionable features, making the task imposed almost beyond human endurance. This last exaction will greatly increase the 400 per cent dividends now being paid the stockholders of the various rubber companies located in Akron. Some of the factories are closed, while all of the thirty are badly crippled. Unless the strikers can be induced to return to work, those now partially operating will be closed for want of stock. Wages range from 50 cents for girls to $3.50 for skilled men, ten hours and upward being exacted.

The strikers are badly in need of financial assistance, and the sooner it is forwarded the better the chances we will have of securing a speedy victory. The strikers have public sympathy and have so far conducted themselves in a peaceful, orderly manner. The rubber companies have heretofore bitterly opposed the formation of unions, and efforts have been made to organize the workers by the American Federation of Labor and the Central Labor Union, but because of this opposition our efforts were without results. If recognition is secured, it will lead to the formation of an International Union and the organization of 75,000 people now employed in this industry and their affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

Make all postoffice orders or checks payable to Ed. S. Shatzer, 15 East Long St., Akron, O., Treasurer of the Akron (Ohio) Central Labor Council, who will receipt for same.

At the termination of the strike an accounting will be rendered to each contributor, specifying for what the money was expended. The money will be paid out under the supervision of a relief committee of the strikers and the Central Labor Union.

G. W. THOMAS, President of the Central Labor Union.

B. PENCE, Secretary of the Central Labor Union.

American Federation of Labor Organizers: CAL WYATT, HENRY STREIFLER, J. L. LEWIS.

WHAT ARE WE DOING?

That is the question that some of the members of the Federation ask one another. Some of the members ask such a question from an earnest desire to know what is being done in the way of organization and what progress we are making, all of which the members of this organization are entitled to know and such members are really to be commended for wanting to know.

Who is meant by we? Of course the members of the Executive Board and organizers of the Western Federation of Miners. What are we doing? that is the question. A question that when made in good faith deserves a frank and straightforward answer; unfortunately such question is too often asked in bad faith and for ulterior motives. Be that as it may, I write this for the benefit of the membership of the Western Federation.

As one of the organizers of this organization I arrived in the Ely District on September 26th last; A strike was called here on October first and lasted about four weeks, of which, full account has been published in due time in the official organ, the Miners' Magazine.

Being that the strike was called off on the best terms obtainable, and owing to the fact, that the district was never at any time well organized, one of our locals in the district was practically wiped out of existence.

Upon resuming operations after the strike was declared off, the company, contrary to the agreement, began to discriminate against the membership of Steptoe Mill and Smeltermen's Union 233, with the result that the union went under in fact, if not in name; nothwithstanding the effort made by Executive Board member Miller and myself to maintain it.

About November 30th I was called to Salt Lake and Bingham for a few days returning to this district December 12th, taking in charge the funds and property of Steptoe Mill and Smeltermen's Union, as all officers, with the exception of the vice-president, were gone.

I then started the uphill work of rallying together the members still left working at McGill, with the object in view of electing new officers and place the local in good working order once more. This was no easy task to do. Time and again I was in the act of sending in the charter of that local, but inspired with determination I kept on trying until I succeeded to get enough members together and elected a new set of officers to take the place of those that were gone, some of whom, were compelled to seek employment elsewhere on account of being blacklisted here. Now 233 is still on the map doing business at the same old stand, and while it has not a large membership, the prospect for the future is a little brighter then it has been for some time.

Lane Miners' Union is in a prosperous condition, having a membership of between 600 and 700. The membership of this latter union are to be congratulated and commended for their activity.

By reason of the strength of our locals in this district, the companies operating here, have not revised the wage schedule, as they said they would at the time they were compelled to give a 20 and 25-cent raise, which was last fall. This revision was to take place when copper dropped below 16 cents a pound. Well, copper is now down to 15 cents, but no notice of a revision has been given as yet, and we are of the opinion that owing to the experience the company had by the late strike, no reduction in wages will be made by them at this time. If a reduction to the former scale is made it would mean a loss of about $50,000 a month to the wage workers of this district. At this writing there is about 3,500 men employed in the district and a large number of men rustling around the mines. It is not advisable for miners to come this way at this time. Experienced mill and smeltermen would stand a better show of getting work than others.

Fraternally yours,

TOM CORRA, Organizer.

Bingham Canyon Utah 1913.

On Oct. 25, 1912, there occurred in the vicinity of the United States, Mining Company property what purported to be a riot between the strikers and the scabs, who were attempting to operate the old Jordan mine, but which later developed in to what is generally believed to be an attempt on the part of the mining camps to pull off a shooting affray among their deputies, for the purpose of getting the union men on strike involved in a criminal conspiracy. There were quite a number of shots exchanged between the deputies in the canyon and the deputies on the hillside their aim being in the main directed toward the candle house which is situated close to the mine entrance. As a result of this shooting one Greek scab fell mortally wounded and soon afterward died, also a deputy was slightly wounded.

On or about November 2, 1912 there also occurred a raid similar to the one previously, mentioned, this time on the inmates of the Acropolis Coffee house another Greek establishment situated almost in the heart of the red light district, better known as the "bad lands" of Bingham. There were about forty Greek strikers sitting around the various tables some drinking coffee a few playing cards and otherwise amusing themselves while others were casually talking over the strike situation. Suddenly there appeared on the scene about fifteen or twenty of these boot-licking knee-crooking scorpions of oligarchy, somewhat resembling human beings, called deputies. This bunch of grimcraks headed by one of the most ghastly specimens of humanity that was ever mentioned in all of the world's criminal history (one SCHWEITZER by name) invaded this quiet and peaceful resort, ordered the inhabitants out of the place, and also immediately proceeded to drive those innocent men to the Bingham and Garfield R. R. Depot, for what purpose no one seemed to know. During the march to the depot in question, those boys were subjected to the most nefarious oral attacks that ever germinated in the dome of, or emanated from the oral cesspool of any putrid ogre of humanity.

They not ony drove the inmates of the coffee house to the railroad station, but also every other Greek that happened to fall in the line of march.

On their arrival at the DEPOT, there assembled about seventy-five MEN. It soon developed that the purpose for which all this trouble was brought about was merely to find out if three men who were suspicioned of being implicated in a shooting (formerly mentioned) at the U. S. Mine were amongst this bunch of undesirable citizens.

They finally selected from amongst the bunch three boys who could not even speak one word of the English language and immediately railroaded them to the county jail where they were afterwards released on a plea of insufficent evidence to convict.

It later developed, however, that the real purpose for which this stunt was pulled off, was to precipitate a riot.

With the object in view of compelling the governor to send the soldiers to Bingham thereby compelling the people of Utah to assume the obligation of protecting the mining companies in their fight against labor, as said obligation was very costly to the companies involved.

On or about one o'clock on the morning of November 15, 1912, two notorious GILA MONSTERS (one called TEX the other one whose name could not be learned, but who was reported to be a man who had served a term in the pen for WHITE SLAVERY), were participating in a debauch in one of the brothels of the red light district almost opposite the Acropolis Coffee House. It seems that these two desperadoes were mixed up in some kind of a quarrel, for it was only a short time until they both came tumbling out of the brothel in question and on landing on the sidewalk opposite the coffee house, they immediately began to yell and holler. It seemed as if they wanted to arouse somebody nearby or else calling for assistance, for it was not very long until about twenty-five more of their cossacks pals arrived. At this juncture they began calling on the inmates of the coffee house demanding that you union s— of b—, come out and go to work, and at the same time began shooting into their ranks. This immediately aroused the union men who immediately began to rush into the street in the face of the deadly fire of these capitalists criminals. Not until three or four of their number fell victims to this yicious and unexpected attack, did the union men attempt to use their arms, for protection. The shooting being continued by the cossacks. In the meantime a few of the union boys fired several shots, but done no damage whatever. Out of the four union men who were more or less wounded one succumbed, the others we are informed are still in the hospital from which it is expected they will emanate feet first.

The purpose of this disturbance still remains a mystery, as it would be impossible for the writer to portray in details all the atrocious crimes committed by the more than six hundred cossacks employed by the mining companies to shoot down innocent and defenceless union men. Will next proceed to give you an idea of how the Utah Copper and other companies involved attempted to resume operations on their properties

BY ORGANIZER ANTON A. LASSICH.

Leadville, Colo.

Thinking that the members in other parts of the country would like to kno wsomething of existing conditions where I have been working, I wish to state that when I first began organizing for the W. F. M. in March 1911, President Moyer ordered me to take up the work in the Flat River district of Missouri. I worked there steady every day, and Sundays for almost 17 months. In June, 1911, Sister Emma F. Langdon was sent by President Moyer to the Flat River district, and from that time until I left Missouri in July, 1912, Sister Langdon and myself worked together every day, regardless of whether it snowed or rained, and we made a success, by doing some of the hardest work for the W. F. M. that anyone could think of, by driving many miles to local meetings on bitter cold nights over the darkest roads (as there are no lights of any kind in that part of Missouri); the only light the people enjoy there is when the moon happens to shine. The Flat River district being a very large one, with locals situated from one mile to eight miles apart, Sister Langdon and myself traveled every night; we were always present at some local meeting on their regular weekly meeting night, no matter how great the distance or how bad the weather. On Sundays I held meetings for the foreign-speaking men, so I could talk to them in their native language, there being only four Sundays to each month, I held meetings in four different locals on Sundays. First Sunday of each month I held meeting at Benne Terre, Mo. Second Sunday at Flat River. Third Sunday at Desloge. Fourth Sunday at Leadwood. I am glad to say that those Sunday meetings were very well attended, and very successful. At every meeting from ten to twenty men joined our organization, and some Sundays more than that number. (There are great many foreigners working in that district in the mines.) In March, 1912, in company with Sister Langdon, I went to Herculaneum, Mo., where we were successful in organizing the smelter there with a long list of charter members at the start. I continued to work on between Flat River and Herculaneum, never missing a meeting of Herculaneum local every Thursday. At each meeting from 15 to 25 men joined until the membership reached over 300 in about three months' time. In July, 1912, I attended the convention in Victor, Colo., having been elected delegate from Local 225. At the close of the convention President Moyer gave me orders to go to Leadville, Colo., and take up the then President Moyer sent me back to Bonne Terre, Mo., to speak on Labor then President Moyer sent me back to Monne Terre, Mo., to speak on Labor Day, the several locals of W. F. M. having joined together in holding their Labor Day picnic at Bonne Terre, Mo. Executive Board Member Guy E. Miller and myself were the speakers that day. After Labor Day I visited all the locals, remaining one week, then came on to Denver, and after a short stay there, I received orders from our president to go to Ely, Nevada. I worked there during the strike with Brother Guy E. Miller, our executive board member, and Brother Tom Corra. After the strike became somewhat settled, there being no further need for three men to remain there, Brother Miller and Corra remained, and I went on to Leadville, Colo., to continue the work I had left. That was about the end of November, and I have remained here since, working hard every day, and meeting with very good success in organizing the men, considering the great opposition I have to fight here. During the month just ending (February) I have added many new members to this local, and I hope to add many more in a very short time.

I held a general mass meeting at Stumptown, Feb. 16 1913, which was very well attended by both men and women. I organized that day with the assistance of members of Cloud City Miners' Union, Ladies' Auxiliary of W. F. M. No. 14. The ladies take great interest in our organization, and I feel certain that from now on the women will have great influence in inducing the men working in and around mines here to join with the W. F. M. On Feb. 25 the Ladies' Auxiliary held another meeting. I installed the officers and I am glad to say that this auxiliary gives promise of a great help to themselves, and to this local union from now on, and I know they will.

The smelter here is one of the many owned by the Guggenheims, and they show their hatred for organized labor here the same as they do elsewhere in this country wherever they own and operate different smelters. There is one McDonald here who makes himself very busy among the men, telling them that if they join the union the smelter will shut down; also if they find out that any man joins the union he is told to leave the smelter, and leave Leadville also or else if the worker is willing to deposit his union card in the company office, he is promised a (good) job in the smelter. I know this is being done here, and I also know the purpose in doing such things is only to scare other men from joining our ranks. But in spite of all this, said McDonald has done and is doing, I am still on deck here, holding mass meetings and taking in new members at each regular meeting. Although McDonald wants me run out of Leadville, I want to say right now that it will take a bigger and better man than McDonald to run me out of Leadville before I am ready to go myself.

The men are working here in the smelter ten hours a day for $2. Surely if ever men needed to organize to better their condition they need to here, and I am glad to say that men are beginning to realize this fact; and, taking everything into consideration, the future looks good here for a strong organization of W. F. M. I am doing all I possibly can to help our organization here and will continue to use my best efforts to get all the men I can enrolled under the banner of the W. F. M., where they rightfully belong.

Wishing success to the W. F. of M. in all parts of the country, I remain as ever, Yours in unionism,

A. A. LASSICH,
Organizer W. F. of M.

Leadville, Colorado.

A REPORT ON THE STRIKE AT THE BRITANNIA MINES.

Last summer the Britannia Miners' Union, Local 216, of the Western Federation of Miners, applied to the Minister of Labor at Ottawa for a Board of Arbitration.

This action was taken by the union when the Britannia Mining & Smelting Company refused the Miners' Union secretary the privilege of visiting the men at the mine.

The mines of this company are on Howe Sound, thirty to thirty-five miles from Vancouver. Transportation to and from the mines is afforded by steamboat from Vancouver to Britannia Beach. The mines are about four miles distant from the latter place, at an elevation of about four thousand (4,000) feet. At Britannia Beach the company has their offices and mill. The ore is carried from the mine to the mill by means of an aerial tram.

The secretary of the union, A. C. Webb, was in the habit of going to the Britannia mine to visit the men once a month. Last summer Mr. Moody, the general manager, stopped him and would not allow him up the hill, claiming that the property was private and that the company did not wish to be bothered by visitors.

The Miners' Union maintained an office in the Labor Temple in Van couver and had in their organization most of the hard-rock men working near Vancouver. The secretary acting as delegate visited the various camps every month.

The Board of Arbitration was granted and George Heatherton represented the men, W. E. Burns the company, and J. A. Harvey the government.

The men demanded:

1. The right of the secretary and duly authorized officials to visit the men for the purpose of transacting union business and holding meetings.
2. Recognition of the union.
3. That the company live up to the provincial health act.

In regard to the men's demands the company said that:

1. They deny the right of the secretary or any other official of the Miners' Union as an official to go upon their property.
2. If the demand for recognition of the union is that there shall be what is known as a "closed shop," the company deny the right of the men to demand it.

The company makes no difference between employment of union and non-union labor.

3. As to the demand that the company comply with the provincial health act, this the company is and always has been willing to comply with.

The board held meetings in August and visited the scene of the dispute. Finally Harvey and Heatherton handed in a majority report in favor of the men, and Burns naturally presented his minority report in support of the company.

The company refused to accede to the decision of the board. Early last fall steps were taken by the union to thoroughly organize the mine. One of the men working there was given power to initiate men and collect dues. This being necessary as it was, hardly to be expected that new members would travel thirty-five miles to be initiated. The movement was kept as secret as possible, and on Christmas morning about 3 a. m. the first meeting was held. Officers were elected for the ensuing term, Kerr McNeil being elected secretary and Al Gill president. It was also decided to abandon the office in Vancouver and have the union headquarters at the mine. By the following pay day about 80 per cent of the men at the mine were members of the local.

On February 1, at a meeting held in one of the bunkhouses, a committee was appointed to see Wylie, the mine superintendent, and request of him the use of the club room for meeting purposes. The club room was really the most suitable place on the hill and was, of course, company property.

The committee saw Wylie and the latter, after seeing Moody, told the committee that Mr. Moody was still of the same mind as he was last summer: that he would not allow the men to hold meetings on the hill. A meeting was held that night.

To handle a larger amount of ore a tunnel was being driven about 1,500 feet lower than the mine. The grade from the tunnel to the Beach being fairly good, a railroad would connect the two. A shaft would, of course, be sunk between the tunnel and mine, and one of the compartments being used as an ore chute would greatly facilitate the handling of the ore and eventually abolish the aerial tram.

To initiate some of the men working at this camp, Gill, the president, accompanied by one D. H. Cameron went down one day and organized the camp. Cameron failing to report for work that night, was promptly fired.

The following day McNeil, the secretary, was dismissed. The latter case being undoubtedly one of discrimination, a meeting was promptly called to take place after supper.

The night shift at the Britannia mine start work at 7 p. m., the time office generally opening at about 6:30 p. m. When the meeting was called, the first proceeding was to appoint a committee to see Wylie and try and postpone the shift going to work for an hour, Mr Wylie always being willing to delay the shift when the club members held meetings. This time Wylie refused the men's request and further stated he recognized no Britannia Miners' Union.

The committee also asked Wylie if he would give any reasons for firing McNeil, the secretary of the union. Wylie refused to give reasons for McNeil's dismissal. He stated he had the right to fire anyone at any time. After making their report back to the meeting it was moved that a strike ballot be taken. This was eventually done, and when counted, was found to be unanimous.

A committee visited the boys at the tunnel camp and those working on the aerial tram. By 11 p. m. the mine, tunnel and tram were deserted. The following morning the loggers and saw-mill hands refused to go to work.

Everyone hit the trail for the Beach en route for Vancouver.

At the time two shifters, a powder man, one blacksmith and a hoistman were the only ones who started. The mine foreman, boss blacksmith and boss mechanic all quit.

It was learned from one of the shift bosses who came out that the day McNeil was fired Wylie had given this shift boss orders to "can" Gill, the president, and another, saying he intended to get rid of the union men.

When in town the strike committee got busy and as a result of their efforts the Amalgamated Society of Engineers (machinists), the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers called a strike on the company, the result being a tie-up at the Beach, where the power plant, compressors, etc., are located.

The employment sharks in Vancouver are doing their best to hire scabs. Their efforts so far have been practically futile, most of the scabs in this locality being busy on Vancouver Island, trying to break the coal miners' strike at Cumberland, where for the last six months a strike has been conducted by the United Mine Workers. The strike at Britannia involves from 500 to 600 men.

THE LAST GRAND COUNCIL OF THE NORTH AMERICAN PAGEANT.

America's Greatest Educational Pageant.

To unroll before the world a living page of Rome at the height of her power and glory, to present as a great picture, instinct with life, Antioch in her pride, would be an achievement before which the civilized world would stand amazed.

Yet this is Colorado's ambition—to reproduce, in all its unique details, the life of the North American Indian when he still roamed the plains and dwelt in tepees—to present for the enlightenment and admiration of the world a spectacle that encompasses in one picture the history of a race for untold thousands of years.

The Last Grand Council of the North American Indian will be held in Denver in 1915.

That such a wondrous idea should have come to the people of the Queen City of the Plains at this particular time, is nothing short of inspirational.

According to the reports of the United States Census the Indian is rapidly becoming absorbed into the white man's civilization. In fact Chief Durand of the United States Census Bureau has given it as his opinion that never again will the Indians be enumerated as a tribal race. The judgment of such men as Louis W. Hill and Rodman Wannamaker and The Indian Rights Association, which has so long labored against heavy odds to ameliorate the condition of the Indian, is at last vindicated. The Indian, who for so many centuries has been bewildered, weak and helpless, driven before the overwhelming hordes that poured into this country from Europe, is finally swinging into the current of modern progress. The young men of the Indian race of today know but little of the rites and ceremonies of their forefathers. They are more interested in the white man's arts of peace than in the savage life of their nomadic ancestors. The ancient warriors of the race alone preserve memories of the days when the vast, sparsely settled West was the Indian's hunting ground.

Each day death takes his toll from the ranks of the red man and in a few years all the chiefs and braves will have been gathered to Ke-Shav-Manito, who dwells in the Indians' "Happy Hunting Grounds." The mysterious race of whose antecedents there is no historical record, is fast passing.

The pioneer settlers, the scouts, the trappers—all the characters who played a part in the unfoldment of the great west, will also soon become but an historical memory.

The people of Colorado will gather all these representatives of a dramatic period in history into one great council. For the last time, as long as the world shall endure, will the brave, who fought back the pioneer every inch of the way, meet in council his hereditary foe. In Colorado will be staged during 1915 a spectacle which has never had a parallel in history—an all—but—extinct race will present a pageant which will epitomize their life—their occupations, their customs, their pleasures and their religious ceremonies.

Many thousands of Indians from Arizona to the Canadian border, from New York to the Pacific Coast, will be brought to Colorado to take part in The Last Grand Council of the North American Indian. The Sioux, the Nez Perces, the Apaches, the Black-feet, the Navajos, the Crows, the Pawnees, the Snakes, the Delawares, the Moquis, the Modocs, and numberless other tribes will form the vast encampment. The various tribes will form one great village, each tribe beng allotted its particular place to establish its homes and exhibit its peculiar handiwork. Suitable schools will be provided for the children and provision made for the holding of religious services by all the denominations.

Some of the most ancient relics of past civilizations will be reproduced, such as the crude architecture of the mound builders, the houses of the Cliff Dwellers and Indians' graves. The Indians will be permitted to lead their lives in their own way as far as possible so that they will be happy and contented during their stay in Colorado. The more highly educated Indians from New York, North Carolina, Michigan, and Wisconsin will undoubtedly aid in initiating the Blanket Indian into the ways of a higher civilization. A sharp contrast will be made between the past and the present modes of life, which cannot fail to convince the thoughful observer of the future awaiting the civilized Indian and the importance of extending to the weaker the helpful hand of the stronger race.

It is believed that the government will send representatives of every branch of the army service and suitable provisions will be made for them, in order that all minutae of military maneuvers may be given for the entertainment of the visitors.

An old-time western post with its settlers' store, pack-trains, six-mule teams and other things of interest pertaining to the life of the pioneer soldier will be represented.

Closely connected with the life of the Indian was that of the trapper whose daily life in all its details will be shown—the manner in which he set his traps, dried his pelts, etc.

The Pioneer—that commanding figure of indomitable courage, perseverance and endurance, who blazed the trail for the civilization and prosperity of the present day—will occupy a prominent place in the picture. The pioneer will again wind over the plain with their camp-wagons, horses and outfits. They will prepare their meals by the campfire, and in fact occupy themselves in the manner in which the pioneers did in the '60's.

An ox-team composed of eight yoke of cattle and three old Conestoga wagons, which the freighters of the plains used in 1860, will be a picturesque part of the pageant.

The cow-boy who came later, after the enterprsing men of the plains had driven herds of cattle in from Texas, will have his ranch house made of logs, and also his corrals and ponies.

No picture of western life would be complete without the miner, and his cabin wll reproduce faithfully the log homes of the thousands who sought the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Stone for drilling contests, and evidence of placer mining will give a truthful touch to the scene while the primitive gold pan will hob-nob with the last mammoth dredge. The faithful burro, "the canary-bird of the Rockies," loaded with his pack, must of course round out the picture.

One of the most important features of the exhibition will be the model farm. A suitable tract of land will be selected for this purpose—a highly cultivated, irrigated farm, showing all the different agricultural products of the State of Colorado. Thus will be illustrated what can be accomplished by irrigation and dry-farming. The finest and best developed herd of cattle, about 100 head, will be permitted to roam about the farm.

One of the most interesting plans of those who are at the head of this movement is that for an Indian Museum, which will probably be a permanent structure, (in fact it may be converted into a National Museum.) Before long the Blanket Indian will have disappeared and a collection of relics pertaining to him, and articles of his handiwork will be of inestimable value to future generations.

During the Last Grand Council the Auditorium will be open and noted Divines from all parts of the world will be invited to Denver to speak.

A pageant such as we have outlined, carried out along educational and historical lines, will be of untold benefit to thousands of school children. it will be a remarkable experience which they will remember all their lives and which wil transform the history of the west from that of a printed page into a living picture.

FREE SPEECH OR ABSOLUTE DESPOTISM; WHICH?

(By R. A. Dague.)

The Abolition Party and the early Republicans prior to the war between the states in the sixties, insisted on the right of free discussion of all questions relating to government or religion. John C. Fremont was the first candidate of the Republican party for the presidency. In the platforms of that party the declaration was made with all emphasis, that there must be no abridgement of the right of free speech and a free press. On the Republican banners in the campaign of 1856 were inscribed these words: "We are for Free Speech, a Free Press, Free Soil, Fremont and Victory." And the campaign songs contained the same words and were sung to the tune of the Marseillaise. The early Republicans were as noisy and as "revolutionary" as the noisiest Socialists of today.

Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Charles Sumner, Thaddeus Stevens and other able honest statesmen in all their speeches, declared there must be no interfering with free speech or a free press, and that no serious harm could come to a nation in which there was freedom of debate. That great man, Wendell Phillips, said:

No matter whose lips that speak, they must be free and ungagged. Let us believe that the whole truth can never do harm to the whole of virtue; and remember that in order to get the whole truth you must allow every man, right or wrong, freely to utter his conscience, and to protect him in so doing. Entire, unshackled freedom for every man's life, no matter what his doctrine—the safety of free discussion, no matter how wide its range. The community which dares not protect its humblest and most hated member in the free utterance of his opinions, no matter how false or hateful, is only a gang of slaves.

In these latter days it is well to recall the utterances of the statesmen of the past and of the noted champions of free speech. Within the past few years in many cities of the union, meetings of Socialists and working people were broken up by the petty officers of the town for discussing at the street corners questions affecting the working people. If Wendell Phillips, Horace Greeley, Abraham Lincoln, Gerrit Smith, or any of the old time liberty-loving statemen were alive their denunciation of the little petty town officers in clubbing Socialists and working people for exercising the right of free speech, would be vehement and effective.

When that time comes that free discussion of public questions is prohibited, then the people of these United States will be no freer than are the citizens of Russia, or other despotic countries; then will the working people be slaves indeed. Let every lover of liberty firmly protest against the effort of the capitalistic would-be-tyrants to prevent the people from exercising one of their most sacred rights.

Let them understand they cannot change this republic, faulty as it is, into an absolute despotism without a terrible struggle. There are some sacred rights that have been given to people by their creator worth fighting for and one of them is the right to think and to express those thoughts.

CRESTON IOWA.

"IF THIS IS SOCIALISM, IT OUGHT TO BE CAST INTO HELL."

The "Rush Springs (Oklahoma) Herald," (J. L. Wilemon, Editor) Recently said:

> "Socialist speakers and socialist writers in general have a knack "of saying things which grate upon the ears of the people of the "south. A fellow living in the great state of Iowa, whose name must "sound something like Dago, has an article in the Grady County "Socialist, denouncing the execution of negroes in the south for "nameless crimes. He takes the position that the negro fiend who "forcibly destroys the virtue of southern womanhood ought to be "given a prison sentence, where he should be treated kindly and edu-"cated out of his criminal desires. He futher says that he considers "every human being and every negro as his brother.
> Now, Mr. Dago, or whatever you call your pseudonym, we are "perfectly willing for you to claim relationship with the coon. In "fact, we believe that only a man in whose veins courses the blood "of African descent would utter such contemptible rot as that ex "pressed in the article referred to. You are undertaking to denounce "the punishment of a crime that horrifies and maddens any man in "whose veins courses the blood of the Caucasian race. You would "have the innocent victim of his beastly lust made the target for law-"yers who care nothing for the modesty of our womanhood, and "would sell it for the paltry dollars and cents of commerce. You let "the assailant spend a term in confinement, cared for by the people "of the state, while the grief stricken victim shuts herself up from "society, to brood over the monstrous injury done her. Great God! "Is this what socialism stands for? If so, it ought to be cast into "hell, with all the traducers of the southland, who harbor in their "breasts such contemptible sentiments!"

Answer to the Above.

Mr. Editor:

I am the author of the article to which the "Rush Springs Herald" objects. It was entitled "Shall Negroes be Burned at the State?" Owing to the length of that contribution, I cannot, in this article, restate in full what I then wrote. Those who read it will know that the "Rush Springs Herald" does not state my position correctly.

I said that the negro who would assault a woman is a degenerate; he was born a mental and moral cripple, probably the fruit of lustful white ancestors who assaulted their female slaves. I said burning him alive is a horrible, atrocious act; that he should be shut up in prison and treated kindly, but where he could do no futher harm. I said that the public burning of a human being by a mob of men who are themselves in a temporary, insane frenzy of mind, often intoxicated, sows the seeds of hate, revenge, and murder that, later, will produce a luxuriant crop of crimes which will curse the community a thousand fold, because it is a law of nature as certain as the law of gravitation, that hate begets hate and violence leads to greater violence. Brutality and savagery indulged in by individuals or communities put in motion powerful, silent forces for evil.

I said that I was opposed to burning negroes by mobs in a civilized country where we had courts of justice, for many reasons. One reason is that negroes have been burned alive on a mere suspicion of assaulting white women, when the fact was later ascertained that the assault was made by a white man blacked up. I said I have no prejudice against the people of any part of our great country, and that I regard every human being as my brother.

Now, I might have stated that the "Chicago Tribune" is quoted by the "Cleveland Gazette" as saying that the statistics show that not one-third of the lynchings or negroes is for assaulting women, but the larger number of them are for trivial offenses. I read not long ago of the burning to death of a colored man who was charged with the killing of a white man, but the negro said it was done in self defense. The black man was chained to a tree, and a slow fire started at his feet. The victim broke his chain and started to run. Several men rammed pitchforks into him and dragged him back to the tree. Other men got sticks having fire on their ends. With these they punched out his eyes, and one man rammed a burning stick down his throat.

Brother Wilemon, would you have enjoyed seeing a man being treated in that fiendish manner? Would you have pierced him to the heart with a pitchfork, or jabbed out his eyes with a burning club? Oh, I hope that there is no editor on earth who could be so inhuman. I would not, myself, take delight in seeing a dog or even a rattlesnake burned alive. No socialist will ever be found howling with fiendish joy about a human being while he is being burned at the stake by a lawless mob.

I ask my brother editor if it is the color of a person's skin that determines when he is a good citizen or otherwise. I will venture the statement that Frederic Douglass and Booker Washington both negroes, were more desirable citizens than John Wilkes Booth or Giteau or Czolgosz, the white assassins.

No, Brother Wilemon, I have no negro blood in my veins. I am an ex-editor. For twenty years I published old party newspapers. I wore a Union soldier's uniform in 1863. I am an ex-commander of the "Grand Army of the Republic." I once thought war and killing was right. Being a lawyer and a literary man, an editor and an author, and progressively inclined, I carefully investigated socialism. I found that its corner stones are "justice, reciprocity, a universal brotherhood, and universal peace." It proposes to establish a co-operative commonwealth in which every adult shall be a worker in some useful pursuit, intellectual or manual, and receive the full value of his labor. Its mottoes are: "Every one shall be rewarded according to his deeds." "An injury to one is the concern of all," "Of one blood are all the peoples of the earth." It opposes war and injustice of whatever kind. It is the only national party that proposes equal suffrage. It would take the children out of the mills and mines and put them in school. It would not smash the trusts, but says, let the nation own the trusts and operate them in the interest of all the people. Socialism would put a stop to stock-watering, and guarantee to all equal opportunities and a fair race in life. It would establish courts of arbitration and settle all disputes, national or individual, in a peaceful manner. It would lynch neither whites nor blacks, for to do that would be anarchy and barbarous, and socialism holds to high ideals and peaceful methods. It champions public schools, free libraries, pensions for the aged, and hospitals for the sick. It does not propose to abolish all private property, but the private ownership of public utilities It does not propose to establish either social or intellectual equality, but equality of opportunity.

Now, Comrade Wilemon, do you still think such a movement as that, with such high ideals, ought to be cast into hell?

I am an old man past three score and twelve. I love everybody, including the poor negro degenerate who was cursed before he was born by the white man. I am a brother to him and to the Chinaman, the Indian, the Hindu, to every human being. I am a hopeless invalid. Propped up with pillows by a loving wife to write this reply to the "Rush Springs Herald" criticism, I will venture to say to Brother Wilemon, that, as editor and parent, do not, I beseech you, sow in the minds of tender children hatred, revenge, and murder toward colored people or anybody else. Teach them to be kind even to animals. Be assured that sometime, somewhere, here or hereafter, you will confess that this little preachment was as true to the right as is the needle to the pole. Yes, the negro is not only my brother, but your brother also. "As ye sow so shall ye reap." "If ye sow to the wind, ye shall reap the whirlwind," for "Ever the truth comes uppermost

And ever is justice done."

With charity to all and malice toward none, I am yours for the betterment of all human beings, white, black, yellow, and red.

Creston, Iowa. R. A. DAGUE.

WANTED AN INJUNCTION.

Seeking redress for domestic troubles, a negro woman who resembled nothing so much as she did the "before taking" half of an anti-fat remedy, appeared at the office of one of the local judges a few days ago.

"I'se a wronged woman," she hissed in a give-me-back-those-papers-Jack-Dalton voice.

"What's the trouble?" inquired the sympathetic judge.

"It's about ma ole man. He's done been carryin' on high wif a lot uv dees young niggah gals, an it's got so baad twill I don't see him more'n once a week. Sompin's got t' be done."

"You are seeking a divorce—a legal separation?" he questioned.

"Go 'long, man! Divorce nothin'. Think I'm gwine t' gin 'im what he wants and 'low dat man, who despite all his cussedness, is de handsomest niggah in Willow Tree Valley, t' go skyhoofin' 'round 'mong dem gals? No, sah! I doan want no dovo'ce ner dat legal septitution yer's talkin' 'bout. What I wants is an injunction!"—Exchange.

VICTIMS OF SOCIAL CONDITIONS.

"Where there is suffering there is sacred ground. Some day humanity will understand what this means." This is a poet's thought, of course, and therefore hardly deserving of any serious notice from the sober, level-headed, rational thinker; nevertheless, it is more suggestive than many an indubitable bare fact. We certainly cannot wish to depreciate the value of clear logical thinking, for it is the foundation of all rational and correct acting, but we find that the poet's vision is not without its use in explaining man's experience.

You must have been a sufferer yourself and become conscious of the fact that you were compelled not only to pay the penalty for your own folly, but also for other people's ignorance and other people's misdeeds, in order to grasp in some way the poet's meaning. It depends largely upon the particular way in which you are looking at things, and this is determined by our conception of life in general.

To realize that he who suffers bears the burdens of others, that he suffers for the sins of society, that he suffers on account of his disability to escape the consequences of the inter-relationship of social factors, is to regard him as a victim of conditions which it is the duty of civilized society to abolish. The sufferings of men bear witness to the fact that some law of nature or some man-made law has been violated, but it is not always easy to determine whether such violation has been the consequence of pardonable ignorance, of compulsion under the stress of circumstances, or of deliberate folly, or whether the social law which has been broken is an unjust one, putting a helpless man in a position where he cannot help breaking it. Even the convicted criminal worrying his soul away in a prison cell, or paying with his life the misdeeds of a wasted youth, even he in most cases would be justified in saying that he was more sinned against than sinning.

We believe ourselves free from all illogical sentimentality in regard to criminals, but who can hide from himself the obvious fact that as every human being physically and mentally and morally is the product of his environment, of forces beyond his control, criminals are no exceptions in this respect. They, too, suffer for the sins of others, for their inability to escape from the conditions that made them what they are. In every suffering human being, human nature cries out against the social forces which forced upon it relations detrimental to its own interest and well-being.

Thus life of man is made a tragedy. The one is suffering for his ignorance which he has had no means to overcome, another pays with physical or mental pains for the brutal selfishness of others; still another becomes a victim of our social order which compels him to violate the laws of nature in order to obey the arbitrary laws of a ruling class, and all of us are suffering because we are the slaves of the things we have been making—capital, money, material interest of all kinds.

To escape those conditions we have to join hands in a resolute effort to do away with the social causes of our suffering, ignorance, moral cowardice and the exploitation of man by man, and to create wholesome social conditions based on the solidarity of the human race.—Buffalo Socialist.

SUCH CHARGES ARE FALSE.

An Answer to Mons. Walsh.

The lectures recently delivered by the Rev. Monsignor John Walsh of this city at St. Peter's church described and pictured Socialism as the horrible monster of the Twentieth Century, and showed the "evils" that would arise if such a form of government was adopted.

Now, the Socialist positively has no selfish motive; his only aim is to bring man up to a higher state of civilization and humanity, nor does he look for favors, neither from a religious or political standpoint. What do we find in the present form of government? Men occupying positions of honor who were elected to their office by corrupting the voters by the power of the mighty dollar. In assuming their offices they take an oath to honestly and faithfully fulfill their obligations and duties, so help them God. How many of them are there who do not commit perjury? Is not perjury a crime, and why not enforce the law?

Why not?

In Socialism you find neither race nor religious hatred, for such things are the seeds of ignorance and schemers are ever ready to continue to sow them with the kind assistance of the pulpit and the press.

The great world, we are told, was made by God for the good of man, and he to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, according to the teachings of the theologians of the different denominations, and if this be true, what then?

Some years ago there came to my office a gentlemen who was a director of the Young Men's Christian Association, and asked me to give him one hundred ($100.00) dollars and to make one of my sons a life member of the association. My reply to him was, "No." Civilization and Christianity has so far failed to raise man above an animal. He said, "You do not mean it?" My reply to this was, "Yes, and I will prove it." Suppose there were a million acres of grazing land and its gates were opened to the cattle of the world, and after they had entered what would be the result. They would have leaders, but would never deprive one from feeding and would feed side by side until the last blade of grass had disappeared and at last die side by side.

Suppose we take another million acres of land and open its gates to civilization and Christianity, Catholics, Protestants, Jews and to all known races and religious sects known to man. What would they do after entering thereon? How long would it be before some of the scheming element of the different races and religious sects would combine, and see how to extract from their fellow-men the result of their brains and muscles, and it would make no difference what became of him, his wife or child as long as they could grasp it and hold it. The gentleman said, "The animals knew no better." My reply was, "So much more shame to civilization and Christianity, for they certainly do," and at this we parted.

Last summer a friend of mine asked me how business was. I answered that it was fully as good as last year, although on account of recent Democratic gains through the country, business on the whole seemed rather depressed and it appeared that the manufacturers were not very eager to push things, but would be inclined to impress the working class that Democracy could not be trusted with the reins of the government. To me both the Democratic and Republican parties appear like twin brothers. They both worship at the same altar; first the Almighty Dollar, next comes the Almighty and last comes the public, or rather, the people, and as the late William K. Vanderbilt said, "The people be d——d." Yet, if a man cannot see with his eyes wide open let him go blind, for he will pay the penalty for it.

As to no unanimity of the teachers of Socialism that may be, but they all strive to elevate man to a higher position than man has ever occupied before. In the year 1898 one William Muldoon of Brooklyn, New York, published a book called "Mark Hanna's Moral Cranks," wherein he gives the opinions on Karl Marx of such men as Dr. Lyman Abbott, also of Brooklyn, New York; Professor Hadley of Yale, Professor Yates of John Hopkins University of Baltimore, Professor Gates of Iowa State College, Professor Connors of Stanford College of California, and all of these men are educators of the highest standards, and they all pronounced the work of Karl Marx the greatest work on political economy that has ever been written by the hand of man. This book of William Muldoon quietly disappeared from circulation, and there was probably a reason. John Stuart Mill, the recognized authority on political economy, writes in his second volume, page 265, chapter 7, on the probable future of the working classes. He said the working classes have taken their interest into their hands, and are perpetually showing that they think the interests of their employers are not identical with their own, but opposite to them. Some among the higher classes flatter themselves that these tendencies may be conteracted by moral and religious education, but they have let the time go by for giving an education which can serve their purpose, for the poor will not much longer accept morals and religions of other people's prescribing. As to Henry George and the late Rev. Dr. Edward McGlyn, advocates of the single tax—in order to gratify one of the worst corrupt political rings in the city of New York, a late Archbishop, also of New York city, was willing to sacrifice the Reverend Doctor and have him excommunicated from the church.

The Rev. Monsignor Walsh said in one of his lectures that Socialism would be the destruction to morality and Christianity. It is impossible for me to see it in that light. When every child will have an equal opportunity of obtaining an education and to obtain knowledge such as only the child of the wealthy parents can enjoy at present, will not higher education of the masses produce greater and grander men and women?—D. Zeiser, in Social-Democratic Herald, Troy, New York.

AM I, AS A CATHOLIC, A GOOD CITIZEN?

By William Clancy.

The Catholic hierarchy, Catholic publicists and the Catholic press stontly maintain that Catholics make good citizens of this republic.

Certain virulent anti-Catholic papers and individuals maintain just as stroutly that Catholics do not make good citizens of this or any other republic.

They declare that the logical political complement of Roman Catholicism is an absolute monarchy like Russia, since a highly centralized and graduated authority, military in nature, is the cornerstone of Catholic church organization.

In justification of their position they cite the bitter opposition of European clericalism to European republicanism. They point out the active opposition of our American Catholic church to the public school system.

We Catholics, on the other hand, defend our European co-religionists on the ground that European republicalism is atheistic. We justify our opposition to the public school system on the ground that it is Godless. We maintain that since we assume a goodly part of the burden of public education through our parochial schools, the state is bound by the dictates of an exact justice to reimbnrse us for our expenditures.

To this defense the anti-Catholic press replies that since we Catholics voluntarily assume the burden of educating our children in our own way, we have no right to ask the state for financial assistance. It is argued by this anti-Catholic press that since Catholics call their own educational tune we ought to pay the piper.

There are those, neither Catholic nor anti-Catholic, who believe that there ought to be more religion in the schools. There are also those, neither Catholic nor anti-Catholic who believe that there ought to be more religion in the churches.

We are confronted on all sides by a maze of conflicting opinions and assertions. If one asks the question: "Do Catholics make good citizens?" and one tries to answer the query, one is face to face with an intricate task.

The question naturally arises: "What is a good citizen?"

Would a protestant minute-man of the American revolution be called a good citizen?

Would a free-thinking sansculotte of the French revolution be called a good citizen?

Would a Roman Catholic Irishman of the Irish rebellion of 1798 be called a good citizen?

On the other hand, could we call an inoffensive, non-resisting, obedient Breton peasant a good citizen? Does absolute obedience to constituted authority at all times make a man a good citizen?

Do good citizens ever fight any established order; do they ever become revolutionists?

Speaking purely from a patriotic standpoint, we must confess that the protestant minutemen of '76 were good citizens and good revolutionists. And we must also agree that the Catholic Irishmen of '98 were good citizens and good revolutionists, although some Catholic clerics at the time would have denied such an assertion.

After all, it seems that religion has very little to do with the quality of a man's citizenship, since a protestant, a free-thinker and a Roman Catholic, as history proves, can be good citizens at a time when citizenship demands a lofty devotion and, perhaps, a vicarious sacrifice.

It is evident, however, that when our Roman Catholic publicists assert that Catholics make good citizens they do not intend to convey, for obvious reasons, the impression that Catholics make good revolutionists such as our minutemen were. They deny that there is any reason for revolution. It is true, they diligently admit the existence of certain abuses in modern society, but they maintain a beautiful isolation from any of the movements organized to correct these abuses, thereby feeding the fires of revolution.

They are irrevocably pledged to annihilate Socialism, but apparently they have nothing tangible to offer as a substitute for Socialism or as a corrective for modern social ills. A cardinal, an archbishop, a bishop or a priest here and there talks with delightful abandon of fair wages and just wages, but they never explain what constitutes a fair wage or a just wage.

The working class movements organized to bring a greater measure of justice along the wage route receive scant support from the clergy. The International Typographical Union, which maintains for its stricken members the best sanitarium in the world at Colorado Springs, could name innumerable pieces of printed matter gotten out by Catholic authorities on which the union label is screamingly conspicuous by its absence. At least one cathedral in America, dedicated to the worship of the Carpenter of Nazareth, was not built by organized labor.

I presume our Catholic leaders think it sufficient to remind the workers that the church is the historic friend of labor; to remind us of all the church did for the workers during the Middle Ages.

If I were ill and in the market for a health-giving medicine and a druggist were to be as indefinite in describing his cure as our Catholic leaders are in prescribing for our social ills, I should tell the druggist to dump his remedy in the sewer.

Our Catholic clergy do not want revolution. They have never wanted revolution. The clerical advisers of Louis the Sixteenth, however, did not lift a finger to prevent that holocaust in which the heads of aristocrat and priest dropped into the same gruesome bucket.

Let us have more action and fewer sermons, fewer retreats and fewer prayers. God will await our veneration until we shall have solved our pressing social and industrial problems.—Milwaukee Leader.

YEAR OF GREAT PRODUCTION.

The 1912 Mineral Output Largest in History of Industry.

Large figures, some of them clean record-breakers, have been attained in the mineral output of the United States for 1912, according to the specialists of the United States Geological Survey. The figures of coal production are the most sensational, all previous records having been surpassed by about 50,000,000 tons, an increase equal to the total production of the country forty years ago. The production for 1911 was 496,221,168 short tons; the estimate for 1912 is 550,000,000 tons, and the final figures may even reach a still higher mark.

The production of copper was also the largest in the history of the industry, the high-water mark reached in 1911 being handsomely surpassed. According to the statistics and estimates received by the Survey the output of blister and Lake copper was 1,249,000,000 pounds in 1912, compared with 1,097,232,749 pounds in 1911, the respective values being nearly $200,000,000 and $137,154,092. The production of refined copper is estimated at 1,560,000,000 pounds in 1912, compared with 1,433,875,026 pounds in 1911. The production in Arizona may have exceeded 350,000,000 pounds, not only a record output for Arizona but a record for any state for any one year.

The gold-mining industry of the United States was generally normal in 1912, but the Survey estimates indicate the smallest production since 1907, when the output was valued at $90,435,700. That for 1912 is estimated at $91,685,168. In 1909 the gold production reached very nearly the $100,000,000 mark.

Alaska's mineral output in 1912 is estimated at $21,850,000 in value, an increase of $1,200,000 over the figure for 1911. Of the total for 1912 the gold production was valued at $16,650,000. The total value of Alaska's mineral production since 1880, when mining began in the territory, is stated in round numbers at $229,000,000, of which $202,000,000 is represented by the value of the gold output.

In silver production in the United States in 1912 the indications are for a possible output of 64,000,000 fine ounces, the highest figure since 1892, when the production was estimated at 63,500,000 ounces. The high prices generally paid for silver, copper and lead in 1912 stimulated production. The average price for silver for the year is stated at 60.9 cents an ounce

In lead the preliminary figures of the Survey show a small decline in 1912 from the high record figures of 1911, the output of refined lead, desilverized and soft, from foreign and domestic ores, being 480,965 short tons in 1912 and 486,976 short tons in 1911. The value of the 1912 output is stated at $43,286,850. The domestic production of lead ore is stated to be about 20,000 tons greater than the 1911 output of 441,187 short tons.

In the zinc industry the figures show a phenomenal activity. The production of primary spelter in 1912 is estimated at 323,961 short tons from domestic ores and 14,669 tons from foreign ores, a total of 338,630 tons, valued at $46,731,000, compared to 286,526 tons, valued at $32,663,964. In 1911.

Quicksilver production in 1912 shows a heavy gain over the 1911 production, which itself showed a great gain over that of 1910. The 1912 figures are stated at 25,147 flasks of 75 pounds each, worth $42.04 a pound, or $1,057,180.

The production of iron ore in 1912 was, according to Survey estimates, from 25 to 32 per cent greater than that of 1911, the figures for 1912 being between 54,500,000 and 57,500,000 long tons, against 43,550,633 tons in 1911. It is believed possible that the record figure of 56,889,734 tons produced in 1910 may be exceeded by the 1912 output.

The United States continued to lead the world in petroleum production in 1912—in fact, produced more than all the rest of the world—and is estimated to have about maintained the tremendous record of 220,449,391 barrels made in 1911. The Geological Survey's estimate for 1912 is 220,200,000 barrels. The estimated value of the 1912 output, however, is much greater than that of 1911, the figures being $150,000,000, against $134,144,752.

URANIUM AND VANADIUM MINING IN 1912.

The figures for the production of uranium and vanadium ores during 1912 have not been very satisfactorily reported to the United States Geological Survey, and the output has therefore been partly estimated by Frank L. Hess from various data in his possession.

The shipment of uranium and vanadium ores during 1912 has been in the hands of about a dozen persons and firms, and as in previous years the ores have come mostly from southwestern Colorado, with a smaller production from southeastern Utah, between the San Rafael Swell and the Colorado line.

The production of uranium appears from preliminary estimates to have been equivalent to a little less than 26 short tons of uranium oxide, or approximately 22 tons of metallic uranium, a slight increase over 1911, when the production was equal to about 25 tons of uranium oxide or 21.2 tons of the metal. The vanadium output of 1912 seems to have been equivalent to a little less than 300 tons of metallic vanadium, a somewhat larger quantity than that of 1911.

The uranium-bearing ores were all varnotite, a variable compound of uranium and vanadium with other elements, found with several vanadium minerals in sandstones of Jurassic-Triassic age in the high platcau region of Utah and Colorado. So far the richest and largest deposits found are in Montrose County, Colo., in Paradox Valley, Long Park, the McIntyre district, and adjacent territory, extending into San Miguel, Dolores and Mesa counties. In the Utah deposits mined are in Emery and Grand counties. Deposits which were unproductive during the year occur in Rio Blanco, Routt and Moffat counties, Colo., and in Uinta and San Juan counties, Utah.

The percentage of uranium oxide (U_3O_8) in the ore varied from 0.5 to 6.32. The percentage of vanadium oxide (V_2O_5) in the same ores varied from 1.42 to 13.63. The relation between uranium oxide and the vanadium oxide was likewise variable. At one extreme was an ore that carried 8.15 per cent V_2O_5 and 1.54 per cent U_3O_8; at the other extreme was an ore that carried 5.79 per cent V_2O_5 and 6.32 per cent U_3O_8.

Of the more widely known uranium mineral, pitchblende or uraninite, a few hundred pounds were mined near Central City, Gilpin county, Colo. It was all sold as specimens and to laboratories, probably for experimental work. A few pounds partly altered to gummite and other secondary minerals were found in mining mica near Penland, N. C.

The larger part of the vanadium ore produced was a sage-green sandstone colored by the vanadium-bearing mica, roscoelite. It was mined near Newmire, San Miguel county, Colo., and the vanadium was obtained in the form of iron vanadate at the local reduction plant of the Primos Chemical Co. The iron vanadate is shipped East to be smelted into ferrovanadium.

Vanadium ores, probably volborthite and calciovolborthite, were prospected on Pass Creek near Malachite, Huerfano county, and southeast of Silver Cliff, Custer county, Colo., but no production was made.

No vanadinite is known to have been mined for vanadium in the country during the year.

Prices varied much, but 25 to 30 cents a pound for the contained vanadium oxide and $1.30 to $1.50 a pound for the contained uranium oxide where it exceeds 2½ per cent seem to have been the rule. The prices were considered too low by some producers, and their ore was stored awaiting a rise.

Most of the ore goes to England and Geramny and is said to be wanted especially for the radium content.

The price of metallic vanadium was much below former years and from $4 or $5 a pound it fell to $2.50 and $2 for the contained vanadium in ferrovanadium, undoubtedly owing to competition between American firms.

The imports of roasted sulphide ore from Peru were large and the production of ferrovanadium was probably the largest to date.

The use of vanadium steel in locomotives, automobile. and similar machinery seems to be growing rapidly. No extensive uses for uranium are known to have been developed, but the glass, pottery and chemical trades use small quantities.

POWER, AND "THE BALANCE OF POWER."

Twenty Republicans, twenty Republicans and one Socialist have been elected to the Kansas Legislature, and, in making the announcement, the capitalist press declares that the one Socialist "rules" the body, because he holds, what is called in political jargon, "the balance of power."

It may be bad manners perhaps to look a gift horse in the mouth, but when "victories" of this kind are conceded to us by the opposition they will always bear examination, even if such a practice is not in accordance with conventional etiquette.

If there was any real difference between Republicans and Democrats in essential matters, this "balance of power" might be worth having. But as there isn't, its value is at least considerably depreciated

It isn't much for a Socialist to have the deciding vote on some matter which Republicans and Democrats may happen to disagree upon. He might toss up as to which side he would throw his vote, and he could not make any great mistake.

In all probability, that Socialist only got there because the Republicans and Democrats foolishly neglected to combine against his election, and he therefore slipped through.

But they can remedy the oversight—if such was the case—by combining against him in the Legislature—and they will.

Let him bring in some bill intended to help the working class in its struggle against capitalism, and he will instantly see that combination in working order arrayed against his measure. There will be in such case no twenty Republicans on one side and twenty Democrats on the other to give him a chance to carry the measure through with his deciding vote. There will be no "balance of power" on a matter of that kind.

Yet unsubstantial and empty as that "balance of power" is, they don't even want to see him in nominal possession of it, and next time there is an election they will combine to deprive him of it, as they have done in numerous instances in the election just over.

The "balance of power" between two groups of representatives of the exploiting class means little or nothing to a Socialist. Socialism gains nothing by securing it, and loses nothing by losing it.

What Socialists are after is power, not the "balance of power." When they secure the power, they will willingly leave the "balance" to the other fellows, knowing that it will do them as much good as it does the Socialist now.—New York Call.

KENTUCKY OIL AND GAS FIELDS.

Investigations by United States Geological Survey.

A report on "The Menifee gas field and the Ragland oil field, Kentucky," by M. J. Munn, has just been issued by the United States Geological Survey as Bulletin 531-A. The geologic investigations on which this report is based were made in co-operation with the Geological Survey of Kentucky in October, 1909, and in 1911. These investigations were part of a general reconnaissance examination of the oil and gas fields of the southern Appalachian region, embracing Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, a report on which is in course of preparation. The two fields discussed in Bulletin 531-A are in the northeastern part of Kentucky. The Menifee gas field is situated in the southwestern part of Powell County. The Ragland field is in the extreme southeastern part of Bath County and the adjacent portion of Rowan County.

The principal object of this reconnaissance work was to determine approximately the structure or dip of the "Corniferous" limestone, which is the oil and gas bearing "sand" in these fields, and to see if these fields have any structural relationship not only to each other but also to the Campton oil fields of Wolfe County, which had been described in a previous report (Bulletin 471-A-1). The results show that the three pools closely resemble one another in structural arrangement, and the deductions to be made therefrom should prove of much value to oil and gas men interested in the development of other pools in this general region.

In his report Mr. Munn says, in part, that "The syncline which crosses the triangle between the Menifee gas field and the Irvine and Ragland oil fields is probably unproductive, the 'Corniferous' limestone being saturated with water. The Irvine and Campton fields are probably on the same anticline, which may prove to be the westward extension of a fairly definite anticline observed at a number of places in Morgan County."

It is interesting to note that months after the manuscript for this report was prepared a well was completed at Cannel City, Morgan County, which is reported to have started flowing at about 600 barrels a day and which is probably on the anticline observed in Morgan County by the geologist who made the report.

Copies of this report may be had free by addressing the Director of the U. S. Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

SPELTER PRODUCTION IN 1912.

Large Increase Over Figures for 1911.

The Geological Survey has just issued its advance statement of spelter production and consumption in 1912. This statement, prepared by C. E. Siebenthal, gives the final figures of output by the zinc smelters for the year, distributed both by states producing the ore and by states in which the ore was smelted, thus giving a measure of the zinc-mining industry as well as of the zinc-smelting industry. The zinc ore made into pigments is not included in this statement, hence the full extent of the zinc-mining industry is not covered. The imports and exports of spelter, zinc dross, and zinc ore are also given, as well as a list of smelters and their capacity, revised to the close of 1912, together with additions being built during the first months of 1913. A long chart shows graphically the fluctuations for the last seven years in the price of spelter both at St. Louis and at London and in the price of 60 per cent zinc concentrates at Joplin.

The production in the United States of spelter made from ore, both domestic and foreign, was 338,806 short tons, an increase of 52,280 tons, or 18.2 per cent, over that of the previous year and by far the largest output in the history of the industry. The final figures show that the Survey's estimate of production given out January 2, 1913, was too low by only 176 tons, or five one-hundredths of 1 per cent. The spelter made in the United States from foreign ore in 1912 amounted to 14,899 tons, almost exactly the same as in 1911 and considerably less than in 1910 and several preceding years. The production of spelter from secondary sources such as skimmings and drosses also made large gains, being estimated at 50,000 tons, of which 21,000 tons was redistilled, partly at the regular zinc smelters using ore and partly at plants devoted exclusively to the redistillation of secondary materials. The consumption in the United States of spelter made from ore was 340,372 tons, an increase of 60,313 tons, or 21.5 per cent, over that of the previous year. The increase in consumption was made possible by the large imports of spelter. For the last four months of the year the average St. Louis price of spelter was more than 1½ cents above the London price. It was during this period that the larger part of the 11,115 tons of foreign spelter was imported.

The list of smelters shows a total capacity of 107,948 retorts at the close of 1912, with additions of 12,216 retorts under construction. With the exception of 576 retorts, the additions are all in Illinois. It should be borne in mind that all of this capacity will not be effective for smelting ore, for several of the plants listed are devoted partly or exclusively to the recovery of spelter from secondary materials.

POETICAL

SOLILOQUY OF A FALLEN WOMAN.

I have dodged the sergeant's grafty paw,
Have fought the cold, defied the law,
Have tramped the dreary, long night through,
Stopped countless men and pleased a few,
And now I stand to greet the morn
An object vile, a thing forlorn—
A creature void of love, of truth,
A mock'ry to my virgin youth.
Scores of passionate lips I've felt,
And to as many my kisses dealt;
All men's hirelings I have been
The "pure" with me have left their sin.
I've been embraced by arms of fame,
Have been the mate to brutes of shame,
I've proved the toy to men of wealth,
Walked hand in hand with those of stealth.
For such must be the harlot's lot—
A sponge to dry up virtue's blot.

O life, as I look back, I see
What I was, and am, and still must be—
Far back, far back, when life was new,
When joys were many, cares but few,
When mother lived—O mother dear,
'Tis well, 'tis well you are not here.
Speed on, O Time, erase, erase
Of that sweet day each mark, each trace;
Nor pause too long on later scenes—
The curtain draw upon my 'teens.
I cannot—dare not—view the past;
Enough! 'tis vanished in the blast.
And now, the now in which I drown,
Where all seem glad to help me down,
Where not a hand is stretched to me,
Where not a friendly soul I see,
Where not a beacon-light will guide
Me o'er the shoals or maddening tide.

I'm mad to talk like this;
What right have I do to hope for bliss?
I who must trade my soul for coin,
Who for my bread the vilest join.
I, the damned, the vulture's prey.
A courtesan of the Great White Way.
Ere long I'll be a cast-off shell,
Waiting alone for the call from hell—
A useless jade and shoved aside
For all to sneer at, rail, deride;
No longer fit my form to yield,
A prospect for the potters' field;
But now I'll seek a bed, for when
The sun has reached the west again,
The moon awake, stars brightly set,
Fresh and fair I must be "to let,"
For e'en when there's no soul to save,
There's a mouth to feed and thirst to lave.
O God, that they who trample me
Should wear the crown of chastity!

In Memoriam.

Whereas, the grim reaper has again entered our ranks and removed from our midst, our dearly beloved brother Edward Pritchard, whose trials on earth were drawn to a close on the 20th day of February, 1913, reminding us that though today we may be in the midst of life, tomorrow we may be called upon to step into that Great Unknown from which no man returneth; and

Whereas, By the death of brother Edward Pritchard the Wallace Miners' Union has lost one of its most faithful members and the community a highly esteemed citizen; Be it

Resolved, that our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the meeting and a copy be sent to our official organ, The Miners' Magazine.

IN MEMORIAM.

South Porcupine, Ontario, Canada, March 3, 1913.

Whereas, Death has again visited our ranks and removed from our midst Brother John McGoff, who was killed while at work at the Nipissing mines, Cobalt, on February 17, 1913; and

Whereas, In the death of Brother John McGoff Porcupine Miners' Union has lost a true and faithful worker in the interests of organized labor and the uplift of humanity; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we extend to his relatives in this their hour of bereavement our heartfelt sympathy; and, be it further

Resolved, That we drape our charter for a period of thirty days, a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this union, a copy sent to the relatives of the deceased and a copy sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication.

THE STRIKE AGAINST THE SCRANTON MINE IS STILL ON AT THE TINTIC MINING DISTRICT.

NOTICE.

Miners should keep away from the Tintic mining District. The camps are over-run with idle men, 300 being out of work at the present time. Keep away, as you simply work a hardship on the men who are at work and the local union.

JAMES B. HANLEY, President.
J. W. MORTON, Secretary.

THE STRIKE at Mineville, New York, still continues, and the striking miners feel confident of winning their demands.

PRESIDENT WILSON—the man of books—tells the workers to give more work for their wages. But up to this date he has not advised the employers to give more wages for the work that the workers do.—Toilers' Defense.

THE INVESTIGATION of the legislative committee of the state of Illinois has disclosed that 60,000 women in the city of Chicago are receiving $5 or less per week as employés. It is no wonder that white slavery is rampant, for such a wage means dishonor or death.

WILLIAM J. BURNS, the detective, sneaked a dictograph into the headquarters of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen while the representatives of this organization were holding conferences in Chicago recently discussing their grievances with the railroad corporations. Burns has frequently declared that he was a "friend of labor," and when this glutton for blood-money plants a dictograph in the meeting place of the Trainmen, in order that he may be able to report the proceedings of such meetings to railway magnates who are his paymasters, there should be none to dispute the friendship of the sleuth for the working class. Burns as a liar takes first premium.

WILLIAM WILSON, of Pennsylvania, who was formerly a congressman and likewise at one time secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, is receiving many congratulations on his appointment as Secretary of Labor in President Wilson's Cabinet.

IT WAS MR. TAFT'S MISFORTUNE to be elected to the presidency at a time which called for strong qualities of party leadership in the executive office.

Where he was judicial, he should have been strongheaded; where he was kind, he should have been ruthless. But weak as he was when he was judicial, he became even weaker when he sought to be strongheaded and ride rough shod.

It was impossible for Mr. Taft to succeed. Events were against him. In other times, he would have had easy sailing, but in the storm and stress of changing conditions, the meaning of which he could not grasp, he was at the mercy of every gust of wind. His sails were rent and his rudder broken.—Milwaukee Leader.

THE CLAIM has been set forth that the Socialist party in recalling ("Bill" Haywood from the national executive committee will lose thousands of its members.

The Socialist party would be fortunate if it lost every member who stands for "direct action" and "sabotage" but the Socialist party is doomed to suffer from the presence of these anarchists who will continue to practice "sabotage" and direct action on the Socialist party.

Unless the Socialist party takes steps to rid itself of yelping windmills, there is a possibility of the Socialist party being shattered and left in a condition that will require years of effort to repair.

Jawsmiths with more froth than logic do not belong in any organization whose members lay claim to intelligence.

THE TIMBER WORKER in a lengthy editorial makes some telling points against the disrupting tactics of the I. W. W. in the state of Washington. The Timber Worker declares that at a recent meeting held at Everett, Washington, the local union of the Timber Workers secured more members in two hours than the I. W. W. has in six years. The I. W. W., like a coyote, makes noise, but fails to do anything that means progress for the working class. Men who shout continually are physically exhausted and in no condition mentally to devise ways and means by which labor can be brought closer to economic liberty.

To advance the cause of labor means real work, and work is not welcomed by professional vagrants, who would rather warble "I'm a Bum!" and rush the growler than to slight their vanity by hard work.

AT A WELL-ATTENDED and enthusiastic meeting of six crafts formerly engaged in work in Garfield and Bingham in the Labor Temple Tuesday evening a resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote reaffirming the striking at Bingham and Garfield and pledge themselves to continue the strike to its finish. The meeting was called at the behest of the Iron Moulders' Union in answer to a communication from International President Valentine who asked to know how the various crafts stood on the strike.

Representatives of the boilermakerst, blacksmiths, electricians, machinists, iron moulders and miners were present. David Cammomile and Joseph Mitchell spoke for the boilermakers; George Sanborn and Eugene Berling for the blacksmiths, W. Williams and Jessie Fields for the electricians International Vice President Ames and C. T. Nicholson for the machinists; Yanco Terzich and P. J. McKenna for the Western Federation of Miners and N. A. Hagberg for the iron moulders. The speakers were unanimous in support of the strike.

The resolution adopted unanimously was as follows:

"We move you that the representatives of the various organizations on strike at Bingham and Garfield pledge ourselves to continue the present strike until such time as it can be settled satisfactorily to all concerned; also that our international president's be informed of said action."—Inter-Mountain Worker, Salt Lake.

THE MINERS of the Joplin district of Missouri are becoming aroused to the necessity of coming together in a labor organization, and as a result of such awakening, Marion Cope, organizer for the W. F. M. is doing very effective work.

The Missouri Trades Unionist published at Joplin, in a late issue had the following relative to the interest that is being taken by the miners in unionism.

"District Organizer Marion Cope and his assistants are making great advances in the way of organizing miners' unions throughout the mining district. The men seem determined to form local organizations in every mining camp in the district and Organizer Cope is unable to meet the demands made upon him for organizing work.

"The largest meeting of the past ten days was held in Webb City Monday night, when a volunteer band of some twenty-odd pieces assisted in getting a meeting of the miners to talk organization.

"Last Monday night a big meeting was held in the Newland Hotel at Webb City, at which time fifty-six applications were taken. All these miners will be voted into the different locals. Organizer Cope reports that nearly 250 applications have been received during the past ten days, up to Sunday night last and not including the new applications taken Monday night.

"At the Monday night meeting Will J. Edens and Perle Thompson aided Organizer Cope in urging the miners to join the union. Another meeting will be held Friday night in Webb City and several prominent speakers will be present."

From the above, it can be seen that there is a strong probability of the Joplin mining district being thoroughly organized, and with this district organized as it should be, it will have a far-reaching influence in placing the men of the mines, mills and smelters of Missouri under one flag to fight for a higher wage and improved conditions generally.

DURING THE TIME that the suffragists were marching from New York to Washington, Cardinal Gibbons delivered an address to the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Raphael's Institute of Baltimore and during the course of his address delivered himself of the following:

"Here we have true women; women who know their place. There are among the women in the auxiliary many who have homes that are models. They devote their time to bringing up their children in the fear and love of God.

"Then look at the other picture in contrast. On one hand we see good accomplished in a quiet, modest way. On the other we see noisy, clamorous and spectacular ways of other women, and as an example of this I point to the hikers who were among you a few days ago.

"I am not in favor of suffrage now, nor was I when I received the hikers. I did not say on any occasion that they reminded me of Joan of Arc, nor did I compare their sacrifice to that of the noble woman of France. It seems that I have let it be understood that I urged the national Congress to hear their pleas. I said nothing of the kind."

The fact that a woman is a prisoner in her home, chained to drudgery and the care of children that taxes her strength almost beyond the point of endurance, no longer appeals to men and women of intelligence.

The woman of mental power is striking a blow for liberty and regardless of hoary tradition, "the hand that rocks the cradle" will wrest the ballot from the grip of the sterner sex.

Woman, in spite of man, has risen from her knees and is today standing on her feet, demanding that she shall have a voice in the affairs of government and that she shall have something to say relative to laws to which she must yield obedience.

The man who looks upon a woman merely as an incubator, belongs to a past age, and whether such men are exalted prelates of the church or powerful in the political life of a nation, they will be forced to bow in submission to that growing sentiment that demands that woman shall have a voice at the ballot box.

THE OREGON BALLOT in commenting on the orgies of the plutes in Chicago attending a ball to raise charity for the poor, had the following to say, editorially:

"The other day Chicago gave its annual "charity" ball. It was an obscene and rancid orgie, which, had it been given by the underworld, would have been raided by the police.

At this particular revel jewels valued at $10,000,000 were flaunted by the demimonde in high life; booze flowed like sewage, and the net proceeds which will be still further reduced before the money reaches its final destination, was $14,000.

Far more was blown in for champagne, etc., than the paltry pittance that will go to the poor.

"The "charity" ball is an unmitigated insult to the poor and ought to be resented by them with indignation. That the demi-monde in upper (?) circles deign to strip themselves half naked and cavort about a ball room in the "grizzly bear" the "turkey trot," the "bunny hug" and other lascivious performances, to provide with a handout the victims of the plutocratic piracies which surfeit them with their riches and their insane extravagances is the limit of moral perversion, and the decent people in every community should unite in protest against this "upper class" exhibition of brazen vulgarity.

"Any decent self-respecting human being would die of starvation a thousand times before he would allow himself to be fed out of that kind of "charity."

"There is not a true charitable impulse in the whole indecent exhibition."

The above is a caustic excoriation of the cream of society, who graciously condescend to dance annually for the benefit of those miserable and disinherited members of the human family, whose vitals are clutched by the skeleton fingers of want and hunger. But the caustic denunciation of the Ballot will not stop the charity balls nor the orgies of drunken patricians, who are licensed to become gluttons in the name of charity. "Charity covers a multitude of sin," for charity is one of the many evils that has grown out of the hellish industrial system that has built mansions and hovels and bred tyrants and slaves. As long as men, crushed by economic wrongs, vote for industrial slavery, just so long will there be poverty and just so long will the victims of want accept the crumbs that come from charity balls, even though such balls are a disgrace to our so-called boasted civilization.

EUGENE V. DEBS, in commenting on the arrest of "Mother" Jones, said:

"The arrest of Mother Jones at the instance of the mine owners of West Virginia for inciting to riot and complicity in murder, as announced in the press dispatches, adds another plume to the crown of that lion-hearted old warrior of the labor movement.

"The charge against Mother Jones, Paulsen and the rest of the organizers is as false as it is malicious and trumped up for no other purpose than to defeat the efforts they were making with such signal success recently to organize the coal diggers who had for so many years been under the iron heel of the brutal boss.

"The truth is that civil war has been raging in West Virginia during the past six months. The corporations not only control the state—they are the state. Their command is the supreme law. The governor is their handy man. When the coal barons whistle, the constitution is suspended and martial law prevails. The supreme lackeys on the bench promptly give their judicial sanction. The state militia is the private standing army of the labor-crushing corporations, and the soldiers move like jumping-jacks at their command. They also have a standing army of strikebreakers, called guards, consisting of seasoned thugs and high-grade assassins, and these mercenary hirelings have prodded pregnant women with their bayonets and knocked down little children with the butts of their guns in their brutal attempts to force the striking miners back into the black holes of West Virginia at wages insufficient to feed so many dogs.

"The newspapers and the churches are on the side of the corporations else they would be driven out fo the state. During the last few months Mother Jones has made her organizing headquarters at Charleston and directed the work from there. Vice President Frank Hayes of the United Mine Workers, Organizers Paulsen, Bartley, Haggerty and others have been actively at work in the same field, and in spite of every obstacle thrown in their way by the bosses, they have succeeded in getting the miners lined up for action, and this is the reason Mother Jones and the organizers have been arrested and charged with murder.

"The coal pirates of West Virginia are fighting desperately to prevent feudalism and peonage from being broken up in that state.

"The day they had Mother Jones arrested they were caught red-handed, buying up the Legislature like a drove of hogs. They have robbed the miners, debauched the courts, cashed in the Legislature, established a military despotism to maintain their black holes of industrial slavery and brought eternal shame and disgrace upon the state.

"The time has come to call a halt to these corporation slave drivers, and all the resources at the command of the Socialist party and the labor movement should be put behind Mother Jones and the striking miners, and the fight pushed all along the line until these black holes are unionized and the infamous rule of the robbers has been forever broken in West Virginia."

He Is Penitent Now

THE FOLLOWING LETTER has been sent to us for publication from Bingham Canyon, Utah, and is the lament for a man who not only committed treason to his fellow-men, but to himself.

Bingham Canyon Utah, February 28, 1913.

"It is close to five months since I became a traitor to my fellow-men. I and a few others were the first to desert our fellow-workers in the strike and go to scabbing. We now realize the enormity of our act and humbly ask to be excused and pardoned for our treacherous conduct to the conscientious union men and desire to be welcomed back into the organization. I wish to assure the members of the union that if ever I am again permitted to carry a union card never again will I become a traitor to my fellow-man.

"None better than I realize what it means to be a scab, for not only here but from my home in Italy is wafted to me the news that I am a traitor to my class and I can even hear my little boy lisping, "papa is a traitor."

"For some time I wondered how my family and friends came to know that I am a traitor and then it came to me that my name had been published in an Italian paper and copies had been sent to my family and friends. On receipt of thepapers my wife and family called me a traitor and now I am looked down upon not only here but in my home land. I keep asking myself, why did I go scabbing?

"It pains me to think that when my son comes to America he will be looked down upon because his father was a scab. If perchance he goes into a camp where the union controls he will receive better wages and better conditions, all due to the efforts of union men.

"I and the majority of the men who deserted the union feel our position keenly and if we are given the chance to once more be union men we pledge ourselves to never again be traitors.

"We realize that we are a hundred times more servile than the jackass as he will kick at his boss. But we went down on our knees to the boss and begged to be allowed to go back to work and the capitalists now laugh at and mock us.

"But we wish to serve warning that the present scabs are not so docile as the bosses think and that when the right time comes they will turn around and kick the boss. I understand now that we working men have nothing to lose but our chains of slavery.

"From to day on we are ready to break this chain of slavery. I know no one was killed during the strike except us scabs, and daily some one is being injured.

"So I say good-bye to all working men."

It may be that this man is penitent and may redeem himself, but he can never expel from his memory the fact of his treachery. He violated his solemn pledge and trampled under foot the principles of the organization of which he was once a respected member. Those who know him and have been faithful will ever look upon him with suspicion, even though he may do everything within his power to make amends for his Judas act.

The traitor forfeits the right to expect trust or confidence.

But not only will his scabbery follow him through life, but even his posterity will be reminded of the degeneracy of the parent who flung his honor and manhood into the mire, to aid industrial autocrats in their fight to enslave labor.

The Card System in Porcupine

CAPITALISM is the same all over the world. The tactics and methods utilized by a master class to hold labor in subjection are the same under the flag of a Republic as they are beneath the banner of a Monarchy. The following application blank issued by the Hollinger Gold Mines, Limited of South Porcupine, Ontario, Canada shows the drastic methods used to retard the growth and development of the labor movement.

The application reads as follows:

THE HOLLINGER GOLD MINES, LIMITED.

Name ..... Age ..... Nationality .....
Position Applied for .....
Where have you worked during the past two years? Gives dates and positions .....
Married or Single? ..... Number of Children .....
Ages of Children? .....
Where are Wife and Children? .....
Are you supporting any other relatives? .....
Are you a member of the Western Federation of Miners?.....
Have you ever been a member of the Western Fed. of Miners.....
Have you ever been an official of the Western Fed. of Miners?.....
Have you ever been "on strike"? .....
What is your home town? .....
Give names and addresses of two reputable persons who can vouch for your fitness for the position applied for.....
.....
Have you any chronic sickness or disability?.....
Whom to notify in case of accident.....

I certify the above information to be correct.

WITNESSES Date.....

.....Applicant for work.

The above application blank is the typical card of the Mine Owner's Association, and is used not only by mine operators in America and Canada, but by employers of labor in various other industries.

The jobless man before seeking employment must secure one of these application blanks and fill out the same, answering all questions satisfactorily, before he is even permitted to seek employment with any certainty of sueeess. In other words, the application blank filled out with all questions answered, is the license to the slave to seek employment.

In mining districts or industrial centers, where such a card is used, it is useless and but a waste of time for any applicant for work to seek employment unless he is equipped with a card that is an insult to every laboring man whose blood has not lost its crimson hue.

The labor movement of the whole continent must be aroused to the necessity of giving battle to the infamous card system that demands of an applicant for work that he shall lay bare to an employer the most important events in the history of his life, ere he is permitted to become a slave for an industrial tyrant.

Nuts for Haywood to Crack

AFTER FIVE WEEKS of silence, William D. Haywood discovers that the charges I made against him to the effect that he had collected funds at Collinsville, Ill., Belleville, Ill., and St. Louis for the defense of Steve Adams and according to the records had failed to turn them over to the Western Federation of Miners are "contemptible and malicious lies." He does not direct his denials to me nor to the members of the Socialist party and Organized Labor, but to Chas. H. Moyer, President of the W. F. M., and in his denial he claims that my charges could only have been written with Moyer's connivance and approval.

First of all I want to emphatically deny that Moyer had anything whatever to do with the writing of my statement, or that he knew anything of it having been written until copies had been sent to the United Mine Workers' Journal and a few other labor papers. I am full grown and not dependent on President Moyer or anyone else to inspire me to tell the truth, neither could President Moyer or "Bill" Haywood persuade me to issue a statement setting forth acts and circumstances that I am not reasonably sure to be the truth.

Haywood's denial of my charges is indefinite and evasive. Let me ask but a few questions to get at the facts. Is it a "contemptible and malicious" lie that Haywood collected the amounts that I mentioned at Collinsville, Belleville and St. Louis for the defense of Steve Adams? Will Haywood deny that the money was collected and turned over to him? Is it a "contemptible and malicious" lie that he failed to forward the money to the office of the W. F. M.? What are the "contemptible and malicious" lies?

There are two points involved, first that he received the money and second that he failed to forward it to the office of the W. F. M. to be used for the purpose stated by himself at the meetings in question, and on this I wish Mr. Haywood would be specific.

Why does Haywood write to President Moyer in connection with this matter and at the same time have his letter published in the Industrial Worker? The letter to Moyer is of a personal nature and it would have been the act of a man who wishes to be fair to wait a reasonable length of time for a reply before he sent it to the press for publication. As a rule men do not have personal letters published in the press, and the only purpose in resorting to the press simultaneously with sending the leter to President Moyer who had no connection with the affair is to injure Moyer's standing in the Labor World or to injure the W. F. M. or both. He says that he saw my statement in the Miner's Magazine, the official organ of the W. F. M. This publication copied it from the United Mine Workers' Journal. Why did he not send his denial to either the Miner's Magazine or the United Mine Workers' Journal? Why does he write President Moyer?

Haywood makes a proposition to President Moyer, that a committee of five be appointed, two by himself, which will be satisfactory to the Socialist party and organized labor generally, two by Moyer and these four to select the fifth. Since when has Haywood been appointed as an agent to select a committee to represent the Socialist party and organized labor generally? And aside from that, such a proposition is the height of absurdity, for neither Moyer, the President, nor Ernest Mills, the Secretary-Treasurer, would have the authority to turn the records in the office of the W. F. M. over to any committee unless sueh action was approved by the organization. This Haywood knew when he made the proposition and it was only because that he knew that it must be rejected that prompted him to make it. Haywood's whole official connection with the W. F. M. was not involved in my statement, but only the funds collected at Collinsville Belleville and St. Louis meetings. Since issuing that statement I have been informed that he collected money at Mascoutah which also cannot be found in the records of the W. F. M.

The meetings in question were held as follows: Collinsville, Ill., April 11, 1908; Belleville and St. Louis (two meetings) April 12, and Mascoutah, April 13. I have before me the official proceedings of the 17th Annual Convention of the Western Federation of Miners. held in Odd Fellows' hall at Denver on July 13 to 29, 1908, which give a eomplete and detailed statement of the funds collected by the Federation and I have carefully gone over the receipts for the months of April, May and June, but not a trace can be found crediting Haywood or anyone else with money collected at the places mentioned. It is needless to go over the entire files and records in the office of the W. F. M. to ascertain the facts in the case when the information desired can be had otherwise. Will Haywood insist that the records showing the money collected by him as entered into the offieial proceedings of the W. F. M. are incorrect? Or will Haywood claim that he forwarded the money to the office of the W. F. M. and failed to receive credit for same? What does Haywood mean by saying, "It was not I who failed of an accounting, etc." If he sent the money in to the office of the W. F. M. and he failed to receive credit for his remittance, did he make a complaint? In the years gone by I have, on numerous occasions, sent money to the W. F. M. for strike and defense purposes and have always been given credit for the remittance in the records of the organization, and so far as I know, everyone else who sent in money during those turbulent days to defend the members of organized labor who were in jail, was given credit for the same.

A good deal more could be said about this matter, but I shall withhold further comment until I know just what is a "contemptible and malicious" lie. If "Bill" Haywood can prove that his skirts are elear in the handling of this money, there is no one who will apologize quicker than I. I have no desire to injure the reputation of any one. I would not willfully do "Bill" Haywood an injustice. I should rather issue words of praise for any man than an indictment. I should a thousand times rather see men in the ranks of labor true to the trust reposed in them and speak in lauding terms of them. But when we discover one who violates the trust and confidence the working class repose in him, especially when that breach of trust effects injuriously the life and liberty of another member of the working class, as was true in the case of Steve Adams, we would be committing an unpardonable treason to our cause if we failed to speak up and let the truth be known. This especially when the one guilty of this breach of trust puts himself forth as the Moses who is to lead the working class out of the wilderness into the promised land. Shouting "eontemptible and malicious" lies means nothing. Abuse is the argument of a fool.

I shall eagerly await a specific reply from "Bill" Haywood in order that I might know just what is a "contemptible and malicious" lie.

ADOLPH GERMER.

The General Strike

XIV.—Conclusions.

By Robert Hunter.

(Courtesy of The National Socialist.)

IT IS OFTEN SAID that Marx would be a Syndicalist if he lived to-day. His advocacy of political action is due, the Syndiealists declare, to the fact that Marx lived before the time of great industrial organization. He was for Political action because he did not know the power of Direct action. Now nothing could be more absurd than that. Marx was a Politieal Aetionist because he was convinced of the ineffectiveness of Direct Aetion. Before Marx the sole action known to the working class was Direct Action. He was familiar with Robert Owen's one big union idea, the Direct Action of the Chartist, the General Strike, and all the Direct Action methods of the early English labor movement. Strikes, riots, sabotage, lockouts, blacklists, boycotts, one big union, low dues; every method and policy known to modern Syndicalism, Marx had seen worked out almost under his very eyes. Never since have the methods of Syndicalism undergone such a test. Yet in the face of it all—or probably because of it all—Marx came to the definite conclusion that the one hope of working-class emancipation lay in the capture of public powers. "Every class war," says Plechanoff, "is a political war. In order to do away with feudal society, the rising eapitalist had to seize upon political power. In order to do away with capitalist society, the working class must do the same. Its political task is, therefore. traced out for it beforehand by the force of the events themselves, and not by any abstract conditions." I quote the striking statement not only because it comes from a particularly gifted Marxian, but also because it presents admirably the very foundation principle of the modern Socialist movement. There is not an organized body of Socialists in the world that would not subscribe to that view, nor a single leader of prominence that would not declare that since the days of the Communist Manifesto, that thought has been the chief guiding principle of Socialism. Marxian Socialism, in so far as it involves political action, is a result of the failure of Syndicalism.

Of eourse many will declare that while the capture of public powers may be the chief object of the Socialist parties, it should not eoncern the industrial organizations. They will urge what to them appears more important, the use of the General Strike to eapture the tools of production. This matter has been fully dealt with elsewhere and I shall not attempt to rehearse conclusions that were clearly developed in earlier papers. The point to be made here is this, that wherever any great strike properly organized and carried out, has been lost, the failure has been due to the interference of public powers. The English government played a big part in breaking the magnificent General Strike of the thirties and all down through the nineteenth century every great strike that failed, after proper preparations had been made, failed through the aid given by government to the capitalists.

The history of the American Railway Union in this country furnishes us with a striking example of a superb attempt to carry out some of the doctrines of Syndicalism. It was an attempt to form a great industrial union of all railroad employés. Mr. Debs and his associates then knew little of Socialism and not one of them placed any particular reliance on political action. The force of actual conditions and the example set before them by the jealousy and craft spirit of the older brotherhoods made them industrial unionists. Their theories were born out of the necessities of the situation. And we all know what an immense organization the A. R. U. built up in a few months. Almost at its birth it was the terror of the railroad kings. Unfortunately, however, the members could not be controlled and Mr. Debs and the associate officers were forced, against their will, to enter upon the great strike of 1894. Although not prepared for a strike of such magnitude, that strike would probably nevertheless have been won had it not been for the United States government.

"It was not the soldiers that ended the strike," testified Mr. Debs before the United States Strike Commission, appointed by the President, July 26, 1894, "it was not the old brotherhoods that ended the strike; it was simply the United States courts that ended the strike. Our men were in a position that never would have been shaken under any circumstances if we had been permitted to remain upon the field, remain among them; but once that we were taken from the scene of action and restrained from sending telegrams or issuing the orders necessary, or answering questions, the headquarters were demoralized and abandoned. The men went back to work, and the ranks were broken, and the strike was broken up by the Federal Courts of the United States, and not by the army, and not by any other power, but simply and solely by the action of the United States courts in restraining us from discharging our duties as officers and representatives of the employés. At the time that I was arrested, on the 7th of July, as I remember it, representatives of certain offieers of the law, acting under the authority of the Federal offieials, raided our headquarters and seized our books and papers and my private unopened correspondence. The clerks remonstrated with the authorities, but they listened to nothing, but insisted upon bundling up everything there was about the office and taking it away out of the place to the office of the Federal prosecutor."

For the purposes of this discussion, the point in what Mr. Debs says is this: When the people have lost all control of public powers, when those powers remain at the disposal of a monarch, or of a clique, or of a class when the laws, the courts, the armies and the press are owned and controlled by the capitalists, the General Strike has not the slightest possibility of success. To believe that a majority of the workers will in the immediate future be sufficiently disciplined, organized, and educated to act in unison, and to carry on a strike for months without leaders, or the direction of a single labor or Socialist committee, is to my mind the essence of dreamland. Experience certainlyleads tot his conclusion. "The general strike has attained whole or partial success only," says Vandervelde, "when it has taken the government by surprise, and when the bourgeoisie have not taken a solid stand against the strikers. This was the case, for example, with the first Belgian strike in April, 1893, and the first Russian general strike in October, 1904. On the other hand the Dutch general strike (1903), the second Belgian general strike (1902), the second and third Russian general strikes, which did not take the government by surprise and which found little support among the bourgeoisie, have ended in checks, whic have exercised, long after the defeat, a depressing influence on the proletariat." What Vandervelde says here concerning the recent great strikes is no less true concerning the great American strikes and the great English strikes. There is immense significance in the fact that the greatest strike in our history taught Mr. Debs the necessity of capturing public powers, and that the general strikes of England, the middle of last century, taught Marx and Engels the same lesson. And is it not true that nearly every strike leads the working class toward the same conclusion? The growth of our movement is best evidence of that fact.

During the last few years the European governments have adopted a more conciliatory attitude toward strikes than has ever been known before. In nearly all the great industrial countries, except America, strikes have been allowed more scope and the unions have been allowed more privileges than ever before. In many countries the right to strike, to boycott and to picket have been granted to the unions by law. The governments, however hostile in reality, have more and more been forced to adopt at least the pretensions of impartiality They have not dared to deny all rights to the strikers or to use the more savage forms of repression, which were formerly their regular practice. We even see instances nowadays of the governments voting funds to support strikers and of the police being authorized to feed the families of strikers. The English government in nearly all the recent great strikes has fed the children, and in France the government has voted funds, after strikes have been concluded, to assist the families of those who have suffered. Now there is only one possible explanation of this marked change in the attitude of the governments of Europe toward strikes and that explanation lies in the increasing political power of the working class. Wherever the workers are strong politically, the government is increasingly careful not to take any act which will force the working classes more and more into the ranks of their adversaries. Indeed several great European strikes of recent years would have been considered failures had it not been for the concessions made by the governments—concessions which the strikes would not have been able to force from the employers. If, however, the governments knew that the breaking of strikes and the crushing of union men would have no effect upon the growth of the working class vote, if they were convinced that no matter how much they fought the industrial organizations, it would not add strength to the working class political organization, does any one doubt that every power of government would be used today, as they have been used in the past, to crush the unions and to break strikes? The working class of Europe knows well that it has two powerful weapons in its hands, and the governments have learned that it can use the vote when the strike fails. Furthermore, the governments of Europe have been made keenly sensible of this fact that wherever a strike is broken, the Socialist vote grows. For the working class, therfore, the antipolitical action policy of the Syndicalists is well-night suicidal. No working class political action simply means to relieve the capitalist class from all fear of political ruin. It means to leave that class untrammeled in its action of crushing the one and only form of revolt that the working class had chosen to employ. The attempt made to crush the unions through the Taft-Vale decision was largely responsible for the birth of the British labor party. And if the working class of America were not imbued with this same fatal Syndicalist doctrine of no class politics, the hatters' decision, the injunctions, the use of the police and the army in times of strike would long ago have meant that every unionist in America would have been an active and enthusiastic Socialist.

The preceding articles are not to be considered in any sense a critism of industrial unionism. The form of unionism which should be adopted by the working class in order most effectually to gain its ends is a matter that economic conditions will largely determine for us. And it must be understood that exclusively direct action, including sabotage and the general strike as the sole means of emancipating the working class, has no inherent connection with any particular form of organization. The unions in France adopted these policies mainly because they were captured by the anarchists who grafted on to the French movement some of their old and most cherished ideas. And this was made possible because, as I have said before, trade unionism is still young in the Latin countries and is therefore peculiarly susceptible to the same infantile diseases that afflicted in the early days the American and English trade unions.

Nor have I any desire to overemphasize the conclusions of Guesde that the industrial movement is by its very nature a reformatory movement in the best sense of the word. No other claim has, I think, been made for trade unionism by any of the responsible leaders in England, America and Germany where it is most powerfully developed. The matter which concerns me here is the effort being made in the name of "Revolutionary Unionism" to turn the working class from political unity and action back to the old methods of riot, insurrection, sabotage and crime. Since the early days of Marx and wholly because of his teaching, a multitude of capable and tireless leaders have arisen in every country to build up political unions of the workers for the purpose of capturing public powers. For half a century they have labored unceasingly to teach the workers that if they will but exercise their political power, they can win vast reforms now and ultimately emancipate the working class from wage slavery. Indeed they have repeatedly warned the workers, that to save the unions themselves and to make organized and effective strikes possible in the future, they must exercise as a class their political power. After a half-century of such teaching and of gigantic labor in building up vast organizations of the working class, the "Revolutionary Unions" appear upon the scene to destroy the present trade unions, to annihilate the Socialists party and to discredit political action. And well then may we ask, "Is all this teaching of the Socialist movement false?" Is political action useless?" "Are the methods advocated by Marx and later by the entire international Socialist movement the fraudulent teachings of selfish and ambitious politicians?" An answer to these questions I have attempted to give in the preceding papers, but I think it fair to conclude that if we admit that political action is useless, then we are forced to agree that the general strike is the sole substitute. If we forego legal and peaceable means, then we must turn to illegal and violent means. If we are to discard the methods of Marx as valueless, then we are forced to return to the methods used before Marx —methods that political action was intended to displace. Are these our conclusions? Surely there is no man living who believes that violence—the sole weapon of the workers for so many long centuries—ever lifted them on to the same plane of effective combat that fifty years of political action has placed them. Yet we have not tested indeed we have hardly yet tried the methods of political action. The masses are only beginning to see glimmerings of their amazing possibilities. Nevertheless we find those who already condemn these methods and ask us to return to the riots, insurrections and violence of the earlier days.

I frankly admit that I view such teaching with infinite alarm. To my mind it is a teaching which leads away from any possibility of working class emancipation. Violence is the product of weakness, ignorance and despair. It saps the very foundation of organization. It renders men incapable of education. And the harm that violence does reaches its climax in the reactions that follow, paralyzing and destroying whatever organization exists. More and more one becomes impressed with the motto of the early Socialist movement, "Agitate, Educate, Organize." Not one of these is sufficient alone; not even two of them are adequate. To arouse the workers by agitation is the first duty of the Socialist. But that avails nothing if it is not followed by careful and thoroughgoing education. And after both comes the work of organization. We are in the earliest stages of that final labor. We are only at the birth of labor's real power as a force in the moulding of the Cooperative commonwealth. But as our hopes rise, we hear new appeals to the old spirit of the mob—sabotage, riot, insurrection. They are all for the world like the cry of lynch 'em! lynch 'em! And if that spirit prevails the hope of working class emancipation is gone; for with that madness agitation becomes a crime, education inconceivable, and organization an utter impossibility.

Debs and Union Labor

To Whom It May Concern:

FOR SEVERAL YEARS past a report has been persistently circulated, with malice aforethought, to the effect that the house that Eugene V. Debs lives in was built by non-union labor, that it was painted by non-union labor, and kept in repair by non-union labor.

This report was first sprung in the presidential campaign of 1908 and at that time telegraphed over all the country to injure Deb's candidacy; it was revived in the campaign of 1912 and it has been given a fresh start since his recent indictment in the federal court.

Sometimes this report appears in one form and sometimes another, but however it may vary, its object is always the same and that is to discredit Debs in the eyes of union men.

The undersigned, who has lived in the same town with Debs and has known him intimately during the last twenty-seven years, having been active in union labor during all that time, now issues this statement to deny the reports above mentioned as being absolutely false and as having no shadow of foundation in fact.

These reports have but one purpose and that is not to help union labor but to hurt Debs who has worked all his life to make union labor what it is today. As nothing that is true of him can be sprung to hurt Debs, resort must be had to falsehood and slander and that is the object of these malicious and lying reports which are frequently brought to my attention and which I now deny publicly in the interest of common truth and justice.

The fact is that Debs organized most of the unions in this city and when he was grand secretary and treasurer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen his office was headquarters for organized labor unions of every kind and form. When unions needed money they went to Debs; when they were in trouble they went to Debs; when they had grievances they went to Debs. It was Debs who arbitrated all their early troubles or led their strikes over and over again, and never once did he turn his back on a labor union or a union man.

This is but a small part of his record as a union man here in Terre Haute where we have been in close touch with him for over a quarter of a century and know him for what he is.

I ask every union paper in the interest of common justice to publish this statement and help to stamp out this infamous lie. No one who utters it will dare to face the undersigned in doing so, or any other union man here in Terre Haute where the facts are known.

It is very easy to understand why Wall Street capitalists should circulate this and other slanders about Debs, but certainly no true union workingman will give them currency.

PHIL K. REINBOLD,
President Central Labor Union.

Terre Haute, Ind., February 22, 1913.

"Patriots" Should Hesitate

PATRIOTS in America, who are panting to cross the border and fight under the stars and stripes to subdue rebellion in Mexico, should remember some of the historic incidents in connection with our war with Spain. The government of Spain was repugnant to the Sugar and Tobacco trusts of this country, and giant financiers of America made it convenient for the Maine to be blown up in Havana harbor.

"Remember the Maine," was the slogan which aroused thousands of thoughtless men to discard the garb of peace and put on the armor of war, to avenge the death of 269 sailors, whose lives were sacrificed through that mysterious explosion. Strange that not a single officer, save one lieutenant, lost his life through the blowing up of the Maine.

The men who lost their lives were sailors. who belonged to the common herd, and they were the only ones who went down to watery graves, for "Big Business" saw to it, that all the officers of the Maine were attending a banquet that was paid for by those who were most interested in driving the Spanish flag from Cuba.

Again, patriots should remember that the Beef trust has millions of pounds of "embalmed beef" to unload on the government, which in the Spanish-American war, was more fatal to our "boys in blue," than the bullets from the rifles of Spanish soldiers.

Combinations in Wall Street are looking with longing eyes on the vast resources of Mexico, and these combinations are conspiring to make it possible to exploit Mexico under the folds of the American flag.

Labor is expected to do the fighting, while capitol will sit in its counting room contemplating the amount of treasure that may be gathered from the carnival of blood across the Rio Grande.

The working class of America has no interest in the conspiracy of exploiters, and have no interest in Mexico, save to break the chains of peonage that have cursed this so-called republic.

The Strike in Porcupine

One Law for the Rich, Another for the Poor.

By Sam Atkinson.

IN THE LATTER PART OF JULY, 1912, five of the mining companies of Porcupine posted a notice to the effect that a reduction of wages amounting to about 50 cents per day per man would go into effect on the 1st of August. In the McInneny mine the hours of labor were to be increased from eight to nine hours per day. The Miners' Union applied for a Board of Conciliation, which was granted. The companies apparently intended to ignore the law if they could enforce the cut, but on being notified of the application for a board, they reconsidered and posted notice that the cut would not go into effect until September 1st. The routine proceedings were carried out in compliance with the act, the mine owners and miners being unable to agree on a chairman.

J. C. McDonald of Woodstock was finally appointed chairman, and the board held its sessions and heard evidence about the middle of September, the majority decision of the board being that the scale presented by the mine owners was a just one and should be put into effect, the representative of the miners making a minority report.

The board and minister of labor withheld their decision, the report being handed down about November 10th, though it is dated October. This threw the fight into mid-winter, the mine owners, with the assistance of the board and the labor department selecting the time for the conflict.

A mass meeting was called and the miners decided by an almost unanimous vote that a general strike should be called. On the night of the 15th of November, practically all of the mines were closed. There was no dispute with the Dome or Hollinger mines, though they were paying a lower scale and treating the men like dogs.

The companies at once employed the Thiel Detective Agency to break the strike. This agency at once imported some 200 armed agents into the district. Some of these men were from Toronto and Montreal, but the greater number were from the United States. Magistrate Thomas Torrence accepted these men as special constables in direct violation of the statutes, which provide that special constables must be householders or residents of the judicial division or neighborhood divisions, the territorial division in this instance being Tisdale Township. Imagine aliens from the United States being sworn in to maintain the peace of "our sovereign lord the King," by a magistrate of the province of Ontario.

Possession of Streets.

It soon became apparent what kind of peace they intended to maintain. They were at once armed by the mining companies with pick handles and guns, and proceeded to harass the peaceful strikers. They took possession of the streets and highways and ordered the people off, and if they continued on their peaceful way, they were clubbed and man-handled.

On December 2d some Bulgarians arrived in camp, and, on learning that they had been hired as strike-breakers, they refused to go to work and joined the strikers. They went to the home of one of their countrymen to discuss the situation and have a sociable time with their friends. The Thiel gunmen, "special peace officers," invaded this home, forcibly seized these men, and, with the assistance of the provincial police, held them in custody for four hours and took them to the Hollinger mine. THESE MEN WERE THREATENED THAT THEY WOULD BE SHOT TO DEATH IF THEY REFUSED TO GO TO WORK IN THE MINES, AS WAS THE PROPRIETOR OF THE HOUSE WHEN HE OBJECTED TO THE INVASION OF HIS HOME.

On December 10th, the strikers made arrangements to hold a parade and demonstration in Schumacher and Timmins. It also happened on the same day that a trainload of strike-breakers arrived in Timmins from Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie, to whom the agents of the mining companies had represented that they were to go to work in Cobalt. On learning the true conditions of their employment, they refused to go to the mines and were taken to the Goldfield hotel, which was the headquarters of the Thiel Detective Agency, and were there held under guard. In the meantime the parade of strikers arrived in Timmins and passed the Goldfield hotel. The Thiel agents, mostly aliens, opened fire upon the peaceful procession of miners, who were taxpayers, and who were alone responsible for the building of the township. Two men were wounded and two more were shot later in the day.

Justice?

It is interesting to note the way in which Torrence handed out justice to the strikers and the gunmen when the cases came into Court. Peaceful workmen had trumped up charges preferred against them. They received severe penalties and were warned by the Court that they would get the limit if they were brought before the court on any charge that might possibly be traced to the strike. Note the treatment of the Thiel aliens. Of three of these men who were brought before Magistrate Torrence, two were let go and the third was held in $1,000 bail. He is evidently back in the United States and will never be brought for trial. In this connection mention may be made of the two Massiola brothers, recruiting agents for strike-breakers, who were let off with a fine of $100 each for threatening to shoot men whom they could not induce to act as scabs, and against whom the evidence was clear, while Bert Habie and other strikers were given severe penalties with no evidence against them except the testimony of these Thiel thugs.

Magistrate Torrence stated in Court one day at Timmins when the evidence showed tht the Thiel men were mostly aliens, that he would order Superintendent White to muster them in Court the next day so that their records could be looked into. This muster never took place

From this time on the Thiel men were in bad repute with the general public, and the provincial police, headed by Chief Colbeck, became jealous of the reputation they were making. Colbeck was anxious for his men to distinguish themselves, so the authority of the Thiel men was limited and they were ordered to confine themselves more closely to the companies' properties.

The provincial police from this time acted as scab herders for the companies, becoming escorts to the barred and locked special trains which were arriving in the district with strike-breakers. They did everything possible to harrass and intimidate the strikers.

On December 20th train No. 47 from Toronto, arrived with sixteen strike-breakers aboard the Pullman "Inverness." The police boarded the train at once and proceeded to throw off all who wished to board the train. They were apparently afraid the strikers would get an opportunity to talk to the men who were coming in, and would be successful in convincing them they were working against their own class interests, and would probably get them to join the strikers, as they had done many times before.

Strikers Sent Down.

It was upon this occasion the row occurred which resulted in four of the strikers being sent to jail. These men are now serving six months at hard labor for unlawful assembly. There is ample proof that the police were the only ones who engaged in anything unlawful. Chief Colbeck himself was seen to deliberately strike a man, inflicting a wound upon his head. Afterwards he declared that he could not understand how the man had come by his wound. The chief evidently wanted to make up for the lost honors the alien Thiel agents had stolen from him. He is a brave man when he has a chance to strike a man in the dark, but he is a wonderful coward when it comes to looking honest men in the face.

The court records alone will show that the trial was unlawful, the evidence incomplete, and the punishment misplaced. The Miners' Union engaged a stenographer, Miss Baker of Golden City, to take the evidence at the trial, but she has never furnished the copies of it, though she took her pay before the trial came off. The only reference that can be made is that she has succumbed to other influence.

One remarkable feature of this strike has been the hatred displayed by the provincial police for the miners who have come from southern Europe. They have made repeated efforts to split the workers on race lines.

Limited space forbids my dealing this time with the cases under the "Industrial Disputes Investigating Acts." Three of the men in prison have been paroled by the minister of justice, but four men are serving a sentence of six months each, with hard labor, in the Central prison, Toronto, on the charge of "unlawful assembly." From the testimony of scores of witnesses I am convinced that these men are perfectly innocent and that the only men who have been guilty of breaking the law in the Porcupine strike are the Thiel agents, Chief Colbeck and the provincial police and Magistrate Torrence.

The Constitution a Corpse

THE SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS of West Virginia, in the case of "Mother" Jones, Paul J. Paulson, Charles H. Boswell and Charles Battley, has handed down a decision which shoots a hole in that sacred document known as the Constitution. It is presumed that civil authority is supreme, but it seems that a military commission in the state of West Virginia is more potent in its mandates that those so-called inalienable rights that are said to be guaranteed by that charter of human freedom, known as the Constitution.

Judge George Poffenberger, in handing down the decision, said:

> "We think that, inasmuch as the statute says the governor may arrest and detain persons who are aiding and abetting insurrection until the insurrection is suppressed and order restored, it authorizes him to do so in such cases as this, and there is not a violation of the constitutional provision against the preservation of life, liberty and property without due process of law."

The parties held by the Military Commission were not in the strike zone when arrested, but were seized by the civil authorities and handed over to the military. Were the parties arrested by the civil authorities and placed in the custody of the militia of that element in our society whose bank accounts made it possible for them to bribe a Legislature in the purchase of a seat in the United States Senate, there is no reason to believe that the Supreme Court of Appeals of the state of West Virginia would hold that a Military Commission had the right to sit as a court and pass judgment on acts alleged to have been committed in violation of law. Had the coal barons been held by the state militia and their attorneys had made application for a writ of habeas corpus to the Supreme Court of Appeals, there is no question in the minds of observing men but that the writ would have been granted and the military ordered to release the prisoners. But "Mother" Jones, Paulson, Boswell and Battley are not of that type of citizenship that are conceded constitutional rights, but are looked upon, even by judicial tribunals, as "undesirable," simply because they are engaged in a battle to secure some justice for the oppressed and starving victims of wage slavery.

This case will be fought to a finish, and when the fight is won the laboring men and women of a nation will have a clearer conception of a hellish system that blinds the courts to human rights and makes a farce of our boasted organic law.

The Pittsburg Leader, in an editorial on West Virginia, paints the situation in the following words:

> "West Virginia is the Mexico of the North. Kanawha county is the black spot on the map of the United States. Paint Creek and Cabin Creek is darkest America, the Siberia of the greatest republic in the world. Savagery stalks through West Virginia and reaches its climax in Kanawha county, unafraid and unmolested, because the very government itself is savage and lawless. West Virginia belongs to the Coal Operators' Association. They have the money and they have the political government by the throat, just as brutally as they have exploited coal miners held in slavery. The political government is only the executive committee of the Coal Operators' Association. The hard, raw truth is that no man in Paint Creek and Cabin Creek regions is allowed to even show sympathy for the miner, much less put that sympathy into words. He is a condemned and marked man if some little act even hints that he has a human sympathy with human surroundings if the poor sufferer be only a miner."

Chicago Under the Searchlight

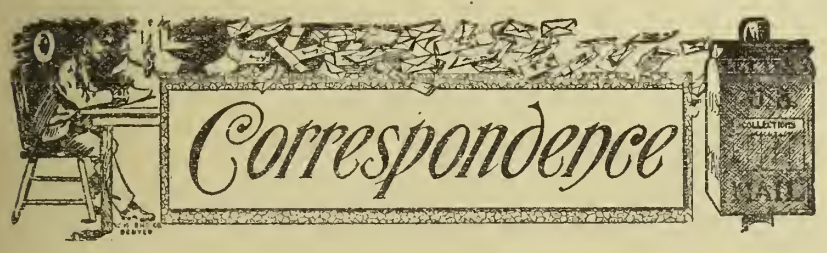
THE INVESTIGATIONS that have been carried on in Chicago by a legislative committee of the state of Illinois have attracted the attention of the country, and the daily journals have been forced to publish at least some of the facts that have been uncovered by the committee.

The great department stores of Chicago, where women are paid the princely salary of $5 per week, have been scrutinized closely, and a number of the owners and managers of these mercantile institutions have been summoned by the committee and commanded to answer questions, whose answers reflected but little credit on the methods of "Big Business." Men powerful in the commerce and finance of a nation were forced to admit that the wages paid to girls and women in the departments stores of Chicago were inadequate to protect a woman in the maintenance of her honor.

These potentates in finance and commerce to mitigate their callous heartlessness towards their employés, declared that they made annual gifts towards their employés and likewise contributed towards charity organizations. The revelations that have resulted from the investigations held at Chicago have bordered almost on the sensational, and these disclosures will be followed by similar investigations in every city of importance in America.

The pestilence of vice and immorality is causing consternation, and earnest men and women are determined that mills, factories and stores, where women are employed on paltry wages that bid for dishonor, shall be probed, so that the citizenship of this country may know where to place the blame for the hundreds of thousands of social outcasts that are now inmates of dens of shame.

Such investigations will disclose the cause that populates "red-light" districts, and when the cause becomes once apparent to the millions of honest men and women of a continent there will be such action as will minimize the moral malaria that can be seen in every town and city of the United States.



INFORMATION WANTED.

The partner and friend of James Daly, who worked with him in Park City, Utah, in 1892, desires to know his address. Address Box 742, Tonopah, Nevada.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Bingham Canyon, Utah, February 28, 1913.

Information wanted of Mike Harrington, who transferred to Bingham Miners' Union No. 67 February 11, 1911, from Round Mountain, Nevada. Last heard of was in Mullan, Idaho, February 12, 1912. Address John Strasser, Box N, Bingham, Utah. 4t

INFORMATION WANTED.

Information is wanted of the whereabouts of James Dohoney, who formerly worked as a miner at Black, Hawk, Central and Leadville, Colorado. About four years ago left Denver and went to Butte, Montana, and worked there in the mines for nearly two years. He is presumed to have left Butte, Montana, about two years ago, and since then his relatives have lost all trace of him. Anyone knowing his present address will please write to William McGuire, 2332 Larimer Street, Denver, Colorado.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Albany, New York, March 12, 1913.

Mr. Ernest Mills, 605 Railroad Building, Denver, Colorado:

Dear Sir—I am asking your aid in trying to locate one Hugh Quinn, who is, or was, a member of the Western Federation of Miners, and up to five years ago he had been employed near Tonopah, Nevada, in some of the mines there, and at that time (five years ago) worked at the mining business in that section being very dull. Mr. Quinn came east, and located here in Albany, New York, for a period of about six months, and then returned to the West, and located in the state of Colorado at a small mining town, the name of which I do not know, but was southwest of Denver, and whose death has been reported to his relatives in Ireland. I would like to locate, if possible, if he is alive, and to ascertain, for a certainty if he is dead, as he has two sisters living here, one of whom is my wife; and they are anxious to find out whether Hugh Quinn is alive or dead.

Hoping that you can give me some definite information about Mr. Quinn, and whatever success you may have will be greatly appreciated by his sisters for your efforts in trying to locate him. I beg to remain. Fraternally yours.

REPORT OF EMMA F. LANGDON.

St. Louis, Mo., March 6. 1913.

Editor The Miners' Magazine:

In my last report, which was very lengthy, I gave a history of the organization work in Illinois from July of last year up to February of this. Since I sent in that report we have been successful in organizing the smelter in St. Louis. The smelter is located in South St. Louis (or Carondelet, as some call it) and is a zinc plant employing about 225 men. It is called the Edgar Zinc Smelting Co. The first meeting for the purpose of organizing was held February 14th. Since that date we have held at least two meetings each week, and sometimes three, for the purpose of giving all an opportunity to attend. The application for a charter had sixty names enrolled—all Spanish. At this writing every member is Spanish; there are some Polish and a few Americans working there that we hope to enlist soon.

At the meeting held last Monday, March 3d, I sold eleven W. F. M. buttons and could have sold many more if I had had more. I am very proud of this local; they take so much interest in the work. Many of the men have immigrated to this country on account of the strike in the zinc smelter in Spain and they are sending money back to help their brothers that have been on strike there five months. I don't believe men that cross the ocean rather than compromise or scab will be easily led astray if they are once enrolled under the banner of the W. F. M. Nearly all of the Spanish employed in Sandoval, Collinsville, Ill., and St. Louis, Mo., came from the same vicinity in Spain, all know each other, and the men at Hillsboro are also their former neighbors and friends, and when we meet success in one camp it assists in organizing another.

Hillsboro, Ill., will be the next in line, and I hope we can soon launch a smeltermen's union there. There is one smelter right in town and another within two miles at Taylor Springs. The latter is an American Smelting Company's plant and we will probably meet considerable opposition from them, but we already have a few names enrolled for a local in Hillsboro and also in Danville. The work is being pushed as rapidly as possible and prospects are good at this time for success. The Alton local added two new members recently and two of our new members secured by correspondence were discharged. Some way the smelter management discovered they were members, although they have never attended a meeting. Collinsville No. 207 secured forty-eight new members in February and are getting along splendidly in every way. The local voted to affiliate with the Central Trades and Labor Council and elected delegates and alternates to represent them in this body. All but six of the new members secured there in February were Spanish. I do not know what unpleasant experience may possibly cause me to change my mind, but at present I would much rather undertake to organize Spanish smeltermen than the so-called American. The employés in Alton are practically all American, the only smelter in Illinois where only that nationality are employed, and I have done enough work there to have every man, woman and child organized, and yet they are the most servile to the tyrannical smelter manager and we have the smallest local there, and yet they have had the very best opportunity—a nice place to meet donated to them, the endorsement of the other organizations, and in spite of that they are either indifferent or afraid, or both. We are not going to give up the fight, though, until they join. Fraternally, EMMA F. LANGDON,

Organizer.

A REPORT FROM PORCUPINE, ONTARIO.

South Porcupine, Ontario, Canada, March 6, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

The writer will attempt to contrast the acts of the workers and the capitalists in the great fire of 1911, show the relation between the happenings of that time and the present, together with some information regarding present conditions.

Porcupine Burning!

On the 11th of July, 1911, one of the fiercest forest fires that ever desolated any section swept over the Porcupine district, leaving death and ashes in its wake. It claimed ninety victims.

The first efforts made to find and bury the dead, to organize relief for the injured, was by the members of the Western Federation of Miners. It was they who suggested a mass meeting to search the bush. It was they who performed the last sad rites. Everybody turned to them for aid and guidance; the so-called "wild and lawless" element were angels of mercy then.

When the government relief arrived it consisted largely of the discarded blankets and tents of the soldiers, with a company of the latter to see that nothing was unworthily bestowed. Governments prescribe soldiers for all sorts of occasions. Upon the arrival of goods and money for the relief of the destitute, the soft-handed gentry overcame their aversion to activity; in other words, in "dividing up the work." The toilers searched the bush, dragged the lake, prepared the dead for burial and interred them. The capitalists doled out the eatables—a quarter of a pound of bacon to an applicant—and they must have kept the money. Of the $11,000 known to have been sent in, no worker received a dollar, and no accounting was ever made. There was an abundance of prunes and figs, but there was a dearth of everything else.

An incident at the close of the fire may be of interest A band of workers had toiled all day to bring seven victims of the fire to the cemetery, when the scow bearing them arrived at the wharf there were seven priests and preachers awaiting them. They offered no assistance and but one remained to read the burial service, showing but little real regard for either the dead or the living.

The workers in the strike have proved their ability to administer relief justly and efficiently. Single men boarding themselves are allowed $3 per week; married men from $5 to $10 per week. Two mess houses are maintained, one here, the other at Timmons; the latter is costing at the present time 51 cents per man per day, the former 39 cents. A large number of men here make it more ecenomical. As many as can are lodged at the mess houses; others are lodged at a cost of 10 cents per night.

There were no scab Thiel men on hand at the time of the fire, their chief, in the person of the human snake, M. E. White (with apologies to the snake) being engaged elsewhere, but they were rushed in at the inception of the strike to protect (?) the mine-owner's property, but they were deemed too costly and a benevolent government supplied their places with provincial police.

After the fire the injured were cared for by their fellow-wage-slaves and those same wage-slaves performed the same sad duty again after the shooting at the Goldfields hotel.

Shooting of Strikers at Goldfields Hotel.

An idea of the sentiment of the public can be gained from the course of a Chinese restaurant keeper. His regular charge for meals is $6 per week, but a scab must pay $12.

Three mines have conceded the union demands. The statements of the managers of these companies show the most economical mining operations ever carried on in the camp, proving conclusively that short hours and high wages with efficient labor is most economical.

A word to the workers everywhere: Never contribute to a relief fund after flood, fire or earthquake unless there is a body of organized workers to administer it.

Porcupine Miners' Union has met with the greatest hindrances at every stage of its career. A heavy loss in membership by the fire, the Hollinger mine seized that opportunity to reduce wages. Great hardships were endured by the membership during and after the fire, but they have pressed on with a determination to plant the banner of unionism in northern Ontario. Our members are standing firm and are confident of an early victory.

Fraternally yours,

M. P. GUINEY, President No. 145.

WANTS THEM EDUCATED.

National Office, Socialist Party, Chicago, Ill. March 8, 1913.

To the Locals and Branches of the Socialist Party and Local Unions:

Dear Comrades—The people known as South Slavs have proved to the world in last year's Balkan War that they are fighters and they can whip the terrible Turk to a standstill. They have the glory of the Christian world for killing hundreds of thousands of their fellow-slaves from Turkey.

To us Socialists of the world they have proved that they are fighters and that we must have them educated to understand the philosophy of Socialism and get them to join our ranks and to fight the most terrible Turk—the System of Capitalism—upon the political as well as the industrial field.

Hundreds of thousands of South Slavs (Servians, Croatians, Slovenians and Bulgarians) were driven by exploitation and poverty to America, and here they are slaving for American kings and czars of industry, selling their labor power for wages. Many of them will go back to the so-called mother land (or, rather, king's land). Many of them will remain in America and will become citizens of this glorious, capitalist country.

Those South Slavs that are class conscious in America have proved already that they will fight in time of struggle the masters of American industry upon the industrial as well as political field. Those that are not class conscious have proved to be very dangerous for the labor movement in time of strikes and on election day.

The South Slavic Socialist Federation, which is a branch of the Socialist party, is doing everything possible to educate and organize our fellow-workers. We have progressed wonderfully. At present we print Socialist books by thousands and we publish three papers which are fighting the system of capitalism and expounding the philosophy of Socialism.

We have done much, but we can do more, and that is why I am addressing these few lines to you, with an explanation of what you can do to help us and to help yourselves at the same time.

Answer me these questions: Are there any Servians, Croatians (known as Horvats) or Slovenians (known as Krainish) in your locality? Do you work with them anywhere? Do you get in touch with them in city or town?

If so, here is what we want you to do: We know that you are anxious to get your foreign-speaking fellow-workers to understand Socialism and the struggle of our class for emancipation.

We have heard you many times make statements like this: "Those boys are all right, but I cannot speak to them, as I do not understand their language."

Here is how you can do successful work among them and win them for our cause:

We have papers printed weekly in their mother tongue. Just give them to those that can read, try and get subscriptions from them for three, six or twelve months. Get your local or branch to have a special committee elected for the distribution of these papers in places where our people gather. Try to sell them copies, or give them away. A little extra work and a few dollars to spend by your branch will be indeed a great help to us and to the Socialist movement as a whole.

These papers are owned by the South Slavic Socialist Federation and we are part of the Socialist party, so these are your as well as our papers. We publish these papers in the following languages:

1. Servian.
2. Slovenian (known to many of you as Krainish).
3. Croatian (known as Horvat).

These three papers are printed weekly. Will you buy bundles for each of these nationalities, if they live or work in your community? You can send us orders for one or two weeks or for a month. These are the prices for bundles:

"Narodni Glas," Servian; weekly bundle of ten copies, 15 cents; weekly bundle of twenty-five copies, 30 cents; weekly bundle of fifty copies, 50 cents; weekly bundle of 100 copies, 90 cents.

"Radnicka Straza," Croatian; weekly bundle of ten copies, 15 cents; weekly bundle of twenty-five copies, 30 cents; weekly bundle of fifty copies, 50 cents; weekly bundle of 100 copies, 90 cents.

"Proletarec," Slovenian; weekly bundle of ten copies, 15 cents; weekly bundle of twenty-five copies, 35 cents; weekly bundle of fifty copies, 60 cents; weekly bundle of 100 copies, $1.

As soon as we get your order bundles will be forwarded.

If your local or branch needs any books or pamphlets on Socialism or ————————in any of the above mentioned languages, just let us know.

Our price for books is 3, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 cents and up. Send us an order. We will send the best ones for beginners.

If you want any Bulgarian literature we will get it for you.

Come, comrades, give us your hand. Help us to spread papers and books among the South Slavic workers.

When class conscious they will be with you shoulder to shoulder on election day and in time of strikes fighting the most terrible Turk—the system of Capitalism.

Send orders and communications to the address given below.

I am yours for Socialism, ALEX SUSNAR.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington, March.—The long-heralded Sutherland workman's compensation bill came up before the House late on the afternoon of March 1, and at that time its passage was expected by the House before the close of the session.

Although the bill had the support of President Gompers of the A. F. of L. and the officials of the railroad brotherhoods, nevertheless it was bitterly opposed by the railroad workers, the chief class that the bill was supposed to benefit.

Branding it as a weak and inadequate measure, Representative Victor L. Berger of Wisconsin nevertheless announced on Saturday that he would vote to pass the bill, and the attitude taken by the Socialist congressman was having a considerable effect upon the opinion of a number of other members toward the measure.

"What induced me to favor the measure," said Berger, "is the fact that this is the only civilized nation on earth—I do not call Russia civilized—in which the social responsibility of the nation toward the workers is not recognized, particularly toward railroad workers. We Socialists hold that the workingman, while he may work for an individual employer, is none the less doing work which is useful and socially necessary, and therefore he is taking a social risk which society as a whole must recognize.

"In this bill, weak and inadequate as it is, this great principle is recognized for the first time by the United States. It sets a precedent which makes possible legislation providing for old-age pensions, insurance for unemployment and all of the other measures of the sort proposed by Socialism."

The railroad men, who will be the principal beneficiaries (?) of the measure, are loudly complaining that the rates of compensation for injury or death set by the measure are so low that it would be better for them to retain present conditions when compensation for death or injury is secured either by civil suits for damages or by accepting the companies' settlements.

However, the Sutherland bill makes it compulsory upon railroad employés to accept compensations named in the bill and estops them from bringing suits. This is the second chief complaint against the measure by the workers who desired an elective plan of compensation similar to the law in Wisconsin.

The railroad men charge that the bill as now before the House is essentially the same as a model measure recommended two years ago by the convention of railroad claim agents. The railroads urged the passage of the Sutherland bill chiefly on the ground that it would cheat the shyster lawyers who chase ambulances, and because it would be cheaper for the roads than the present system.

"While I admit that from 35 to 50 per cent of all damage judgments go to lawyers," said Berger, "and while the bill looks to me very much as if the claim agents wanted to get even with the ambulance-chasing lawyers, while the poor worker pays the bills, yet I favored the bill for the reasons I have stated."

The Sutherland bill was a corporation job, written by corporation lawyers; yet it contained a principle which is of very vital importance as a basis for more complete remedial legislation.

While Congress was fussing over the Sutherland workman's compensation bill, finally agreeing on a measure that must have made the corporation lawyers of the country chuckle, President Taft, by a stroke of his pen, put into effect on the Canal Zone, beginning Saturday, March 1st, a workman's compensation law so complete in its provisions and so adequate in the care it takes of canal workers and their dependents that it might well serve as a model for legislation in this country.

"Executive order legislation" seems to be getting a lot further than that passed by the efforts of "friends of labor" in Congress.

Some of the provisions of the Canal Zone compensation order merit notice. The law was written by the experts of the "Legislative Drafting Research Fund," which is associated with Columbia University, New York.

The most striking feature of the order is that it embraces in its benefits every employé at the canal, without reference to questions of contributory negligence or any of the other restrictive rules of the common law. The only bar to participation in the compensations is against persons killed or injured as a result of wilful intention or by their own intoxication.

In case of total disability the employé receives a monthly compensation equal to 50 per cent of his pay, this to continue for six years. Should the disability continue after that the pension amounts to between 25 and 40 per cent for the rest of the disabled man's life. Dependents upon the support of deceased employés at the time of their deaths receive 35 per cent of the monthly pay for six years. After that time the pension is between 20 and 30 per cent of the pay until the death of the beneficiary. All employés receive the benefits of the law, but those whose pay amounts to more than $200 per month are treated on the basis of a wage of $200 a month wages. With this provision the government has extended the benefits of the insurance to include men and women in every grade of employment at the canal.

The majority report of the committee investigating the "fly-by-night" insurance companies of Washington was presented to Congress last week. The report denounces the financial methods used by the First National Fire Insurance Company and the Commercial Fire Insurance Company, and made the prediction that unless the companies change their business methods immediately they will become insolvent. The advertising methods of the concerns, which used the names of prominent capitalists of Washington, are also termed misleading and calculated to deceive, by the majority members of the committee. Representative Berger of Wisconsin signed the majority report.

Simultaneously, a minority report completely whitewashing the insurance companies and absolving Justice Ashley M. Gould of the District Supreme Court (who was severely arraigned on the witness stand by Representative Berger) and the other directors of the companies from all blame. This report was signed by Representative Ben Johnson of Kentucky and Henry George, Jr., leading figure in the single-tax movement in this country. It is significant that the minority whitewashing report was given to the newspapers twelve hours in advance of its presentation to Congress, and this was the first report to receive publicity in Washington.

While Henry George's name is affixed to the whitewashing report, it does not indicate that the single-tax leader had any opinion whatever regarding these grafting insurance concerns, on which he was appointed to be a judge.

Six weeks ago George departed to Europe, leaving the other members of the committee the work of financial investigation. In his absence the committee held many meetings and took over a thousand pages of testimony. But just before he left, George empowered Johnson to sign his name to whichever report the Kentuckian thought the proper one.

This is a typical instance of the patriotic (?) service which Henry George, Jr., is supposed to be rendering to the working class in this country. On all important questions which have come up in the House George has inevitably voted with the Tammany delegation. The single tax is offered to the unrest in this country as the solution of social inequality, and the workers are asked to accept it as a substitute for Socialism. If the single-tax movement expects to get very far with the people it will send to Congress leaders more capable of understanding the wants of the poor and distressed in this country than is Henry George, Jr.

HE DECLINES THE NOMINATION

Berkeley, California, February 19, 1913.

Dear Comrades and Friends:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter informing me that the Socialists of Berkeley have by unanimous vote nominated me for the office of mayor for a second term. I appreciate the trust you have hitherto imposed in me, and this added expression of your confidence, and I sincerely hope that you will see the wisdom of the action indicated in this communication.

There is but one meaning of life and action to me, and that is the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth—the Kingdom or condition of social justice, brotherly love and spiritual inspiration and fellowship among men, and it has been my abiding and all-compelling conviction for nearly twenty years that the next supreme step in that coming Kingdom is the abolition of the present capitalist system and the establishment of the Socialist co-operative commonwealth. To that cause I have given my life, laying especial emphasis on the ethical and spiritual aspects of the social revolution now impending.

When I was nominated for the mayoralty of Berkeley two years ago I accepted, believing that if supported by a majority in the Council, I could make some progress against the capitalistic control of the city utilities, and take some advance steps as a municipal administrator on behalf of the people such as I had not been able to accomplish as a public teacher or writer.

Handicapped by a Reactionary Council.

But this time I must decline the nomination, however it may disappoint my comrades, supporters and citizens generally. The people of Berkeley have appreciated my general services as mayor of the city, many who formerly opposed me being now my staunch supporters. During my term of office there has never been a single attack or complaint lodged against me, either in the local press or in the city hall, by any group of protesting citizens, and I have not the slightest doubt but that if I accept the nomination I would be elected with a great majority. But I cannot accept for plain and sufficient reasons.

During my term I have been in a minority in the Council. Everything that I stand for as a Socialist is a matter of indifference when not actually opposed by the majority of the Council, and in order to promote large measures of public importance it requires the concurrence of four out of the five in that body.

I would not under any circumstances consent to put in another two years in the simple routine of the mayors office in a minority relation to a Socialist program, subordinated to men out of sympathy with my purpose and principles. There is a bare chance that I might in coming elections eventually secure a majority, but I consider my time and my life duties too important to take such a risk. If, finally, I found myself without a majority, I would feel compelled to resign.

The people of Berkeley may not know it, but the charter has left the mayor but little power, unless backed by a working majority. He has no department of fundamental importance allotted to him. His supervisorial powers over the other departments is actually negated. The charter has placed administrative power elsewhere than in the hands of the mayor unless the departments are headed by men in sympathy with his program.

I, therefore, feel my life and years too valuable for longer service in that limited capacity under these circumstances. If tied by a majority Council, neither the office nor its duties afford scope enough for the service I would render. The Socialist administration that I stand for would require practically a full board, and added to that, appointed officials in subordinate positions animated with moral enthusiasm for the success of such an administration.

A Greater Reason.

But I have a more positive reason for declining the nomination. I feel myself nominated and elected to a work and an office—if you please—that for the time at least, I am temporarily bound to fulfil at any cost to any personal or local advantages. Permit me to speak plainly, for I may seem to you culpable for refusing the mayoralty of Berkeley when right at my hand.

The World-need.

The greatest need of the world, and of our own California, with the nations of the earth hastening to our great exposition, is a spiritual and ethical revival, an awakening and education of the social conscience and a mighty outpouring of the spirit of the Christ, culminating in the spiritual illumination of individuals and the reconstruction of the social order.

This republic is facing a most momentous crisis. No patriot can contemplate the situation without great concern. And deep moral power and spiritual energy must be released, if this crisis is to be peacefully and triumphantly passed. The materialism, mammonism and social injustice of the "System" and its inevitable fruits of plain downright sin and selfishness needs the moral impeachment and regeneration that can come to us only through some such a sincere, simple, holy, inspired humanity-loving movement as primitive Christianity adapted to our generation.

The spirit of such a movement seems to hover over us awaiting habitation in human hearts and lives. The call seems to come for men and women to count the cost, and forsaking every worldly advantage or gain or place or power, and led of the divine spirit to loose themselves in a passionate service for humanity which would eventually lift this civilization out of its economic slavery and spiritual limitations into social justice and genuine righteousness

This national crisis requires a spiritual revolution, a perfect moral upheaval, a baptism of goodness and power and wisdom in some degree comparable to that movement which re-dated history nineteen hundred years ago. The task before the nation is titanic, and titanic forces will alone be equal to it.

I believe there are multitudes weary of the false ideals and the empty rewards and the ashes of these materialistic days—multitudes ready to renounce the world-spirit in all its forms and become the organs of the Christ-mind and instruments in bringing in the new day.

I pray to be one in the rank and file of that oncoming army. With a deep sense of the great task before the nation and of my own insufficiency, in relation thereto as one citizen, I nevertheless am called out into that service. As much as one man can do or be, to that I seem impelled. I must go out of the honor and comparative ease and comfort of municipal office into the less grateful and more arduous labors of an itinerant herald and apostle of the social revolution.

I seem called to go to the villages and even the country crossroads of the whole state, as well as to the larger cities and towns, and preach this Christ-message, accepting the potluck existence which it may entail. A group of workers will accompany me in an aggressive state-wide propaganda. And as I go I shall find those of like mind among all classes of people—those who hear the voice and will follow.

At the present time I have a large and increasing audience in San Francisco. This will be made the nucleus of a great plan of world-wide significance for the World's Fair. A huge amphitheater or temple will be built, and a platform established, where morning, noon and night, during the fair, a message of the deepest spiritual quality and loftiest social vision will be offered to the multitudes of every tribe and people that come to us at that time.

Thus released from the cares of municipal office I shall also be at liberty to throw myself into particular battles as they arise in the movement of democracy—struggles of labor, local elections, campaigns for temperance and woman suffrage—from which I have been withheld. I shall be able to respond to calls for special occasions throughout the country, wherever the battle rages most fiercely, or in the remote and wayside places now neglected.

This is no passing impulse. During the long months in the city hall I have thought and prayed it all over. I grieve to disappoint you, and turn aside from this seeming place of power for the cause. I sincerely hope that the permanent gains to the larger movement may balance any temporary loss of my local service in the city of Berkeley. Yours faithfully,

J. STITT WILSON.

CLERGYMEN INVITED TO GET DOWN FROM THEIR HIGH PERCHES.

By R. A. Dague.

Rev. Frank I. Hanscom, a talented clergymen of Providence, R. I., in a late letter to a friend residing in this city, who has published the same, says:

> "I am not a political socialist, nor do I believe that with human "nature unregenerated, it will ever try a so-called Socialist form of "government. All systems of economics which are not spiritual are "doomed to failure. But while I am not a political Socialist, I rejoice "at the spread of Socialistic ideas."

Another prominent clergyman (Presbyterian) in a published sermon, said:

> "The fatal defect of Socialism is in supposing that we can ever "have a co-operative commonwealth without completely transformed "(converted) men; and men are not transformed en masse. They "are not made over in bulk."

The two ministers I have quoted express the objection to Socialism entertained by many clergymen. They say Socialism has high ideals, proposes good things—grand things for humanity, and is in strict harmony with the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, but it is not practical—that it can never come to bless the world until everybody is converted and becomes unselfish and good. Their reasoning appears to me to be very illogical and they decidedly inconsistent. They virtually say: "Yes, Socialism is right, but the right is not practical and can never triumph; the wrong must always prevail." I ask is that good Christian teaching? Webster's dictionary says: "Politics is the art of government." Now, are these clergymen consistent in saying that Socialism (which they admit has high ideals, and is a good movement) must be kept out of politics, and that a co-operative commonwealth, not spiritual, is doomed to failure? They want a good government, and say an unspiritual one will fail, but they object to Socialists going into politics and trying to establish a good government—the kind they would like to have established.

They virtually say: "Unconverted voters must not try to inaugurate a co-operative commonwealth, but must patiently wait and bear all the ills with which they are afflicted, until we ministers convert the people and make them all unselfish and good."

Nearly all our clerical friends are "Political Prohibitionists," but they do not tell the Prohibition party "to keep out of politics and abandon all efforts to diminish the sale of intoxicants until the preachers convert all saloonkeepers and reform all the drunkards."

The good divines mean well, but their system of reasoning is defective. They say men will have to be converted, one by one until there are enough of religious people to establish Socialism. Then they will put an end to child slavery, war and all the evils the Socialists are opposing. The good preachers are like the man who would try to row a boat with one oar only. They seem to see only the spiritual needs of humanity. They declare that people cannot be elevated or their conditions made better by dealing with them en masse or in bulk. They seem to take little account of the influence for good or evil that may result from environments or material conditions in which people live. Many of them are afraid of the words "material conditions" and erroneously think that means atheism and materialism.

I admit that they are zealously working one oar of the boat in which humanity is crossing the sea of life, but they are not as skilled and as safe navigators as are Socialists, for the latter are laboring with two oars—the ethical and the material. They appeal to men's sense of justice and equity; that is the "spiritual oar. They also propose to improve by law the environments of the submerged, friendless, exploited working classes and give them a square deal; that is the "material oar."

Abraham Lincoln did not wait until three millions of negro slaves became intelligent enough to demand freedom. He destroyed a system of unjust laws in a day and gave the slaves liberty, not one by one, but en masse. China's statesmen recently established a republic including a large measure of Socialism, and extended suffrage to women. They did not wait until they had converted all the people, one by one, to believe in a Republican form of government. No; the Progressive political party of China transformed a nation from vassals to free men and women in bulk. Once teachers were employed by the rich to come to their homes and teach their children, one by one; then someone socialistically inclined proposed to educate the children of rich and poor en masse, and our public school system was established.

Once none but the wealthy could buy books; then another Socialist suggested public libraries, and now the rich and poor alike have access to them in bulk.

Socialism cares for the individual as well as for the masses. Individual rights are best secured and maintained when the government does the right thing. If there were disease-breeding cesspools in a city the Socialists would request the private owner to abate the nuisance. If he failed to do so, the city en masse (acting through its officials) would perform the required work. No single individual could own or operate our postal system, dig the Panama canal nor irrigate vast tracts of desert lands; but the people of the United States, acting en masse through its officials, can do that work.

Socialism proposes the doing of big things of a public nature, collectively for the equal benefit of all the people. Socialists are not opposed to trusts as such, but as private owners have watered the capital stock to the amount of forty billions of dollars, and are robbing the people, Socialists say: "The trusts are bad only when privately owned; let the nation own them and all the people share in their benefits." Socialism does not propose that all people shall be equal in morals, intellect, in good looks or in prosperity; a fair race in life and a "square deal" for all. Socialists says: "Down with monopoly, special privilege, and the system by which the crafty, conscienceless schemer acquires vast wealth without rendering an equivalent therefor; down with competition and war; up with equal opportunity to all; up with reciprocity, fair play and universal brotherhood and universal peace. Socialism has both an economic or material side and an ethical or spiritual side. Economically it says "Reward everyone according to his deeds and give him the full value of his services." Ethically it says, "An injury to one is the concern of all; of one blood are all the peoples of the earth." Its four cornerstones are Justice, Reciprocity, Universal Brotherhood and Universal Peace.

Socialists are rowing the boat with two oars. Our ministerial friends are trying to propel the craft with one oar. I will not say that they desire a monopoly of preparing the world for Socialism, by trying to confine all preparatory work to the pulpit and insisting that, before Socialism can be established, all the people will have to be converted individually, but I do venture to say that the millions of exploited working men and women and children will hardly consent to wait until all the people join church before any practical steps are taken to improve their environments, lighten their burdens and prevent the taking from them two-thirds of their earnings without compensation.

"As politics is the art of government," and Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and other good men have participated in it, I feel that I can safely assure our ministerial friends that a little dabbling into politics will not seriously corrupt their morals. The late General Ballington Booth preached for years to save the souls of the unconverted poor of London. He prayed with them, gave them religious tracts and Bibles, promised them a glorious heaven hereafter and threatened them with hell after death; then he changed his methods; he mixed a bit in politics; he persuaded the authorities to build several thousand of cottages in the country, establish municipal meat markets, bakeries, public bath houses, etc., and to move the people of the slums out there. In short, he found he could do these unfortunates a better service by improving them in bulk, by changing their material environments, than by trying to save their souls, one by one.

Come, brethren; get down from your high pulpit roosting places and lend a hand in the effort to improve the material conditions of the submerged peoples. A distinguished Republican capitalist and magazine writer has recently declared that the greedy stock-watering monopolists have driven the country to the verge of a bloody revolution.

Come down and help the Socialists in averting such a horrible calamity. Take hold of both oars and help to row the Socialist boat. Both the ethical and materialistic oars are good, sound and necessary paddles.

KNOCKOUT DROPS.

The "Sweet bye and bye" is hidden from view by the "bitter present."

If Taft pictures heaven as being occupied by Supreme judges, holy Moses, what does he think hell is like?

It must have been after just such an election as our last that Solomon exclaimed: "As a dog returneth to his vomit so a fool returneth to his folly."

When the atlas of labor straightens up the world of profits will roll from his back.

Wilson is going to gibbet malefactors of "big business" on a gallows erected by the steel trust.

Strange what throat trouble these big fellows have when on the witness stand.

What heaven does a man deserve in the next life if he persists in tolerating hellish conditions in this?

THE STORY OF A BRIBE.

In the March American Magazine, Brand Whitlock, mayor of Toledo, Ohio, writes an interesting article in which he relates some of his experiences in Illinois with Governor Altgeld and also some of his experiences as a journalist in the Illinois state Legislature. One member of the Legislature interested him particularly. Telling the story of this legislator, he says:

"He was a member sent there from some rural district far down in the southern end of the state, and all through the session he had been silent, taking no part, except to vote, and to vote, on most occasions, with his party, which, in those days, was the whole duty of man. This night would see the end of his political career, if his brief experience in an obscure position could be called a career, and he stood there, silently looking on, plucking now and then at his chin, his long, wrinkled face brown and solemn and inscrutable.

"The old man stood there while the long roll was being called, and the crisis approached, and the nervous tension was a keen pain. And suddenly one of the gas lobbyists went up to him, there on the verge of the House, and began to talk with him. I had the story a good while afterwards from one of the whips, who, it seemed, knew all that had gone on that night. The lobbyist, of course, knew about the man, knew especially about his necessities, as lobbyists do, and he began to talk to the old fellow about them—about his poverty and his children, and he used the old argument which has been employed so long and so successfully with the rural members of all our Legislatures, and has been the source of so much evil in our city governments, that is the argument that the bill concerned only Chicago, and that the folks down home would neither know nor care how he voted on it, and then—how much $2,000 would mean to him. As the lobbyist talked there were various eyes that looked at him, waiting for a sign; they needed only a few votes then, and the roll call was being delayed by one pretense and another, and the clock was turned back. The old fellow listened and stroked his chin, and then, presently, when the lobbyist had done, he turned his old blue eyes on him and said:

"'I reckon you're right; I'm poor, and I've got a big family. And you're right, too, when you say my people won't know nor care—they won't; they don't know nor care a damn; they won't send me back here, of course. And God knows what's to come of my wife and my children. I am going home to them tomorrow and on Monday I'm going to hunt me a job in the harvest field; I reckon I'll die in the poor house. Yes, I'm going home—but'—he stopped and looked the lobbyist in the eye—'I'm going home an honest man.'"

CAPITALISM SPELLS ROBBERY.

Wage Slaves Would Not Be Kept Working Did They Not Yield a Surplus.

Have you ever considered how the Southern slave masters got their incomes? Was it not by taking part of what their slaves produced and calling it their own?

And have you ever thought of how the present ruling class—the capitalists of today—get their incomes? Is it not by taking part of what their WAGE slaves produce and calling it their own?

Is there really any difference except in form and name applied?

Was there ever a slave owner in ancient or modern times that had so many slaves as the steel trust, the oil trust or any of the hundreds of other trusts?

In colonial days the English capitalists found one of their main sources of income in supplying English colonists with slaves. By the treaty of Utrecht in 1713 Great Britain secured the monopoly of the slave trade. This monopoly was controlled by royal favorites and was an important source of income to the crown.

As soon as the raising of slaves became profitable the slave breeding states began to object to further importation. But the slave trade received support from another quarter. One of the principal industries of Massachusetts and Connecticut was the manufacturing of New England rum from East Indian molasses. This rum was then taken to Africa and after ample admixture with water was exchanged for negroes, who were then sold to the Southern planters. The ship proceeding from the Southern posts to the West Indies to receive its load of molasses would go on to the New England distilleries, and so on. It was from the profits of this trade that the Puritan fathers of our country received a large portion of their incomes. Peter Faneuil was one of these traders, and Faneuil Hall was built from the profits obtained from smuggling rum and capturing slaves.

The present system takes on the same aspect of exploiting human flesh and blood. The industrial masters of today build "peace mansions" from the profits derived from the millions of underpaid wage slaves; where plans are laid for more armaments in the mad search for new markets, in order to dispose of the surplus products, augmented by the still cheaper wage slaves imported from the old world.

The profits wrung from the wage slaves of today are infinitely greater than from any chattel slave at any time. Do you not see that those who work under the present system of wage slavery are merely the servants, the conveniences, the puppets of a modern aristocracy, just as were our ancestors in Europe in the days of feudalism?

When men make a profit from your labor and demand half of what you produce for the privilege of working for them, you are one-half slave; when they get three-fourths, you are three-fourths slave.

The workers today receive an average of less than one-half of what they produce, and the masters say where they may work, when they may work, how long they may work, how much they may have, and indicate the conditions of their lives as certainly as ever did a slave master of black men.

The day is coming when the men who create all wealth will refuse to toil and slave and struggle for the profit of a master class.—Exchange.

"MOTHER" JONES.

(Emma F. Langdon.)

I received a letter from Mother Jones last Saturday; it was written in a military bastile, in her own handwriting, and the short letter told of the terrible outrages being heaped upon the wage workers in West Virginia. The letter stated that no one was allowed to visit this heroine of the miners—that the letter would go out underground—be smuggled to Charleston to be mailed. The letter was in reply to one asking that at least a card be sent to assure the writer of "Mother's" safety. Her answer, written in a capitalist prison cell, breathed the love of the cause and consideration for the race yet unborn. and hurled defiance in the face of the slave drivers and their thugs of West Virginia.

The labor press has undoubtedly given out all the news of the situation in the strike zone that could be obtained. The large dailies have briefly mentioned the fact now and then that an extra company of soldiers were being ordered to the strike region or that some "labor leader" had been arrested, or a few lines stated rioting between the soldiers and miners had taken place. With such brief news, how little the world knows of the innermost facts.

There is the greatest battle of the age being fought in West Virginia! The daily papers have been filled with dispatches telling of the horrors of warfare and revolution in Mexico—special correspondents have been sent to this foreign land—great "scareheads" tell of the troubles of the Maderos, Diaz, Huerta—Taft's attitude—whether or not the United States shall intervene—of the sorrow of some Mexican wife or mother that has lost some one near or dear or expects disaster may overtake them. Every day the papers are filled with such items. But how much do you read of the great fight in West Virginia? It is there that a great war is on—not led by Diaz or Huerta, but by a snow-haired woman—and the battle is not for money or political distinction—the contest is human rights vs. starvation and abject slavery!

The contest is between the slaves of the mines, representing human rights, and the coal barons, representing capital. The great general that strikes terror to the coal barons and inspires the workers to keep up courage to fight, uncompromising, is Mother Jones. Don't imagine "Mother" a masculine type, such as is pictured by the anti-suffrage press; her gentleness and devotion has won her the dearest title of all—"Mother"! She is all the name implies—all tenderness to those who do right, helping to smooth the thorny way, nursing the sick, dressing and feeding the children of the poor, ministering to all that need her or deserve her devotion, but hurling pitiless denunciation and defiance in the face of the exploiters of the poor and helpless. They fear and hate her as no other one individual, and well they may. I am sure they would murder her—would have done so years ago if they had dared. Well, they may be afraid; it is true they dare most anything to keep the workers in servitude, but even yet there are some things they dare not do, and one of them is murder "Mother" Jones. If Americans have any of the spirit of their forefathers, blood will flow freely if they dare harm a hair of her head! Woe be unto the "blue-bloods" of the proud state of West Virginia if any harm comes to this snow-crowned "Mother" of the poor!

Many years ago "Mother" was active in organization work in the same field where she is in the thick of the battle now; many times I have heard her tell how organizers were shot like dogs by the hirelings of the corporations. Thirty-five years ago "Mother" was on the same battlefield, and I can fancy I see her kneeling above the Virginia mine workers, bathing their faces with her tears. Now again, after all these years of progress, she is on the old field again, not so strong physically, her hair matches the snow of many winters, her step not so light, but her heart is as warm as in life's springtime and her sympathies as wide as the needs of the race, notwithstanding her 76 years. History tells of many brave women—Joan d'Arc and a Molly Pitcher—many others accomplish some daring feat or made some great sacrifice for a brief period, but you may search the archives of history and you will not find one that has given an entire life's devotion so unfalteringly, uncompromisingly, without any reward, as "Mother" has. Her only reward has been love. She cares nothing for physical adornment—an extra dress is only a burden to her, because it would make too much luggage. If the comrades—"her boys," as she lovingly calls them—decide she is in need of some of the comforts of life and give her a collection at one of her great meetings, and she is forced to take it to please them—the next place she stops—where there is a strike (and if there is a strike and help needed, you can be sure that is where she will be found)—her pocketbook will be emptied there among the destitute, and "Mother" continues to wear the same bonnet and dress. Her only home is among the workers—in the thick of the fight. She is absolutely unprejudiced. She cares nothing for an individual's nationality, creed or color, if they are fighting for the right and need her, she is there in the "battle's thunderous roar"—thoughtless of no one except herself.

Some so-called intellectual in the movement, in speaking of "Mother," about six years ago, said she was "not scientific." What do you suppose "Mother" cares about "science" when she hears the children of the poor cry for bread? What do you suppose "Mother" cares for "science" when she sees the daughters of the workers sold into white slavery? When she sees the wives and daughters of workingmen turned into the streets in West Virginia by the military? When the workingmen are shot by the thugs with the endorsement of the state officials? Do you suppose she stops to inquire whether it was done scientifically or not? "Mother" is too busy to consult "science" on such subjects; she knows the cause of such conditions; she knows how to point them out so the workers can understand; she believes in more bread and less science. It is hard to distinguish between a "scientific" hunger and one that is not. "Mother" knows the soldiers are in West Virginia, and she knows why they are there, and it matters little whether they were sent in a scientific manner or not. No doubt the miners would just as soon be shot by an unscientific bullet as the most scientific. Little "Mother" cares what the so-called scientific lecturer says of her; she is thinking of the whole race—their bleeding hearts, their starving babies and of the race yet to come.

"Mother" Jones has stood in the vanguard for forty years; her labors have covered a continent and reached every class of workers. Her speech is a summons to action. Patience with wrong is a crime with her. She can "touch the hearts of men as the storm god touches the oceans' keys." No sorrow of humanity is alien to her. She is the incarnation of the proletarian spirit. Those that have heard her on a platform before a throng, the avenging spirit of justice, kindling dead hearts in the glow of her own, grim, relentless, implacable, as she drew the indictment of a system that makes millionaires of one class and paupers of the other, in words that roused like a bugle call, would scarcely recognize this same "Mother" that nurses the sick in the miners' cabins and mingles her tears with the sorrowing widows and orphans in a mine disaster or an epidemic of fever. The labor press has spoken of her as "the Angel of the Miners." She is all of that and more, for she is divinely human. She is the worker's refuge and inspiration. "Mother" is the cry when, overawed by corporation hirelings, they seek to join hands in a common struggle, and again when the troops, re-enforced by hunger, are beating them into earth. Often she has changed defeat into victory. Her courage is unconquerable. Words and weak; no one can eulogize this noble soul; her work is her eulogy. Let no granite shaft rest on her, but let the flowers tell the sweetness of her life, and prattling children, wrested from mine, mill and factory and given back to childhood's joys, in all ages yet to come sing her praise.—St. Louis Labor.

WISHING.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Do you wish the world were better? Let me tell you what to do:
Set a watch upon your actions, keep them always straight and true;
Rid your mind of selfish motives, let your thoughts be clean and high.
You can make a little Eden of the sphere you occupy.

Do you wish the world were wiser? Well suppose you make a start
By accumulating wisdom in the scrap-book of your heart.
Do not waste one page on folly; live to learn and learn to live,
If you want to give men knowledge you must get it ere you give.

Do you wish the world were happy? Then remember day by day
Just to scatter seeds of kindness as you pass along the way;
For the pleasure of the many may be oftimes traced to one,
As the hand that plants the acorns shelters armies from the sun.

In Memoriam.

Silverton, B. C., March 8, 1913.

Whereas, Death has again invaded our ranks and taken from our midst a true and faithful brother, Manley Jones; be it

Resolved, That we drape our charter for a period of thirty days, that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this local; also a copy be sent to our official paper, the Miners' Magazine, for publication.

Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, Death has again visited our ranks, taking away, through neglect and greed, two of our loyal and faithful members and brothers, Kristian Martikainen and Gabriel Lecich, who died "accidentally" in the Quincy mine on February 16th and February 19th; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our charter be draped for the period of thirty days, that a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes and another copy be sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication, and we are determined to work more than ever to abolish the conditions that make it necessary for men to sacrifice their lives for bread.

ELIS NAASKO,
JOHN A. KIERI,
JOHN VALIMAKI,
Committee.

Adopted at the regular meeting of Hancock Copper Miners' Union on March 2, 1913.

POETICAL

YOUR COUNTRY.

Wm. E. Hanson, Butte, Montana.

You sing of "my noble country,
The home of the free and the brave,"
And imagine yourself patriotic
And deny that you are a slave.
Your cherished banner "of Freedom,"
The glorious "red, white and blue,"
To it you give your allegiance,
But "what has it done for you?"

Perhaps you followed it blindly,
In the "Holy Christian wars;"
Some of you died by shot and shell,
Some came back covered with scars.
But the masters who urged you onward
To fight your country to save,
Stayed at home in peace and safety,
While some of you went to the grave.

Your fighting saved your country?
How much of it do you own?
Just ponder over it slowly
When you are all alone.
Then when you see Old Glory waving
And list to the martial strain,
If "Business" wanted another war,
Would you "save your country again?'

Good friend, let me kindly show you
How much of this country you've got:
Just a little bit—three feet by six—
Somewhere in some graveyard plot.
You're a slave to old tradition,
To the man you call "the Boss,"
Who is kind enough to let you live,
If to him it means no loss.

The masters lifted the burden
From the shoulders of the black,
And in order to be consistent
Just strapped it on your back.
They gave the black man freedom;
In his stead made you the slave,
And for saving "your glorious country"
That was the payment they gave.

When Wealth grows patriotic
And declares "There must be a war,"
The reason is clear and simple:
You won't have to look very far
To find the coon in the woodpile.
Bear in mind you're no longer a slave;
Let the rich masters fight the battles
For the land of the "free and the brave."

For wars are made only for profits
To open new markets for gain;
To get rid of the so-called "surplus,"
Which the workers look for in vain,
While the masters are clipping coupons
And raising the cry of alarm;
As a patriot you shoulder the musket,
Kill those who have done you no harm.

The officers (rich men) get the glory,
The privates get work and hot air;
A bronze medal on a red ribbon,
That is, if there's money to spare.
So when you sing of "my country,"
Just do of plain thinking a lot,
And you'll laugh at yourself for talking
Of something you "haven't got."

SOLILOQUY OF A WORKINGMAN.

By W. S. Morgan.

To be a Socialist, or not to be;
That's the question.
Whether it is nobler in the mind
To suffer loss of independence,
Of manhood, opportunity and happiness;
To cling to prejudice, poverty and
The old party, or Vote against capitalism,
And by opposing end it,
Help to right my country's wrongs.
To unite! ah, that's the magic word
That should stir every toiler's soul,
And inspire to noble deeds of action.
But whether it is better to join a party
Opposed by all the "powers that be";
Against which hell has hurled its hosts,
And press and pulpit no less oppose,
And whose slogan is,
To the toilers belong
The wealth they create,
I cannot say.
The fires that slumber are breaking forth;
My country's sacred soil
Is stained with my brother's blood;
The cry of helpless women and Famishing children
Has touched my heart;
I must not wait;
The time is ripe for action.
The two great parties,
The giant arms of capitalism,
Are rent asunder;
Loaded down with broken promises
And a foul record,
They stand convicted of infamy.
They are reeling before the blows
Of this young giant,
The Socialist party.
The banners of this new party
Are floating on the breeze
In every country and in every clime.
Its mission is world-wide
And comprehends the human race;
Its red flag signifies
The brotherhood of man.
It asks for the wealth makers
Only that which they create,
And the right to say
How it shall be distributed.
Its philosophy is the
March of an army of facts.
It is armed with
The sword of justice and truth.
Its onward march is irresistible
And its embattled walls impregnable.
Against it are hurled all the hosts of hell.
Armed with venom, falsehood,
Flattery, sophistry and slander,
The plutocratic press is
Prurient, putrid and pliable.
It vain does it hurl its anathemas
At this newborn giant.
Its strides are unchecked
And its glorious mission
Is everywhere welcomed.
How can I hesitate?
The glorious truth
Has dawned upon my mind;
It is a class struggle
To free labor and exalt it;
To rescue childhood;
To protect virtue;
To establish justice;
To universalize opportunities;
To uplift the race;
To create happiness.
How can I hesitate?
My face is turned forward;
I comprehend the glorious
Possibilities of the future;
I see before me the universal
Recognition of the brotherhood of man.
I see justice enthroned;
My eyes behold the
Highest type of manhood—womanhood;
I see bright-faced, healthy children
Playing on the greensward;
I see women enjoying
Equal rights with man.
Happiness and contentment
Reign everywhere.
There are no wars and
Battleships are used to serve
The race, and not destroy it.
Embattled forts are
Levelled to the ground, and Engines of destruction are Recast into tools of Production and distribution.
There is no waste;
The energies of the toilers
Are expended for their own welfare.
Again, I turn my face backward.
Behind and around me
I see desolation and death;
I see a world of
Poverty, want, suffering and despair.
I see the wan faces of children
Who have been robbed by
Plundering plutocratic pirates.
I see the sad faces of women
Begging food for their offspring,
Or selling their souls for bread;
I see labor dethroned and degraded;
I see wealth accumulated
Through fraud and deception,
Enthroned in power and
Parading in rich apparel;
I see decency shaking Hands with the devil, and
Learning in league with lust.
Crime rears its head without shame;
Suicide is on the increase;
The divorce courts trample
Upon the sanctity of marriage;
Honesty has surrendered to greed,
And graft has become the Highest ambition of statesmen.
Corruption is rampant and
Its lecherous hand is
Undermining the republic.
Commercialism has raped the church,
And her garments are unclean.
How can I hesitate?
I have "all to gain and Nothing to lose."
I shall take up my march
With this young giant
And cast my lot
On the side of justice.

IN THE INVESTIGATION of the great department stores of Chicago, the disclosures prove that profits are sacred and that virtue is cheap.

A NUMBER of cities throughout the United States (according to the daily journals) are "making war on vice." Nothing will be accomplished until society makes war on the cause of vice.

LABOR has been voting for its friends and that is the reason that Labor has a begging committee supplicating every legislative body for crumbs.

When Labor votes for itself instead of its friends, Labor will get the whole loaf without playing the role of the vagrant.

A NUMBER of Chicago millionaires who are employers of women have reached the conclusion that a working girl can protect her honor on $8 per week.

The question now arises as to the amount per week an employer of women should receive in order that his honor might not be jeopardized.

THE MEMBERS of Castle Rock M. & S. Union No. 142, W. F. of M., at Salida, Colorado, were granted the eight-hour day in the smelter on March 15th. The company likewise granted a raise in wages of 20 cents a day to the roast machines, 15 cents per day to the furnace men, 15 cents per day to the wheel chargers and 10 cents per day to the firemen.

The employés of this smelter at Salida were determined to have an eight hour day and an increase in wages, and both were granted as a result of the local union backed by the Western Federation of Miners.

A READER of the Miners' Magazine residing at Belleville, Illinois, has written us a letter, in which he makes the statement that one Peter Collins delivered a lecture in Belleville against Socialism recently and in the course of his remarks declared that the Western Federation of Miners had scabbed on the United Mine Workers whenever and wherever the opportunity presented itself.

For the benefit of the reader of the Magazine who has written us this letter setting forth this charge made by Peter Collins, we must use the ugly word so often uttered by our friend Theodore, and brand Peter, the lickspittle and puppet of capitalism, as a brazen and shameless liar.

The Western Federation of Miners and the United Mine Workers have amalgamated, into a Mining Department, and if the W. F. of M. scabbed on the U. M. W. of A., it is not probable that these two organizations would be found welded together through a Mining Department.

Such lies as Collins indulges in are, however, typical of prostitutes who sell themselves to prolong the reign of a hellish system that enslaves humanity.

INDUSTRIAL UNIONISM continues to make progress along rational and logical lines in Great Britain. The members of five of the principal trade unions in the tailoring and clothing trades are now voting on the question of amalgamating into one organization under the name of United Garment Workers' Trade Union. The organizations concerned are the Amalgamated Society of Tailors, the Amalgamated Union of Clothiers' Operatives, the Jewish Tailors and Tailor-Clothiers' Cutters' Trade Union, and the Scottish Operative Tailors and Tailoresses' Trade Union. Another industry in which amalgamation of the existing unions is being songht is that of transportation. A meeting of representatives was held at Hull a few days ago at which the proposition of consolidation was favorably considered and details are being worked out. It is certain that a combined stand will be made for a reduction of hours of labor and the abolition of overtime. The building trades also continue their efforts to combine, although it is officially stated that the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners will take no further part at present in the scheme for amalgamation. This action on the part of the carpenters is not expected to interfere very greatly with the general plans laid down. —Cleveland Citizen.

JOSEPH J. ETTOR, the famous organizer of the I. W. W., who was recently saved from a determined attempt by the cotton lords of Massachusettes to railroad him to the gallows for a murder committed by a policeman was recently refused admittance to Canada. He was met at the international bonndary by Dominion government officials, acting under instructions from Ottawa, and informed to that effect, the fact that he was a dangerous agitator being given as the reason.

That is the most sincere compliment that can be paid a member of the working class by the executive of a capitalistic state, and Ettor doubtless values it as snch.

Now, how will those members of the I. W. W., who go into convulsions at the idea of using political action to fight the ruling class account for the fact that Ettor turned back on receiving that intimation?

How else, but on the supposition that Ettor knew that all the political machinery of the ruling class of Canada was behind the message delivered him?

Political power is no joke in the hands of a class that knows how to use it. Our masters are fully aware of its potentialities, and the sooner the workers are the sooner will they be able to accomplish something worth while.—Western Clarion.

DISTRICT ORGANIZER MARION COPE is making excellent progress in securing new members for the different local unions. As a result of the meeting at which the Musician's Union volunteer band of twenty-five pieces played, fifty-six names of men desiring to join the Webb City local was secured. The following week another meeting at Webb City secured forty-five more names, making a total of nearly three hundred new members for the Webb City local alone.

The Joplin local has also received a number of new members, as also has the Prosperity local. Meetings are being held weekly and Organizer Cope is working night and day. A request has been made that the general office at Denver send another man here to assist Mr. Cope, and, if possible, Miss Emma Langdon, the well-known organizer who became famous as a result of her work in the Cripple Creek district, may be sent here for a few weeks' organizing work.

Las Friday night a big mass meeting was held in Webb City at the Newland hotel hall, at which forty names were turned in for membership. Organizer Marion Cope, Editor C. W. Fear, of the Missouri Trades Unionist, and several local speekers addressed the miners, urging them to join the unions.

The fact seems established that the miners wish to join the unions and are awaiting an opportunity to show how they feel.—Missouri Trades Unionist.

The above report in the Missouri Trades Unionist indicates that the miners of the Joplin mining district have awakened to the necessity of becoming organized. With the miners of the Joplin district standing together, there is no question of doubt but that conditions can be vastly improved.

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. recently delivered himself of the following, relative to the social evil:

"As foreman of the special white slave grand jnry, I came to recognize the extent and horror of the social evil.

"I believe it constitutes one of the great and vital world problems of the day.

"It is a business run for profit and the profit is large.

"In the vast majority of cases the woman is the victim.

"Less than 25 per cent of the unfortunate women in this country would have fallen if they had had an equally good chance to lead a pure life.

"Poverty, low wages, improper home conditions, lack of training, craving for amusement and pretty things and men are responsible for their fall.

"Medical men regard the social evil, from one point of view, as the greatest single menace to the perpetuation of human life."

In the above statements Mr. Rockefeller fails to state how far he may be responsible for the conditions that have robbed countless thousands of women of their good name, Mr. Rockefeller is a wealthy millionaire, whose piles of wealth have been reaped through a system of exploitation that leaves the worker scarcely anything save the heritage of poverty. Rockefeller admits that poverty breeds this social evil, and the question arises, how many women have sold the pearl of purity through the greed of a Rockefeller for profit?

Rockefeller, as an individual, is no more to blame than the thousands of other mercenary pirates, to whom the dollars is more priceless than the honor of the female slave, but Rockefeller, "living in a glass house," can throw no stones at the other hyenas who are merciless towards woman in their mad gallop for dividends.

THE NEW YORK CALL has the following to say on "Class Legislation in Pennsylvania."

"Having just passed a bill prohibiting the carrying of the red flag in parades, the Pennsylvania Legislature is now confronted with another bill, drawn up by one of its number, which probihits any person, on penalty of fine or imprisonment, from working any horse, ox or ass more than twelve hours a day, in cities of the first and second classes.

"It is to be hoped that this bill will be rejected, as it deserves to be, as its passing would open the way to class legislation of a most snbtle and pernicious kind. The human live stock in the steel mills who now work twelve hours a day, seven days a week, and overtime when necessary, would nndoubtedly demand to be placed upon an equal footing with horses, asses and oxen, if such a bill goes through the Legislature. And to subject a steel magnate to the threat of fine or imprisonment for working human laborers more than twelve hours a day, strikes at the basis of all our institutions and tends to undermine the very foundations of society.

"Such a bill is useless, mischievous and uncalled for. The animals themselves have put forward no demand for it, and have never objected to working twelve hours a day. They are apparently satisfied with their labor conditions, as is proven by the undoubted fact that they take no interest whatever in the activities of demagogues and agitators who assume to speak in their alleged interest. Besides, there is nothing to show that they are habitually and systematically worked over twelve hours a day.

"The rights, interests and welfare of the working cattle will be looked after, not by agitators, but by the Christian men to whom God in his infinite wisdom has entrusted the property of the country. If these wise words of one of Pennsylvania's most illustrious sons were heeded by those to whom the lawmaking powers of the state are entrusted, these superfluous and mischievous bills would never be brought forward to waste the time of a deliberative assembly in their consideration.

MAYOR GAYNOR of New York has recently taken a shot at some of the skim-milk reformers who are waging a sham battle against white slavery. Gaynor says:

"The chief cause of the social evil is to be found in our social and industrial conditions. If women and girls were paid a living salary there would be very few women on the streets. Here in New York some of those making the greatest noise on the subject are men who pay starvation wages to women and girls. One of the set of men who own three of the biggest department stores in this city, where girls are paid from $2.50 to $10 a week, is swaggering around, saying how he is going to spend millions to stop 'white slavery,' as some people call it. My opinion is that he ought either to raise his wages or shut up."

Gaynor, in the above statements has hit the nail on the head. The social evil will not be minimized by what reformers promise to do, for the social evil is of such a magnitude that it will require herculean work to halt the pestilence that is spreading not only in America but throughout every nation of the world.

The claim of fossilized hypocrites, who lay claim to being Christians, that moral degeneracy is inherent in the countless thousands that are found in "redlight" districts, can no longer be supported by the facts and evidences that are revealed through recent investigations.

The very fact that proof has been established that a woman cannot protect her honor on $5, $6 or $7 per week, explodes this fallacy of inherent criminal tendencies, and even the most biased and contracted believer in inherited frailties, is being slowly but surely forced to acknowledge that the social evil is an economic question and must be solved by removing the brutal ecconomic conditions which force the poverty-stricken slaves of a master class to sell their honor for the necessaries of life.

The people in all the large cities of the country are becoming aroused as never before, and ere the investigations that are now pending are finished it is reasonable to conclude that a blow will be struck in defense of the sanctity of the working woman.

"THE MOST DISTRESSING OF PROBLEMS is how the New York Sun describes the white slave investigation in Chicago, in connection with low wages paid in department stores and mail order houses.

The distress is occasioned by the fact that the old explanation of prostitution not being connected with or in any way caused by poverty, no longer convinces, and the employer who testifies that low wages and prostitution have no necessary relation, is coming to be regarded as a shuffler, an equivocator and a liar. The general result is to lead to the conclusion that the wage system itself is a vicious institution that produces vicious results. And that conclusion, in turn, necessarily leads to the perception that the wage system itself may become the object of attack. Hence the distressful outlook.

The Chicago employers who were examined cut a rather despicable figure on the whole. Only one of them had the brazen effrontery to declare that low wages and prostitution had no necessary relation to each other, while at the same time he tried to leave the impression that he was paying a living wage. The others hedged and trimmed and dodged as best they might. They would not say definitely. While low wages might have something to do with the question, it was their opinion that a girl who got $12 or $10 a week was about as likely to go wrong as one who was paid $8 or $6. It depended upon "individual character and home environment" wages presumably having nothing to do with either. They, too, however, tried to leave the impression that they were also careful to pay a living wage.

And all this dodging and squirming to avoid the establishment of a proposed minimum wage law, which, if they were really paying a living wage, they would apparently have no reason to oppose.

The conclusion they desire the public to arrive at is that women deliberately and freely choose prostitution and that economic necessity has little or nothing to do with the matter, only they are not bold enough to say so in so many words. But that is what it amounts to, as witness the universal and absolute repudiation of their position by the various women's leagues and other reform societies and their firm insistence upon "economic independence" for women as the first step in the abolition of prostitution.

It is, no doubt, a most "distressing" problem, but the distress of these Chicago vampires is occasioned much more by a threatened decrease in profits than by an increase in prostitution. The accumulation of their fortunes was only made possible by starvation wages, and the degradation and destruction of innumerable women and girls was its natural complement. They are forced into the unlucky position of having to assume responsibility for and defend the wage system, over which they have no real control, but dare not admit the fact. And they are not believed any longer. They have to attempt the impossible task of convincing the public that it is quite possible to defend the wage system and disavow all responsibility for its effects, and, as might be expected, they have failed.—New York Call.

Will the Goods Be Delivered?

THE PEOPLE throughout the United States are anxiously awaiting that special session of Congress which is to so change conditions by legislation as to permit several millions of people to enjoy the bare necessities of life.

During the national political campaign, glowing promises were made as to the avalanche of prosperity that would swamp us, providing that Wilson and men of his political faith were clothed with official power and authority.

The people "delivered the goods" at the ballot box and the statesmen who clamored for places at the federal pie counter have realized their ambition and it is now up to these statesmen to make good the promises pledged from the political rostrum and incorporated in the platform.

The question arises: Will they make good? Men who have a comprehensive grasp of our industrial and commercial life will not hesitate to answer in the negative.

In the political campaign the pledge was made that the tariff would be revised downward and that such action would have a wonderful effect on the high cost of living.

But while tariff or no tariff will have but little effect on the material welfare of adversity of the working class, yet Congress will be confronted by the most powerful combinations of the nation to prevent any reduction in tariff that may affect the profits of a master class

The industrial Czars of every state of the Union will combine in their United strength to maintain a tariff that will bring in the usual dividends to exploiters.

Should any members of Congress manifest an inclination to remember the pledges or promises made prior to election, they will be reminded of the fact that a few giants in the world of finance may precipitate a panic that may put the Democratic party in the hospital.

It is true that the gentleman from New Jersey has threatened panic promoters with a gibbet, but this threat has been qualified in such a manner by the Professor since uttered on a public platform that Morgan indulged in such boisterous laughter as to make it necessary for him to visit the Old World to be cured of his risibilities.

However, the people have not long to wait to behold their anticipations shattered by realities that will bring, from the deluded, execrations that will be more forcible than elegant.

But Little Accomplished

THE LEGISLATURES of the various states are now closing their sessions and labor has but comparatively little to exult over. When the new year dawned, a number of labor journals pointed out various state legislatures that would have among the lawmakers members of organized labor who would work faithfully for the passage of such measures as would advance the interests of the working class.

It is true that representatives of state legislatures holding membership in the labor movement worked hard and faithfully, but these members were in a hopeless minority and their loyalty and energy were not sufficiently powerful to conquer the combined forces of the corporate enemy.

It is true that some legislation was enacted beneficial to the working class, but it is reasonable to assume that every law enacted that trespasses on the domain of profit will be dragged into the courts for judicial inspection.

The work of a legislative body, so far as the laboring people are concerned, will amount to but little, as long as the robed disciple of Blackstone, sitting on the bench, can use the judicial dagger to assassinate any measure passed by a lawmaking body.

It is somewhat singular that a legislative body made up of many lawyers, some of whom are recognized as brilliant attorneys before the courts, frame bills and enact them into laws, and then, some pettifogger elevated to the bench declares such laws unconstitutional.

The time is here when in state and nation amendments to the organic law must be adopted that will make it impossible for a scrub lawyer wearing the judicial ermine to nullify acts passed by our legislative bodies.

At present, we are living under a government by the judiciary, and the people are realizing rapidly that Czars upon the bench are as brutal in their despotism as the crowned tyrants of days of yore when royal dictums commanded mute obedience.

The Press Is Muzzled

JOHN SWINTON was known as one of the great men in the profession of journalism. At a banquet held in Washington, D. C., Swinton was called upon to respond to the toast, "The Independent Press." Swinton addressed the gathering at the feast as follows:

"There is no such thing in America as an independent press. You know it and I know it. There is not one of you who dare to write your honest opinion, and if you would, you know beforehand it would not appear in print. I am paid $150 per week for keeping my honest opinion out of the newspaper I am connected with—others of you are paid similar salaries for similar things—and anyone who would be so foolish as to write his honest opinion would be out on the street looking for another job. If I allowed my honest opinions to appear in one issue of my paper, before twenty-four hours my occupation would be gone. The business of the journalist is to destroy the truth, to lie outright, to pervert, to vilify, to fawn at the feet of Mammon and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread! You know this and I know it, and what folly is this to be toasting an independent press. We are the tools and vassals of rich men behind the scenes. We are the jumping jacks; as they pull the strings, we dance. Our talents, our possibilities and our lives are all the property of other men. We are intellectual prostitutes"

No one who has been acquainted with the record of John Swinton will deny but that he was in a position to speak with authority. He knew that to respond to the toast, "The Independent Press," was but a burlesque, for his experience as a journalist had taught him that a dependent for a job, whether in the field of journalism or anywhere else, was but a chattel who must yield obedience to his paymaster or be numbered among the unemployed.

If journalists were mortgaged in the days of Swinton, how much more subservient must they be now, when it is apparent that capitalism is concentrating day by day and that the wealth of the earth is gradually passing into fewer hands? It is utterly impossible for the journalist to be fearless in the expression of his opinion for when he attempts to puncture with his pen the masked infamies that disgrace our civilization, he is no longer wanted by that respectable element that control the finances of a nation.

William Marion Reedy, in the St. Louis Mirror, in a recent article, shows the power behind the throne in journalism and contends that the man who commands the dollars dictates the policy of the newspaper. Reedy says:

"I have read a brilliant address by Mr. George S. Johns, of the Post-Dispatch, upon the ethics of journalism. It was delivered to the pupils of the Pulitzer School of Journalism in New York City last month. It is of felicitous expression literally. It is unexceptionable as to its moral purpose. But the able lecturer doesn't tell the student of journalism how he is to own a great daily paper. He can't lay hands on a million dollars or two by following Mr. Johns' excellent precepts. What man now owning a great daily paper follows the lines laid down by Mr. Johns? What man preaching and practicing what Mr. Johns preaches and practices now owns a great daily paper? What man like Mr. Johns is and describes owns such a paper? The man who lives up to Mr. Johns' ideal will have to work for someone else. Brave, upright, clear-visioned, high-purposed though he be, there is a point at which he must stop. That is the point at which the owner of the paper decides the paper's policy. And any plutocrat can own a paper and the students of the Pulitzer School of Journalism will have to work for such plutocrats or not at all. The ideal journalist is, like all other ideals, a dream, but a dream hopeless of realization; for the ideal journalist wouldn't care for the business policy of a paper and a paper without a business policy would not last a year or a month. Mr. Johns tells us how to make ourselves into good journalists—yes. But he doesn't tell us how to get the power, the ownership of great papers, the money. Mr. Johns is the sort of journalist he describes. Where are Mr. Johns' millions? Maybe it would be well for a young man desirous of great power in journalism to absorb Mr. Johns' doctrines, then put them aside for a while, go out in the world and accumulate a few millions, and then start or buy a great daily paper. Then he would do well to look up the lessons he had learned from Mr. Johns. He would then probably sell the paper, for to run it strictly upon Mr. Johns' principles would involve the necessity of the paper's "going after" much of the proprietor's own past works and all the people with whom he had made his millions. Oh, no, Mr. Johns; the power in journalism isn't won on your high lines. Mr. Pulitzer didn't so win his power. He acquired most of his principles after he had acquired "the dough." The power in journalism is the money. Brains? Character? You can buy them. At least you can set a line of service beyond which the hired men of brains and character may not go. They can't go so far as to hurt the business office. The owner sets the limit of the journalist's activities. And no man can gain the power, the money in journalism by following Mr. Johns' excellent advice any more than he could do it by sticking to the Ten Commandments, the Eight Beatitudes and the Corporal Works of Mercy. For where a man's treasure is, there is his heart also."

Another Game of Swindle

THE FOLLOWING under the head of "Denver Speech Fight" appeared in Solidarity, published at New Castle, Pennsylvania, an official organ of the I. W. W.:

"Denver, Colo., March 8.—Excitement is running high in Denver. Street corners are being blocked daily in the free speech fight. We need more men. All you ideal rebels march on to this town and help us win this fight. Fellow workers here are giving up their liberty.

"We can put this town on the map in a hurry. Police are two months behind in their pay. Looks like Cripple Creek scenes have been revived. But rebels do not fear jail.

"So on to Denver, you rebels! Don't hang back any longer. Weather is fine. Remember what it means to lose this fight! Come on in a body!

"Send funds to Peter Murray, Secretary, Local 26, 1850 Arapahoe street, and also you who do not come here send protests to Governor of Colorado, Denver, and to Mayor Arnold, protesting against the suppression of free speech. Remind the governor of his promise of a square deal for everybody. PRESS COMMITTEE, I. W. W."

It is a long distance from Denver to New Castle, and it may be that "Solidarity" has been imposed upon by a Press Committee which consists of Peter Murray.

There are no streets blockaded in Denver on account of any fight for free speech. A few vagrants blew into Denver calling themselves members of the Industrial Workers of the World and launched a revival but when these "Wandering Willies" commenced to hurl their scurrilous vituperation against everyone and anyone who refused to accept their verbal slime and filth, the custodians of the peace in Denver gently seized the howling advocates of the "bummery" produced them in court, charging them with vagrancy, to which they pleaded guilty, and at the present time they are recuperating on "mulligan" at the County hotel of Denver. The press committee, which consists of Murray, endeavors to make it appear that war is on in Denver for free speech but Denver has never been so peaceful. Murray, like all other swindlers of the I. W. W., "needs the money" and believes that there are still enough dupes and suckers in the labor movement to part with their money to make life easy for a professional loafer.

Hundreds of honest members of organized labor were swindled in the Spokane and San Diego fiascos, and it is about time that men with average intelligence, should ignore the lying appeals of irresponsible parasites, who do nothing save to "work the workers."

An Appeal for Aid

Denver, Colo., March 15, 1913

To the Officers and Members of Organized Labor:

Brothers:—It was thought that when Clarence Darrow was acquitted by a jury in Los Angeles less than a year ago, that his persecutors would retire but the merciless hyenas of the Otis type still yearned to convict a man whose only crime has been a defense of the Labor movement, and these hyenas without heart or soul, brought a second charge against Attorney Darrow in the hope that in some manner guilt might be fastened on a man whose defense of labor has earned him the deathless enmity of a Merchants and Manufacturers' Association.

In the second trial, the jury disagreed. The third trial is set for March 31st, and it is probable that Darrow will still be hounded by the frenzied fanatics who have decreed that he must wear the garb of a felon. The two trials at Los Angeles have left Clarence Darrow in financial distress, and it now behooves organized labor throughout this continent to come to the rescue of this persecuted attorney, who has never flinched or faltered in giving the best that was in him before the courts of this country to protect Labor from the conspiracies of its enemies.

All local unions of organized labor and those in sympathy are earnestly urged to respond to this appeal for financial assistance, in order that Darrow may be equipped with such sinews of war, as will defeat his enemies.

Send all donations to Ernest Mills, 605 Railroad Building, Denver, Colorado.

The above appeal for financial assistance has been sent out to organized labor in general, in order that funds may be secured to protect Clarence Darrow from the persecution of combinations that yearn to place him behind the walls of a prison. Mr. Darrow has been the leading attorney in many trials in which the members of the labor movement have been involved, and no lawyer in the United States has worked more faithfully in defense of his clients.

On account of his fealty and devotion to men in the labor movement whom "predatory wealth" had singled out for the scaffold and imprisonment he has incurred the malignant hatred of labor's enemies, and the persecution visited upon him at Los Angeles, California, where Otis is Czar shows the vindictiveness of a Merchants and Manufacturers' Association.

Darrow has been subjected to merciless persecution, and the two trials have depleted his financial resources to such an extent, that he is unprepared for the third assault that is to be made on his liberty on March 31st. Darrow, as a lawyer, has demonstrated that he was loyal to labor in every conflict, and the time is now, when labor can prove that the working class has not forgotten the services of a man, whom a mercenary and murderous mafia has decreed shall be deprived of his liberty.

Minimum Wages for Women

IDA TARBELL, who gained considerable publicity because of her pursuit of Rockefeller's financial operations, has been directing her attention to the problem of the woman wage worker.

Miss Tarbell places the responsibility for the economic condition of women workers upon married women and girls who live at home. She condemns them as unfair competitors. It is their greed which is the cause of low wages. If they would stay at home, then the women who are compelled to work could get higher wages.

It is not strange that Miss Tarbell is now serving as an authority for those who desire to shift the responsibility from capitalism to the working class for existing wage conditions.

The working girls who live at home are to blame! They don't need to work. All they work for is to get finery and have a "good time." They are positively "immoral" in their love for clothes and luxuries!

It is true that a great many married women are engaged in industrial pursuits. It is true that a majority of the girls and boys who work in factories and shops and offices and stores live at home. Yet it is absolutely not true that because they live at home there is no occasion for them to work—that the head of the family is able to support, clothe and feed and educate children without sending them out to supplement the family income.

The married woman who works just to get fine clothes or the girl that works, not because she is obliged to work, but to enable her to indulge her taste for luxuries, is not the cause of low wages. They are comparatively few in number and where they do work they are casual workers. In the holiday season, when there is a demand for extra help, they work a few weeks, but they do not determine the wages paid to those who work regularly.

There is no warrant to say that a girl or woman who works steadily the year around, does not have to work and that she works because she is a silly creature who wants finery. The very fact that she works steadily, that she undergoes the discomfort of continuous employment, much of it nerve-racking, in itself is the very strongest evidence that she is compelled to work.

It is true that many, if not all of the girls and women employed as saleswomen, dress neatly and well. The very nature of their employment necessitates that they should dress well. Yet because a girl is not content to dress plainly, to live on rye bread or accept a standard of living such as we are accustomed to associate with poverty, and works so that the father and mother and brothers may not be submerged to the two rooms and a garret stage of existence, she does not justify the assertion that there is no occasion for her to work and that she is an interloper in industry.

Capitalism cannot shirk its responsibility. The entire system is at fault. The individual employer cannot be held responsible, though some employers have a great deal to answer for. The employer of the father, who is paid an insufficient wage, is quite as much at fault as the employer of the daughter, who receives less than a living wage. Both are creatures of conditions which are inherent in the wages system.

Profits are dependent upon unpaid labor. Whatever serves to shorten the hours of labor and increases its wages must serve to diminish profit, which includes the vast toll of interest and rent levied upon industry. It is for this reason that labor ever is striving for higher wages and shorter hours and the capitalist is ever opposing the efforts of the workers to get a larger share of the wealth which they produce and to invent and devise new means and methods to "speed up" and increase the output that the profit may not be diminished by the higher wage.

Wages paid to women cannot be separated and differentiated from wages paid to men. It is quite as essential that the father shall get a living wage as it is that the daughter shall receive a wage that will make her self-supporting. We doubt if the problem can be dealt with effectively by a minimum wage law for women, although we have no objection to the state or nation trying it out. We can perceive that such a law would drive the less efficient from the industries to which the law applied, but, in such event, they would be no worse off than they are now. Like water, the labor supply and wages seek a level determined by economic conditions, when the workers are unorganized.

The proposal to enact a minimum wage law for women has the merit that it is centering public attention upon the economic condition of the workers and the existing system of production. The more the system is tinkered with, the more apparent it will become that its evils cannot be cured without ending the system itself.

The problem must be dealt with in the end as a whole. It cannot be solved without including all of the factors in the equation.—Milwaukee Leader.

The Western Federation of Miners

(Article written in response to a request from the Los Angeles Citizen)

A BARE STATEMENT of the reduction in hours and increases in wages secured through our organization for the workers in the metal mining industry would constitute an eloquent eulogy of the Federation, but it would leave the reader with a very inadequate idea of the services rendered to all the workers in the vicinity of the mines throughout the West and would leave out of account those changes in policy which show the trend of evolution. It is a great deal to attempt in the limits of a short article, but I shall endeavor to give the reader the facts necessary to judge of the benefits conferred and the place occupied in the labor world by the Federation.

The Western Federation of Miners is one of the youngest international labor organizations, having been organized in 1893, just after the disastrous strikes of the previous year in the Cœur d'Alenes had revealed the workings of the mine operators' association and demonstrated the necessity of unity in our forces—the miners having been organized in local unions prior to that time. The combination of dollars preceded the organization of men and made the latter necessary and inevitable.

When the Federation was organized the ten-hour day in the mines and twelve hours in the mill and smelter were practically universal. Today there is scarcely a state from the Rocky mountains westward in which the eight-hour day is not established by statute and to a large extent the law but confirmed what the miner had won. It was the pioneer organization in the enactment of eight-hour laws. The constitutionality of the law was bitterly contested in the states of Utah and Missouri, declared invalid in the lower courts. The Federation carried the cases to the Supreme Court of the United States and the law was sustained by that august tribunal. It has been proven over and over again in the mining industry that the eight-hour day does not increase the cost of production—it lengthens life and multiplies its enjoyments without lessening profits—but it is dangerous to the profit-system and is opposed accordingly.

Laws have been passed in every mining state for the safeguarding of the miners' lives, but their enforcement is in the hands of mine inspectors, frequently employed through the influence of mine operators careless of human life and without regard for their oath. If they owed their appointment to the organization and were removable by it—but that is another story.

The early miners' unions were far removed from the centers of population, transportation was difficult, competition for jobs was slight. They established for that time relatively high wages, which they have in most instances maintained and in many cases increased. During the panic of 1893 the Butte miner held his wage at $3.50 per day, while the iron miners of Michigan were working ten hours for $1.35. The mine engineers of the west get from $4 to $5 for eight hours; their brothers in districts that neglected organization are working twelve hours and drawing approximately $75 per month.

Mine operators have waged fierce wars upon us; some men have mined at the cost of assessments levied to sustain the organization. Just how well they have fared in comparison with men never called upon to pay an assessment might be instanced by the recently organized members at Owingsville, Ky. Thirty-three years ago the minimum wage was $1.25 per day; they are on strike for an increased wage, the minimum having sunk to $1.10 and the maximum but $1.75. Eastern smeltermen are working a ten and twelve-hour day with a minimum as low as $1.50. The smeltermen of Anaconda and Great Falls, Mont., have an eight-hour day and a minimum wage of $3.25. Wage schedules will prove that in the mining industry a union card is the best investment that a worker can make.

Reports from secretaries of local unions on wage increases secured during the year 1912 showed the following results:

Increase of wages per month	$ 286,852.50
Increase per year	$3,442,230.00
Number of men benefited by increased wage	34,869
Average increase per man benefited, per month	$ 8.23
Increase per man, per year	$ 98.76
Total number of hours reduced per month	183,455
Total number of hours reduced per year	201,460
Total wages saved by reduction of hours at 37½c per hour, without reduction in wages	$ 825,547.50
Sick and accident benefits paid during last fiscal year	115,277.32
Funeral benefits paid during same period	27,069.47

Originally confined practically to the precious metal mines of the West, the Federation is extending to every section of the United States and Canada where metals are produced or refined. For many years the constitution forbade any time contracts with employers; in theory we were always ready for a strike—in practice we were never prepared. The experience of our sister organization—the U. M. W. of A. —seemed to demonstrate that larger concessions could be secured and the organization placed upon a firmer basis by entering into contractural relations. Accordingly the last convention submitted amendments permitting time agreements; the membership ratified the proposed change.

The necessity for unity of action was impressed upon the Federation in the fiercest industrial conflicts ever waged in this country. That experience undoubtedly led to our affiliation with the A. F. of L., not as payment of a debt of gratitude, but in an awakened and enlarged sense of opportunity and duty to the organized workers of the country. It may sometimes be necessary to criticise, but now it is inperative to unite; whether as teachers or workers the ranks of our fellows is the place for us. We are none the less devoted to the principles of Socialism and industrial unionism because of our affiliation. We have such confidence in their merits that we do not fear the tilts of their opponents, but are certain that experience will confirm our arguments and hasten the advent of a united working class.

We have been bitterly opposed and viciously maligned—"we did not come to hide the class struggle but to end it." We have great difficulties to overcome; our constitution is printed in eleven languages. We meet gigantic combinations of capital. The price of our products is fixed in a world-market and wage increase come from the employers' profits instead of the consumers' pockets. There are immense stocks of the metals on hand, so that when we stop work the effects are not felt in every home and industry, as with the coal miners. We have always made the most strenuous efforts to raise the wages of the lowest man—there are so many of them and the opposition is correspondingly great.

The days of "splendid isolation" when we were the "vanguard of the labor movement" have gone by, not because of any retrograde movement on our part, but because other organizations have advanced. He who bemoans that fact does so because of his love of notoriety and not because of devotion to the working class. He who stands alone from necessity, because none will stand with him, may be admired; but he who stands alone from choice, is to be pitied.

No history of the workers' struggles would be complete without a record of ours. In the future we shall continue to play a worthy part. Progress demands an ever increasing supply of the metals. The men who furnish that supply should have as large a part in molding the institutions of the future as they have in supplying present needs.

Mr. Ernest Mills, Secretary, Western Federation of Miners, 605 Railroad Building, Denver, Colorado:

Dear Sir and Brother—Your favor of the 18th inst. received and noted and a better or more honorable object was never placed before the labor movement, as Mr. Darrow deserves all the consideration we can give him, as I am very much interested in his case, and I believe that he is being persecuted and not prosecuted.

I will lay this matter before our international president and will underline your appeal myself, as I believe it should be attended to without delay.

Hoping this will be satisfactory, with best wishes, I remain, Yours fraternally, WM. J. GILTHORPE, I. S. T.

THE BLACKSMITHS APPEAL TO THE MINERS'.

Office of General Secretary-Treasurer International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Chicago, March 13th, 1913.

Mr. Ernest Mills, 605 Railroad Building, Denver, Colo.

Dear Sir and Brother:—

Pardon this intrusion upon your valuable time, but I am compelled by force of circumstances to place a matter before your organization which is of very great importance to the success of the labor movement, and especially to our organization, and that is the union label. For several years our organization has enjoyed conditions in the mining tool industry, and the relationship between employer and employé have been pleasant, and we naturally would like the same conditions to continue, and I feel safe in saying that your organization rejoiced with us, but recently a company known as the Fulton Tool Company of Canal-Fulton, Ohio, has entered the market, and furnishing mining tools of all descriptions at such low rates that it has materially effected the business formerly had by other companies, and these low prices are due entirely to the fact that the Fulton Tool Company is a non union plant and pay ridiculously low rates of pay to their employés. Several efforts have been made in the past and just recently to organize this plant, but without results. The management of this company is antagonistic to the cause of labor and boasts openly that they do not need the union label on their goods to sell them to the miners. This company also sells a non-union made white duck miners pants which is also sold at a much less price than a union firm could afford, and we take this means of appealing to you and ask your assistance in trying to persuade the members of your organization to refrain from purchasing articles manufactured by non-union firms. at least until such time as they unionize their plant. They have been doing quite a large amount of business in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, and we would earnestly request that a letter of instructions be sent to your members to be fair and purchase tools with the union stamp on it and thereby assist the members of our organization and the firms who are favorable to the trades union movement. Anything that you can do to assist us in this matter will be greatly appreciated, and we stand ready and willing to reciprocate at any and all times. Again thanking you, with best wishes, I am

Fraternally Yours,

ON THE LEISLATURE OF UTAH.

Bingham Cañon, Utah, March 21, 1913.

The lawmaking body of Utah has adjourned and unless something unforeseen happens the people of the state will for two years at least be relieved of this affliction, for which they should be truly thankful. If there was any need for them to convene it is not apparent, as little or nothing of progressive legislation was enacted. The members seemed to be imbued with the reactionary spirit of their predecessors and that it was incumbent upon them to uphold the banner of standpatism and the pirate flag of plutocracy. This they did with a vengeance. Bills that were of, for and by the interests and all harmless measures were passed with little or no opposition, but those that would ameliorate and make better and happier the lives of those who make living in the state possible received scant consideration.

The working class is entitled to no consideration from us, seemed to be the slogan of the lawmaking body, as they affixed the bayonets of corporation greed and proceeded to charge the labor measures and mutilate and kill them with little or no compunction.

This sign: $$$$$$ seemed to predominate during the entire session and in this sign the interests conquered. The siren song of capitalism in all of its seductiveness and the cadence of the Salt Lake Commercial Club were more potent in shaping legislation than the citizens of the state.

Besides showing their hostility toward all labor measures and their contempt for the working class, they even went so far as to repudiate certain planks in the party platform, among these the plank for the direct election of senators. So obsessed were they with their own intellectual superiority that they told the people of the state that they were inferior and not competent to pass upon the qualifications of a man for this lofty position, that they were the only ones fit for such a ponderous task.

In so doing they proved conclusively that they are not in favor of a government of, for and by the people, but in an oligarchy, and demonstrated clearly that pre-election pledges and party platforms are nothing but fakes and subterfuges to crawl into office on. So shameless did their actions becoem that the mouthpiece of the interests, that "safe, sane and conservative organ" of the Republican party, the "Herald-Republican," in tearful editorials pleaded with them to make some pretense toward keeping party pledges. But all the maudlin tears and the remonstrations of the Herald-Republican were of no avail, as the sinister influences had turned their hearts and minds into adamant, and they were, therefore, impervious to its appeals.

During the session an eight-hour law was introduced; this law prescribed that eight (8) hours should constitute a day's work in all underground mines surface workings, mills, smelters, ore reduction works, factories, etc. During the hearings held by the committee who had charge of the bill one eminent statesman, by the name of Austin, arose and delivered a profound dissertation, and tearfully informed the committee that if that bill became a law the factory men of Utah would not compete with outsiders and intimated that the factories of Utah would be compelled to close down.

Here we find the motive that blocks all progressive legislation; it is found in one word—"profit." The late Utah Legislature, instead of enacting laws that would conserve the lives of men, women and children and thus served notice that any industry that could not or would not concede short hours, a living wage and sanitary conditions, would be abolished, took the sordid ideal and decreed that profit is the essential thing and that long hours, low wages and insanitary conditions in mine, mill, factory et al. industries, is right, and that the lives of men, women and children are of minor importance.

But what else can be expected in Utah, the home of standpatism, the state where capitalism reigns in all of its pristine glory, the state where the people voted for the initiative and referendum—and the lawmakes, the servants of the people, refused to comply, thereby proclaiming themselves superior to the people; the state which, the Herald-Republican says, is "safe and sane and conservative." Yes, it is safe to the predatory interests, sane to a degree of fanaticism, and its conservativism is well and unfavorably known. Conservation is the proper word, as Utah desires no new innovations, no up-to-date laws (according to its statesmen (?) the laws and customs of a hundred years ago are good enough and cannot be improved upon. In the march of progress the conservative has never been a participant . He has always been a brake on the wheel and has at all times endeavored to thwart all liberty and all reform; therefore the contention of the Herald-Republican that Utah is "safe, sane and conservative," none will deny.

The late Legislature did nothing to retrieve Utah from the unenviablbe position it occupies in the galaxy of states. E. G. LOCKE.

A REPORT FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA.

To the Officers and Members of Dis. Association No. 6, W. F. M., Brothers:

As delegate to the third annual convention of the B. C. F. of L., Victoria, B. C., I hereby submit my report:

The convention was called to order on Monday, Jan. 13, 1913, at 10 a. m. by Delegates Sheen, president Victoria Trades and Labor Council, who after addressing a few words of welcome to the delegates (78 in number) handed the gavel to President Wilkinson. President Wilkinson's report followed and it proved an interesting one, laden with food for thought on the problems confronting organized labor in this province. Of all the matters touched upon in the president's report, perhaps the most vital is the attitude shown by the present government towards the needs and requirements of labor as presented by the B. C. F. of L. convention last year. A commission has been appointed by the government to go over the province for the alleged purpose of inquiring into the needs of labor. I fail to see the necessity of such a step in view of the fact that labor brings its needs from all parts of the province and presents them to the government from year to year. This action on the part of the government would indicate either that they do not credit us with intelligence enough to know our requirements or that it is a graceful way of side-stepping the whole matter and at the same time giving fat jobs to a few friends; if the latter be true, then the wage workers must cease voting for these, who, when in office, take no notice of said wage workers or their interest. The question of united political action for the workers is unfortunately one on which we are somewhat divided at present, but we have reached the stage in the organized labor movement when we must unite on the political field; then and not till then shall we get what we are now demanding. And there is need of much legislation for the protection of the workers; the maimed and crippled victims of industrial life point out this need. If we have the welfare of these men at heart we must elect men of our own class to the law-making bodies.

Mr. J. H. Wallace addressed the convention as a fraternal delegate from the Washington State Federation of Labor. He explained the workings of the Washington insurance act, which is one of the best in the world. Under this act the injured workers receive as compensation the sum of $700,000 where $100,000, previous to the act coming into force, was received. And the state federation is now demanding legislation to make the industries pay for the hospital and medical treatment of all wage workers of the state. This should be of interest to the wage workers of British Columbia as our present compensation act is altogether inadequate in providing for the wants of the dependents of the deceased with the result that homes are broken up, perhaps never to be reunited. The greatest benefit is received indirectly by the workers as the act encourages the companies to be more careful with the lives of their workmen. Taking into consideration the deficiencies of the present act, it is my opinion that we should try for a new act similar to the Washington state act rather than seek to patch up our old one.

An important step taken by the convention was to secure a one-half interest in the British Columbia Federationist. This paper has been fighting our battles and expressing our political views and it was considered only right that we should give it all the support possible which was done by shouldering one-half of its burdens.

Mr. Parker Williams addressed the convention and it was indeed refreshing to listen to him. "British Columbia," he says, "is dominated by a certain financial group who are more greedy than a horse leech and more hungry than the devil; and yet the majority of workers line up on election day with such sharks. Is it any wonder that the premier takes no notice of our resolutions?"

Some one hundred resolutions were brought before the convention, all of which have been given space in the Federationist; all the resolutions forwarded from District No. 6 were passed and those calling for provincial legislation were presented to the premier.

President Wilkinson and Vice President McVetty, Grant and Pettipiece refused to stand for re-election. This is much to be regretted as we have no more able men than these in the labor movement.

The new officers are:

President, C. Sivertz, Victoria, B. C.; vice presidents, J. Kavanaugh, Vancouver, B. C.; J. J. Taylor, Ladysmith, B. C.; J. Gray, Fernie, B. C.; Ferris and Burns, Victoria, B. C.; A. Watchman, Van Anda, B. C.; J. Cuthbertson, Greenwood, B. C.; secretary-treasurer, V. R. Midgley, Victoria, B. C.

The unionists of the coast are pretty well satisfied that the miners of the interior form the backbone of the B. C. F. of L. at the present time. A strong and determined effort should be made to have the railroad workers affiliate with the federation, particularly in view of the fact that their support would lend much weight to any efforts made to secure a new insurance for the benefit of all workers in the province. Only through the united efforts of the workers can we accomplish that which we are aiming for—the right of the worker to the full product of his toil.

REPORT OF R. L. LASHLEY.

As you have not heard from the Lead belt of southeast Missouri through any communication from any one directly connected with the work or organization for some time, I will endeavor to give your readers some information in regard to the doings of the past few months, and what appears to me to be an encouraging outlook for a decided improvement for the Western Federation of Miners here in the very near future.

I shall not attempt to review the history of the movement in this district, further than to say, that since the Western Federation of Miners was established here in 1905, there has been a continuous struggle on the part of a few loyal members to maintain the organization; but it has by faithful and persistent effort on the part of a few men been accomplished, and we are today looking forward for the accomplistment of greater things, that make for the comfort and happiness of the men who delve in the bowels of the earth.

The membership who read the Miners' Magazine, may have drawn the conclusion that unionism had passed out of existence in the Lead belt; but such is not the case; unionism is far from being dead at the present time, in fact a great revival of interest is at this time being manifested throughout the entire district. A few short years since there was practically no organization of any of the crafts or trades in this part of the country; but at the present time most all of them are pretty thoroughly organized, and are being materially benefitted by it. The engineers, firemen and machinists, on the M. R. & T. R. R' that handles the products of the mines, have since the perfecting of their organization almost doubled their wage scale, bringing the scale up from 17 cents per hour, to about 32 cents per hour, in less than five years without a strike, or the loss of an hour's time. And at times when the miners were forced to accept a reduction in wages, the railroad men held up their standard, simply from the fact that they at all times maintained a thorough organization.

The barbers, bartenders, telegraphers and retail clerks all have good, efficient working organizations, especially so with the clerks' union, organized Nov. 29th, 1912. Their headquarters are at Flat River, but their jurisdiction covers the entire Lead belt including the towns of Elvins, Desloge, Leadwood and Home Terre. They are now submitting their contract for a six o'clock closing hour; the employment of none but members of their union and other working conditions favorable to them. The different unions, of course, depend largely on the miners organization to enforce their agreements, and the miners have been able to keep their organization up to the standard where they have been of great benefit in that line.

All the locals mentioned above are also affiliated with the Missouri State Federation of Labor And are assisting in the passage of legislation that is much needed by the miners in this district. Among the measures our legislative committee have before the Legislature at this session, at Jefferson City are a workman's compensation, a bill increasing the efficiency of the mine inspection, with five instead of one mine inspector to cover our district, which is at present entirely too large a territory for one man to get over and give the proper attention. An amendment to the woman's nine hour law has passed that makes the law applicable to all the industries for which the law was intended, the courts having declared the measure passed at the last session unconstitutional. Another bill being urged by the federation is the submission of an amendment to the constitution of the state of Missouri for equal suffrage, to be voted on at the next general election in 1914. We also have the application of one of our members, Mr. John C. Haney, a member of Flat River local, for state mine inspector for this district with good prospects of getting the appointment for him, at least we will see what our new Democratic governor thinks about organized labor. The state federation has given him their endorsement; all the locals of the Western federation in the Lead belt. Also the coal miners of this state representing over 8,000 coal miners, in all 80,000, composing the different crafts and trades affiliated without state organization. A great many other measures, twenty-five in all, are being pushed by our legislative committee at the present time in Jefferson City. So we want it distinctly understood that we are not dead in Missouri yet; if there are any who have been misled in that belief we'll show you ere long that we are a pretty lively corpse.

I don't propose to worry the patience of your readers with a review of the organizing work that has taken place in the Flat River country during the past two years, for that has been recited from time to time in these columns during that period, and if I should attempt a rehearsal of it at this time the membership might charge me with a vain glorious attempt to cover myself with a wreath of bouquets, so I'll refrain from further comment on this phase of the situation in southeast Missouri. For I believe the membership can form a better idea of what is being done by the organizing force of the federation by watching the quarterly reports of the secretary-treasurer, yet the work that is being accomplished can not always be judged by the immediate returns in dollars and cents. There is a great educational work to be done before much organizing can be brought about.

In conclusion will say, that, the outlook for a better and more thorough organization of the miners in the Flat River district was never better than at the present time. A spirit of harmony and good will seems to prevail, and if the unexpected doesn't happen you can keep your eyes on the "show me" state for results before the snow of another winter flies.

Hoping to hear a speedy and satisfactory settlement of the strikes now on at Bingham, Porcupine and other places, and with best wishes for the success of the Western Federation of Miners, I remain, as ever for the cause of unionism.

A REPORT FROM JOPLIN, MISSOURI.

Joplin, Mo., March 12th, 1913.

To the Officers and Members of the W. F. M., Brothers:

Pursuant to request by Secretary Mills as regards resolution by Randsburg local, No. 44, relative to Article 4, Section 9, constitution W. F. M., I, as your representative in the Joplin district, wish to submit this for your consideration.

First, I desire to say that in my opinion compiance with said section of constitution will be very beneficial to our organization by bringing about a better understanding of conditions existing in the different parts of the jurisdiction, thereby adding an increased interest not only to the membership, but to the organizers as well. I feel that from such reports I shall acquire information that will be very valuable to me in my work for the organization.

Now as to general conditions in the district. It is with pleasure that I feel I can report a great change for the better. I presume it is needless for me to call attention to the fact that the very name Joplin has been a stench to the nostrils of organized labor, and especially to the W. F. M. for many years. The Joplin district has been considered the chief recruiting station for the strike-breaking agencies. We all remember how easy it has been for them to come here and secure all the men needed to break a strike. Even at the time of Black Hills lockout they were able to ship men from here in carload lots. But conditions are somewhat changed now, as I wish to show by calling your attention to the fact that during the latter part of October, last an agent of the Utah Copper Company came here for the purpose of getting a shipment for Bingham, Utah. But he failed to meet with their customary success, and instead of getting men, he himself got in bad. After being here four days, carrying advertisements in all daily papers, and securing only fourteen men for shipment, three of them being boys under 17 years of age, we had him arrested for violation of a state statute and succeeded in getting him fined one hundred dollars and the costs, which he was unable to pay at the time, so was committed to jail. After enjoying the hospitality of our city jailer for the night thereby getting a little taste of the pleasures of the bull pen, he next day succeeded in getting the money to pay up and immediately left the district.

Another noticeable feature of the changing order is that a few months ago we had to meet a strong anti-union sentiment; it was almost dangerous for one to attempt to talk organization, while now we have a large majority of the men with us who are willing, yes, anxious to listen to the doctrine of unionism.

Also there is great changes taking place in the mining industry. The small, independent producer is rapidly disappearing, being swallowed up by the large companies and corporations. The American Davey Lead & Zinc Co., a Guggenhiem concern, is rapidly acquiring possession of all the valuable properties in the district, and it looks as though it will only be a short time until the entire district will be under its domination.

At the present time the operators are thoroughly organized. Though their Ore Producers' Association which in reality is a Chapter of the American Mining Congress, they control the situation to the extent that they have be able at the present time to bring about a deplorable condition by shutting down all the principal mines, and thus throwing thousands of men out of employment.

During the year 1912 the operators enjoyed an era of unprecedented prosperity, selling their ore at the highest price ever known in the history of the district. All the plants were pushed to their utmost capacity in order to increase the output. Consequently the first of the year 1913, found practically all the plants in a rundown condition. The ore market following its usual first of the year procedure began rapidly to decline, and in a very few days had fallen from $64 to $50 per ton. This the operators had anticipated, and taking advantage of the situation they ordered a general closing down of the mines—or in other words declared a lockout. giving as their reasons the low price of ore, claiming that it was impossible for them to operate their mines at a profit with ore at a $50 base price, therefore it was necessary for them to close down in order to curtail production and force up the price of ore.

But the men are becoming skeptical and are asking the question, why it is without any increase in wages, and with all the modern improvements in the methods of production, the operators are unable to run at the present base price which is above $50, but have been able to run right along up to this time, while for the past ten years ore has not averaged $40 per ton? They are begining to scent the African in the wood pile. They are begining to realize that the main object of the shut down was for the purpose of giving the operators a chance to clean up and repair their properties, and to bring about a condition that would force the men to accept the cut in wages they are putting into effect all over the district. They are also begining to understand if the operators through their organization can stop production and force up the price of their commodity—the ore, that the miners can through their union do the same and force up the price of their commodity—their labor power.

Taking advantage of this situation and conditions, we have been pushing the work of organizing to the limit of our ability, holding open meetings in the different camps of the district, circulating literature, and mixing with the men carrying on a general propaganda for the organization. The results have been very gratifying, especially in the Webb City district where we have been holding meetings twice a week, talking to from one to four hundred miners each meeting.

Now brothers, in conclusion, permit me to give it as my opinion that our days of conflict with the Joplin miner is past. No more will the bosses be able to use him for the purpose of breaking our strikes in other parts of the jurisdiction. But instead I predict that in the near future we will have strong militant locals of the W. F. M. in every camp in the district

JUDICIAL CHOLERA IN PORCUPINE.

Judicial cholera prevails in Porcupine. The laws of almighty justice are used on behalf of the rich against the poor. It is known to the wide world that a strike has been on here since November 15, 1912. It is known that all the forces of government were used to crush the strike, which means that the poor workingman has no right to demand a little more of the wealth he produces, while the employers enjoy millions in dividends, produced by labor, while they lead idle lives.

Many have been shot, clubbed, imprisoned and intimidated; but nothing has been done so severe and dangerous to the community as what has happened in recent days. The provincial police have been recalled; thugs have changed their uniforms and appear as gentlemen, while in their pockets they carry arms.

But let us leave this and pass to something that is probably new in the history of this country while industrial conflicts between labor and capital—between rich and poor—between protected and unprotected citizens of this "free country" of Canada.

What I intend to bring before the public is: The authorities were kind enough to withdraw the police forces on learning that public opinion would not stand any more of their provocative actions on behalf of the mine owners, and therefore against the peaceable strikers. Yes, they learned that it would be impracticable and a lack of diplomacy of the present government; they have learned that by continuation of such provocation the people may put them out of the offices they occupy, so they recalled the police.

Let us see what is going on now: Wolves never have any mercy on lambs, and capitalist class government would not like to draw out its own fangs; therefore, if they withdraw the police force this, in my opinion, is more than certain to result in something new. Now the police are substituted by untrained gunmen. And who are they? Some of the strike-breakers are armed with the weapons of murder.

Now, let us see the nature of the judicial policy: The law provides that when any person gives sufficient evidences that his life or property is in danger he is entitled to carry arms or appoint some other person or persons who will protect them. The law also provides that no constable shall be entitled to carry a gun unless he is a householder or a resident in the vicinity.

Let us accept that such law is just. Yes, it is right. Strike-breakers are armed, mine owners try to protect their lives and property, and there and then request some persons sworn in as constables. Then all that they have to do is to protect their lives and property; but here, O good Lord, have mercy on the innocent strikers who are not armed, and who have decided to use the most peaceable ways and means in order to be successful, having learned from experience of the past that all the powers of government will be used against them. Armed strike-breakers, sworn in constables by Magistrate Thomas H. Torrence to carry the guns of murder and act to protect lives and property. But as we find it they are hunting like birds of prey after the innocent strikers to take their lives.

Between 10 and 12 o'clock at night, March 11th, in the town of Timmins, about sixty armed strike-breakers made an invasion on the Union Hall and menaced with clubs and shouts the few strikers who were sleeping there, and tried to get them on the street in order to shoot them, which is nothing more or less than provocation. Nearly the same thing took place at Schumacher the night before, and at South Porcupine on Saturday, March 8th, a similar incident occurred.

If such provocation will continue; if armed men will be allowed to invade unarmed and peaceable strikers, then if any disturbance, riot and bloodshed takes place, who is to blame? Peaceable strikers who stand for their rights, or the judicial authorities, represented by Thomas H. Torrence, who is known from past experience to have no sympathy for or mercy on strikers? Who showed his fangs when passing judgment on innocent men, under false evidence for unlawful assembly, who passed sentence under the "Industrial Disputes Investigation Act" against two agitators, and one victim who dared to quit work against the will of his master; against one agitator by whose influence 500 strikers on December 2d behaved like peaceable citizens, when they had a full right to tear to pieces the gunmen, who, without any reason, shot into a peaceful parade of strikers marching on the public highway.

Now, let me ask the people of Canada what have the strikers to do when they are attacked by an armed crowd of men? What respect should they have for the powers of government which arm untrained men with guns? What have they to do while judicial cholera is reigning in the district? What liberty have we left if part of the people are armed and part unarmed, and the unarmed group is attacked by the armed group? What respect does the government deserve if unarmed citizens who have wives and families in this community are assassinated by strangers, brought as strike-breakers from all parts of the world, who menace the lives and property of those who have their homes and families here and try to better their conditions in order to remain here? What has the government to offer in order to stop the coming protest of millions of rebels against injustice and tyranny? Oh, no doubt the remedy you would apply is the militia or police, which usually is applied by you when the workers stand for their rights. · Oh, thank you, our grand redeemers; I know you are always ready to shed the blood of those on whose toil you continue your existence. However, let me tell you all the remedy that we want is that you shall not wound us any more; that you will not lead us into the valleys of sorrow and misery. Will you hear this, oh, you poor creatures of death? All we desire is that we have real liberty in a "free country," where we have free speech and a free press. Let us continue sharing our ideas with those who are members of the working class, who have brains and conscience enough to see that our demand is their demand, our rights are their rights, our enemies are their enemies.

If we enjoyed this I do not think that there would be any reason for all that happened here. We know that many strikers-breakers were brought here under false pretenses. We know that there were many who were forced to go to work. We know that there are many who are ignorant of their own rights; therefore, we claim that if Canada is a "free Christian country," why do you stop us from fulfilling the Christian doctrine, which says that "we have to enlighten those who are walking in darkness? Why, oh. you religious people, do you stop us from obeying the commands of the Lord? Why do you stop us from doing the duty which we owe to ourselves, to our wives. to our children, to humanity? Why, oh you authorities, are you so blind as not to see that your mission is to secure and execute equal rights to all? Well, you may say that their lives are in danger. Then what answer have you to offer when our lives are in danger. We are those who were working here before the strike; we are those who have our homes here; we are those who came to the conclusion that if we continued working for the same wages we are going to starve. Iam turning to you authorities, not as if I would have any hope of your good will, oh, no; addressing you I just speak to my fellow men, to those who today or tomorrow will feel your iron hand—to those that you have jails for, to those who have to lead lives of drudgery, to those that create all the wealth, who are forced to be satisfied with adulterated food, shoddy clothing and to live in shacks and camps that your masters would not house their dogs in.

Oh, you whose hearts are throbbing to see the sun of justice, of manhood. Stand erect, speak out your sorrows. Call and the door will be opened. Your hope will come if you will act together, strike together, vote together and fight together.

Then let us act and the puppets of the capitalist class shall hear our voice, and then those that we wish to hear our motto shall hear it and so act as to prevent a wholesale butchery of human beings by "Judicial Cholera in Porcupine.

OF INTEREST TO LARGE CONSUMERS OF COAL.

Large users of coal will be interested in Bureau of Mines Bulletin No. 63, "Sampling of Coal Deliveries, and Types of Government Specifications for the Purchase of Coal," which has just been issued. The Federal Government, which purchases $8,000,000 worth of coal annually, buys more than half of it under specifications and has gone deeply into the question of sampling and analyzing coal. George S. Pope, the engineer in charge of such investigations and the author of the bulletin makes the following statement:

To determine with utmost accuracy the ash content and heating value of a quantity of delivered coal would require the burning of the entire quantity, and special apparatus arranged to measure the total heat liberated, or would require crushing the whole quantity, and reducing it by an elaborate scheme of successive crushings, mixings, and fractional selections to portions weighing approximately 1 gram, the minute quantity which the chemist requires for each determination. Either of these procedures is obviously impracticable if the coal is to be used for the production of heat and power.

The method actually employed is to select portions from all parts of a consignment or delivery of coal and to systematically reduce the gross sample, obtained by mixing these portions, to quantities that the chemist requires for making ash determinations or that can be burned conveniently in the calorimeter, and apparatus for determining the heating value. The gross sample should be so large that the chance admixture of pieces of slate, bone coal, pyrite, or other impurities in an otherwise representative sample will effect but slightly the final results. Increasing the size of the gross sample tends toward accuracy, but the possible increase is limited by the cost of collection and reduction. In reducing the gross sample by successive crushings and halvings or fractional selections, the object is to procure a small laboratory sample that, upon analysis, will give approximately the same results as the gross sample itself, or, in fact, the entire quantity of coal from which the gross sample was obtained.

Recognizing the importance of the method of sampling as being a definite commercial procedure and of having the method clearly set forth in the specifications to become a part of the contract, and recognizing also the desirability of insuring uniformity and similarity in the specifications used by the different branches of the Federal service for the purchase of coal, representatives of the executive departments and independent establishments of the government held a conference under the auspices of the Bureau of Mines in February, 1912, for the purpose of discussing these and other features of the specifications. At this conference committees were appointed to prepare specifications in accordance with the views of the members. It was recognized at the conference that in general specifications, such as were recommended, certain requirements had to be of wide application, as the specifications cover such a wide variety of conditions, not only as to character and quality of coal but as to type of furnace equipment, size of deliveries, methods of delivering, etc.

The specifications which were used for the purchase of coal on the heat-unit basis prior to the fiscal year 1912-13 were on the B. t. u. (British thermal unit) "as received" basis; that is, payment for delivered coal was directly affected by the moisture content of the sample received by the laboratory. This method was based on the assumption that the moisture in the samples collected at the time of weighing and delivery could be preserved with slight loss during the storing and subsequent working down of the gross sample to a quantity convenient for transmittal to the laboratory and in its later treatment in the laboratory. From experiments that have been made and from a large mass of data, it is known that the moisture content of coal does not remain constant, and that the moisture content reported by the laboratory may be as much as five to ten per cent. lower than that actually contained in excessively wet or high-moisture coal at the time of weighing.

* * * As a sample loses moisture, its B. t. u. "as received" value correspondingly rises, with the result that the price for delivered coal determined on the "as received" value is, with rare exceptions, higher than that warranted by the quality of the coal at the time of weighing. As a general statement, payment based on the "as received" B. t. u. value will be higher than warranted, unless the sampling and laboratory work can be carried on under conditions that minimize moisture loss, as under freezing temperatures.

Recognizing the uncertainty involved in taking the moisture determination in the laboratory as representative of the moisture content of the delivered coal and the consequent possibility of payment of a higher price than is warranted, the Bureau of Mines recommended to the executive departments and independent establishments of the federal service that the heating value in the coal specifications for the fiscal year 1912-13 be on the "dry coal" basis.

In preparing these specifications the fact was recognized that the amount of moisture contained in coal produced from day to day from the same mine, or group of mines working the same bed, is largely accidental, and is a matter over which the buyer and seller have only slight control. However, in order to place a negative value on high-moisture coals and to protect the government against the delivery of coals containing excessive amounts of moisture, the specifications require the bidders to specify the maximum moisture content in coal offered. This value becomes the standard of the contract.

If coal of a uniform B. t. u. "dry coal" value is delivered on a contract, the contractor receives the advantage on any delivery in which the moisture content approaches the maximum specified, because he is paid for the weight of water contained in the coal in excess of a normal amount, whereas if the coal is very dry, containing less than the normal amount of moisture, the purchaser receives the advantage.

* * * As an example of the effect of a heavy rain on a car of coal in transit, a precipitation of three inches of water on a loaded fifty-ton car, area of top about 360 square feet, would increase the weight of the coal 5.01 per cent., provided none of the water drained out or evaporated. It is obvious that if this coal is weighed and delivered immediately, special samples for moisture determinations should be collected and prepared at once and sent to the laboratory, as a basis for equitable adjustment of payment on account of the excessive amount of water in the coal. As the weight of the coal was increased by the excess water, there should be a corresponding decrease in the price to be paid.

If a railroad car or wagon so rained on should not be unloaded immediately after weighing and special moisture samples should not be properly collected, prepared and sent hermetically sealed to the laboratory, it is obvious that the purchaser would pay a higher price than warranted, especially if the car or wagon stood for some time before sampling and some of the water drained out. Further, if the coal was not immediately unloaded and sampled or if the car continued in transit after weighing, then the coal at the top would soon dry; and in either case the effect of the three-inch rainfall, as indicated by the analysis, might be only a fractional percentage of the moisture contained in the coal at the time of weighing.

The determination of the moisture of coal delivered from stock piles is often of great importance, for the proportion of moisture contained in the small sizes, which are most abundant near the center of a stock pile and which absorb the rains and melting snows in districts of heavy snows, may be from ten to fifteen per cent. higher than when stocked. It is apparent, therefore, that special moisture sample determinations are necessary for equitable adjustment of payment on amount of excessive moisture in coal which is stacked in piles exposed to the weather.

The specifications provide for the collection of "special moisture samples" if, in the opinion of the government officials sampling it, the delivery contains moisture in excess of that guaranteed by the contractor. The "special moisture samples" are prepared in a manner to minimize moisture losses and may be taken and prepared independently of the gross samples collected for the determinations of heating value (B. t. u.), ash, and other specified data. If the analysis of the special sample shows a moisture content in excess of the contractor's guaranty, a proportionate deduction is made from the price to be paid for the coal.

THE BRITANNIA STRIKE.

Editor World: The open letter enclosed has been sent to the Hon. Edgar Dewdney by O. A. Rowan, recording secretary pro tem:

"Room 216 Labor Temple Building.
"Vancouver, B. C., March 8.

"The Hon. Edgar Dewdney, President of the Britannia Mining and Smelting Co., and ex-Lieut.-Governor of the Province of British Columbia.

"Sir: In The World of March 6th an article appeared bearing on the strike at Britannia Mine and Beach. Since evidently you are the person from whom the reporter received his information, I take pleasure in pointing out to you a few misstatements which you have either purposely or ignorantly made.

"You are quoted as saying, Mr. Dewdney, that the directorate do not intend to take any of the men back who participated in the recent strike; if this is so, why then has your mine superintendent already written letters asking some of them to return to work? (Of this I am fully aware.)

"You are credited with staying that the Britannia Mining and Smelting Company pay 25 cents more than any other mining company on the coast. Of course you are probably aware that this coast is rather extensive. The writer has worked on this coast and received $6 and board, $5 and board, and $4 and board for the same work performed at Britannia. I admit it was not in this neighborhood, but Britannia, you must remember, is practically the only mine on the B. C. coast that is shipping ore to any extent. Marble Bay on Texada Island, is back in the prospecting stage; the Granby at Goose Bay is only doing development work, and at Stewart no ore shipments are being made that I am aware of.

"The latter place pays a minimum wage of $4 per day. Your company, Mr. Dewdney, employs from sixty to one hundred Mongolians and the wages paid them are surely nothing to boast about.

"Late last fall all through the Boundary and Kootenay mining districts the mine operators offered a two-bit raise to the mine workers. Phoenix, Greenwood and Rossland were the principal camps which accepted, the majority of the camps refusing and demanding a fifty-cent raise. The operators refused the demands of the men, and a board of investigation was applied for, which has just lately turned in its findings. You will be delighted, Mr. Dewdney, to know that in this case the board decided in favor of the mine operators, or I should say the majority so doing.

"If the workers refuse to abode by this decision, it will be on the cards for you and all other important personages to point out what an undesirable citizen the miner is since he refuses to allow the government to settle his dispute.

"Before doing anything like this, remember that your company ignored the board's findings in the Britannia dispute, despite the fact that the minister of labor pointed out that it was the duty of all good citizens to abide by the result. One would really expect an ex-lieutenant governor to be a good citizen.

"You also say that no difficulty is being experienced by the company in getting men to replace the strikers. This statement might be true; but as I am now rather skeptical regarding your utterances, I refuse to believe, especially when I am aware that even so far south as Portland, agents are seeking men for Britannia, and misinforming the workers there of conditions in the latter camp. There are two men in this office now, Mr. Dewdney, who were hired in Portland, Ore., to work at Britannia mine. It may be that Mr. Moody and yourself are not kept informed as to what really occurs at your works. This must be so, when you state that the company was not aware of the reason for the 'walk out' until informed by a letter from the Labor Ttemple some days later. To show you why, I must go back a few months.

"In December, 1912, the union decided to abandon its office in Vancouver and have its secretary and president right at the mine. Gill was elected president, and McNeil secretary. The men now had an opportunity to pay dues and become initiated at the mine, and at the end of January about 80 per cent. of the men were in the union. The meetings were held in a bunkhouse and at one of the meetings a committee was appointed to see Mr. Wylie, the mine superintendent, and try to arrange to use the club room for meeting purposes. This request was not much for any company to grant, since meetings were only held every alternate Saturday. After two or three days, Mr. Wylie, who had seen Mr. Moody, informed us that Mr. Moody was still of the same mind as he was last summer; that he would not allow the men to hold meetings at the mine. Naturally, this command of Mr. Moody's was ignored, the great majority of the men not having a reed in place of a backbone, became more determined than ever, being fully aware that they had both legal and moral right to hold meetings if they pleased.

"Shortly after this, McNeil, the secretary, was fired. As this was certainly a case of discrimination, a meeting was called to take place that night. At the meeting a committee was sent to see the mine superintendent, asking him if he would delay the night shift's departure to the mine for one hour as some urgent business was on hand. This was not unusual, Mr. Wylie having always delayed the shift when the club members had meetings, and in the summer time one shift had sometimes gone to work an hour earlier than usual, to make it possible for the two shifts to play a baseball game. Mr. Wylie refused to delay the shift, and said he did not recognize the Britannia Miners' Union. He stated that if we wanted to meet, we would have to go to Vancouver to do so. When the committee reported back, the men decided to allow the meeting to take its course. The same committee was later sent to Mr. Wylie to ask him if he would give any reason why he fired McNeil. It was pointed out to him that McNeil was secretary, and it looked so like discrimination that the men would like to know if he had other cause. Wylie's answer being unsatisfactory, being neither 'yes' nor 'no,' but evasive, the men, when the committee reported back, decided to take a strike ballot, which being done, showed a unanimous vote to strike. Not one man went to work that night, the tunnel and aerial tram stopping at 11 o'clock. The same committee that evening visited Mr. Wylie at his residence on the hill and told him that the strike was on, and that the reasons were the same as those that were awarded the union by the board of arbitration last summer.

"When you, Mr. Dewdney, make a statement to the effect that the company did not know the reason for the strike until some days later, you cannot blame the men. The fault lies with your associates at Britannia for not giving you all particulars. Your mine superintendent was informed less than thirty minutes after the strike was called, and the committee offered to see Mr. Moody when they were at the Beach, but Donohue, who I think is a director, and also secretary for the company, replied that Mr. Moody did not wish to see them.

"You say the men had no grievances. You are wrong. The men had many, but they are wise enough to know the only way a workingman can get redress is through organization. For this reason the men struck for recognition of the union. Furthermore, we have since learned that McNeil was fired simply because he was secretary, and the men are now aware that the mine superintendent had given orders for Gill and other men to be fired because they belonged to the union. Your elegant description of houses and accommodations may apply to the Beach, but it is pure tommy-rot when applied to conditions at the mine, and it is astonishing how any sanitary officer has never insisted on improved conditions at that place.

"I am fully aware that all the statements you made were made with the intention of persuading the public that no strike exists at Britannia. It must be hard indeed to get men when a person of your standing will make, and allow to be published, so many misstatements. However, the Western Federation will probably make both you, Mr. Moody and Mr. Donohue realize that strikebreakers are not picked up like pebbles. It is to be hoped a less garbled account has been written to the company's head office in New York.

"In conclusion, I might inform you, Mr. Dewdney, that the Western Federation of Miners, the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters, and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers are all on strike against your company, and all men employed by you are unfair to organized labor. Yours truly,

"O. A. ROWAN."

BALLOTS VS. BULLETS.

By Job Harriman in March Metropolitan Magazine.

A new gospel of social emancipation has been much preached in this country within the last two or three years. It goes under the name of Direct Action.

"Discard political action. Abandon the patient and laborious methods of the Socialist party. Disregard the ballot. Cease to strive for labor legislation and immediate partial reforms. Cease to think of winning control of the public powers through the ballot and transforming society by peaceful and orderly means. Go direct to the goal. Take and hold the industries. All or nothing, in defiance of the law and all its powers."

This, in brief, is the advice that is being given to the working people in many quarters.

No doubt it appeals to some of the workers—especially to those least trained in organized thought and action. But it seems to have a special fascination for the idealists—for persons whose relation to the working class movement is one of sentiment and not of action, of sympathy and not of participation.

It is a suicidal policy that they counsel.

It means catching bullets from the muzzle of the gun—an impossible task. It will be a sad day for the working class if any considerable number of them are ever led to make the attempt.

Not for the sage of any sentiment or theory, but for the sake of the future welfare of the workers, I protest against the preaching with all my heart.

An Invitation to Disaster.

Will wisdom urge a host of untrained, unarmed men to such a task? Let us not forget that the capitalist class is possessed of tremendous power; the army, the navy, the militia, the police, the power to increase this force by conscription, the public treasury, the public credit upon which to borrow, the power to tax, the billions of wealth in the hands of the rich who stand ready with their cash in hand to deliver it when needed for their own defense; also the law, and the courts to set the machinery in motion.

Will they use this power? Have they not used it whenever occasion called? Is it not natural that they should? Will not every organism defend itself whenever its very vitals are being attacked? So long as democratic privileges exist in the form of the ballot, are they not acting under color of right?

Lead your more or less nebulous democracy up to the muzzle of the nation's guns, all of which are well equipped, organized, mobilized and directed with the greatest skill, and you will quit the battlefield in disaster, leaving it strewn with the dead and wounded, and with democracy defeated, and plutocracy better organized and more tyrannical than before.

When I think of the desolate field after the battle is over, and the still more desolate hearts and homes of those left behind, and how little would be accomplished by such a cataclysm I shudder in amazement at what seems to me to be a short-sighted policy of impatient men.

Impatient! Are not the fields of industry sufficiently desolate?"

Indeed, they are. Better, however, that the fields of industry should be strewn with the suffering bodies of living men than the battlefields should be strewn with the bodies of the dead. In life there is hope and power to act, but the grave is silent and fruitless.

"But direct action does not mean a cataclysm. Passive resistance avoids this."

How childlike! How superficial! How ingenuous! Are we not told that we cannot vote into existence the desired change? How then can it be ushered in by passive resistance?

Will the cannon roar and the bullets pierce the political actionists, but remain silent and harmless when confronted with the passively resistant direct actionists?

Do not be impatient. Nature is no respecter of impatience nor of sentiment. She is prodigal of time and of her children. She respects only power, and only such power as is orderly and able to stand the test of endurance.

The feudal system was not extinguished in a day nor with one blow, but by the gradual development of more efficient industrial institutions and commercial methods. Likewise will capitalism be supplanted by such gradual changes in the methods of conducting both our industrial and commercial establishments and by inaugurating such needed industrial and business methods as shall be advantageous to the working class. Around such advantage alone will grow a more powerful and enduring working class movement.

Let not the direct actionist hug to his bosom the illusion that he alone proposes to overcome his difficulties by mass action. Mass voting also is mass action—the same mass, the same power, the same interest, the same goal, but a better method.

Which End of the Gun?

The other follows the pathway that leads to the muzzles of the nation's guns, and while there proposes to act in violation of law.

The other follows the pathway that leads to the breech of the guns, and while there proposes to change the law, and thus open the way to, and make lawful, the desired changes in industrial and commercial methods.

"But our people are disfranchised."

Is this the excuse? This begs the question. The vast majority of the voters now belong to the working class. By voting together they can bring about such legislation as will enfranchise all disfranchised persons by permitting them to vote wherever they may be. We strike at the very foundation of democracy whenever we refuse to vote and to abide by the rule established by the majority. Is it possible or even probable that the working class will pursue such a course? Or is direct action merely the nightmare of temporary despair? Will not every class develop in the direction of its greatest efficiency? Are the workers not strongest in democracy and the capitalists strongest in militarism?

Do not the capitalists proceed upon the theory that they have an unquestionable right of absolute control over the property to which they hold title? In this theory lies hidden the germ of a monarchial form of government. Every capitalist is a little tyrant within his own little realm. Every trust is a federation of little tyrants in a more extended realm; and a federation of trusts, under private control, would mean a monarchical tyranny coextensive with the government over which such federation held sway.

In the business affairs of the powerful capitalists there is no democracy. In their political platforms there is no tendency toward democracy. Absolute control over property is the parent of monarchical ideals and institutions. In corporations stock votes. In politics the heavy owners of stock stand for property qualifications. Their property is their power house. By it they are able to force others to work for and contribute their energy to the increase of capital, and thus they multiply and extend their power, their privileges and their luxuries; and their ideas and theories of government flow therefrom and conform thereto.

Among the middle class an opposite tendency is developing. They have met the large combinations of capital, are fighting industrial and commercial battles, and are losing in the struggle. The balance is gradually shifting from the credit to the deficit side of their ledger. Their property is being absorbed by high interest, high rents, high freight rates, high prices for the products of monopolized industries, while they are ever receiving lower prices for their own output. Seeing their inability to pit their small power against the enormous financial and economic power of the trusts, they are beginning to rebel and are refusing to abide by the rules made by the large capitalists, and are advocating a more extended democracy. In many states they are beginning to champion woman suffrage, the initiative, the referendum, the recall.

Thus we see the germ of democracy developing as the individual loses control over his own property, or is being dominated by property in the hands of others.

The Roots of Democracy.

Among the propertyless class, democracy is the rule of action. There being no extraneous power by which their affairs can be dominated, the voice of the majority necessarily prevails. So also must democracy reign supreme whenever the interests of those in control of property are equal and mutual. In such case no other means can be devised, because each vote has equal weight, being supported by equal power.

Industrial development, by expropriation of small owners, has forced democratic institutions and methods upon the working class, and is now forcing the same upon the middle class; while directly the opposite results are being produced among the more powerful and opulent capitalist class.

Mobilized capital will ever be more efficient than scattered capital; hence trusts will continue to form and democracy to spread.

If the present industrial and commercial methods are pursued, the economic power of trustified capital must eventually meet face to face in a titanic conflict with the democratic power of the dispossessed.

Upon this hypothesis the direct actionists proceed, assuming that the climax is here and the cataclysm is taking place.

The fact is, the climax has not arrived, and the cataclysm is not present and will never develop.

Democracy, being a product of industrial evolution, will of necessity keep pace with it, and be forced onward by it.

Already woman suffrage and direct legislation have become powerful issues, not only of the dispossessed but also of the middle class. They are becoming issues because we see in them a means of defense against the very economic power that is forcing the issues upon us.

It is by means of these democratic methods that our forces are being mobilized. By their use we are discovering our more general mutual interests and are learning how to act in unison regarding them. Ability to act in unison leads to the discovery and adoption of such industrial methods as are productive of the greatest benefit. Having discovered the most beneficial methods we cling to them with all the tenacity of life, and thus the mobilization of democratic forces takes place.

By direct legislation we can force issues to public attention; take over or establish industries; divert funds from the trust to the public treasury; and thus turn to our benefit the forces that have been devouring us. Around and by means of these benefits will the apparently nebulous democratic force rally, organize and grow. By this normal process we eliminate the elements of a cataclysm and set in motion the elements of evolution; we get behind the guns and at the same time avoid the necessity of using them; we marshal our democratic forces around permanent advantages and our mobilization becomes as permanent as are the advantages gained—and the capitalist class bows in respect and obedience to this power.

Who ever heard of a water company using the police force to resist the citizens while in the act of voting bonds with which to take the water plant?

"But the courts resist."

Then let us recall the judges and elect better ones. How far is it from the water plant to the woolen mill?

"But the people will not vote to take the woolen mill."

If that be true, they will not take it by any other means.

"But the law forbids public management of such industries."

Then let us initiate and pass new laws.

"But they will use the army to prevent such action.

Then will they not use the army to prevent the direct actionist from seizing the mill contrary to law? In the former case we will be in power and the army will be ours; in the latter case the reverse is true.

"Then you would do away with the strike and the boycott? They are direct action."

No, they are not direct action within the proper meaning of that term. The strike and the boycott were employed long before the term "direct action" was coined. The workers propose to better their conditions in the factory by the strike and boycott, and at the same time to build up their power by political action; the direct actionists propose sabotage and the taking possession of the factory by force.

"Do we propose to bond and buy and pay interest?"

Well, we have usury laws. It is unlawful in some states to charge more than 6 per cent per annum. May the maximum rate not be reduced to 4 per cent or to 3 per cent or to 2 per cent? Do you not see where this leads? Being in power, can we not also employ the income tax? Do I hear you say "unconstitutional?" Then amend the constitution, or take from the courts the power of annulling laws, or recall the old judges and elect new ones. Will not this lead to a haven of peace rather than a cataclysm drenched in blood?

Impatience brings nothing. We can not move faster than our power to move develops, and the organization and efficiency of our power will develop no faster than perceived possible advantages can be made to accrue.

Patience Means Power.

Though temporary, superficial, and conflicting interests make difficult the task of organizing and mobilizing this ever increasing and somewhat nebulous democratic force, yet we must not forget that this task must be accomplished or else democracy will fail and plutocracy, will remain on the throne. However great the potentialities of democracy, yet while the producers remain in divided camps they exert their power, for the most part, against one another and are easily defeated by the common enemy. A small power well mobilized and directed is more efficient than a larger, dispersed power.

Capital rushes to the defense of all favorable interest, rent and profit laws, as naturally as a flower blooms, for it is by these methods that it is fed and nourished and by which it has grown into the veritable monster that it now is.

Interest, rent and profit are the avenues through which human energy —in different forms—pours in a constant stream through the various industrial and commercial establishments into the coffers of capital. The strength of those from whom it flows is diminished by the process, while the power of capital is multiplied. This ever-increasing fund constitutes the great reservoir upon which the capitalists draw for military support.

Take warning, Direct Actionist.

Plutocracy's greatest power and advantage is in the bullet. Democracy's greatest power and advantage is in the ballot.

They organize the army by diverting funds from us. We organize democracy by diverting funds from them.

We are strong in peace. They are strong in war.

The plutocrats never fight. They hire the workers to fight. The workers will quit fighting whenever it becomes more profitable to live in peace.

Let not democracy be pitted against the shot and shell of a plutocratic mercenary army. Let us not pit force against force in an open field of battle, but turn our backs upon the paths that lead to cataclysms, bloodshed and disaster, and take shelter in the irresistible and abiding evolutionary processes.

Do we conserve our forces, the lives of our people, by warfare?

Democracy and altruism are the essential products of the labor movement; deomcracy, because the power of each individual is limited to himself; altruism, because the efficiency and hence the advantage of each, is increased by combining with his fellows:

Individualism and militarism are the essential products of capitalism; individualism, because the power of the capitalist is co-extensive with his capital; militarism, because the officiency of the army is co-extensive with the military fund.

Our task is to prevent the accumulation of this fund in private hands. This fund grows by the assimilation of the products of the working class.

Individuals and classes grow by nourishment and not by warfare. Sometimes warfare becomes necessary in order to get nourishment. But the processes of growth are checked and sometimes even stopped and decay sets in during the period of warfare.

By co-operation and direct legislation the producers will yet learn how to turn the fruits of their own labor from the coffers of the rich to the common or public treasury. Around this common treasury or surplus fund the forces of democracy will gather and feed and grow and organize and function as naturally and as efficiently as does capital now grow and function upon the same food. It is by the exercise of democratic privileges alone that democracy can learn to conserve its power and to organize and mobilize into an abiding and growing civilization. By such a process every individual, having adjusted himself to the new institutions, may not only rise into a position of abiding comfort, but may bask in economic and social opportunities unknown to the fondest dreams of plutocracy. The elements of war will disappear from a democratic organism which develops upon the foundation of mutual economic interests. But such an organism must be the result of growth, of evolutionary processes, and not of a cataclysm.

A child can not leap into manhood nor a movement into maturity. Movements, like man, must grow.

PUBLIC LAND CLASSIFICATION.

United States Geological Survey Issues Report Describing Methods of Procedure.

In the latter half of the nineteenth century the spirit of the public land laws in the United States was settlement and development. With a public domain of one and a third billion acres, acquired in the preceding half century—1803-1853—by purchase, discovery, exploration, and cession, and with another third of a billion acres in Alaska, constituting a later purchase, the nation felt that it could be lavish with its lands. The wilderness called for pioneers of every type, and large premiums were held out to capital enterprise and individual initiative. Development was desired whatever the cost in lands that were intrinsically of little value without settlement. But with the most and the best of the nation's land already alienated, the national duty is now to put to its best use what remains.

Utilization of lands for their greatest value necessitates the determination of that value, which is, briefly, land classification; and, to be adequate, land classification must be based upon first-hand acquaintance with the particular land under consideration. With a national estate including country ranging from salt-incrusted deserts to valleys knee-deep with nutritions grasses or giant forests almost impenetrable because of luxuriant undergrowth, no general statutes that may be enacted can be made so definite as not to require the exercise of well-informed judgment in their execution. To this end examination and classification of the public lands constitute an initial step in their disposition for development and settlement.

To insure appropriate disposition and to secure highest use of the nation's lands, scientific land classification by the United States Geological Survey has been made an integral part of the public land administration. The purpose of land classification is highest utilization, and to attain this end it has been necessary to coördinate the work of scientific investigation with the administrative functions of the Department of the Interior. The large participation of the Geological Survey in the public land administration has naturally presented problems involving changes both in office and field organization and in executive and scientific methods. For these changes there has been little or no precedent. Scientists and public men of older countries have been outspoken in their interest in this new application of science to governmental administration, and requests have been made for more detailed information on the subject than is available in the references appearing in administrative reports of the Secretary of the Interior and his subordinates. To meet this demand the Survey has just published a bulletin covering the subject—No. 537.

The introduction, on the purpose of land classification, is contributed by the Director of the Survey, and the other sections of this publication, describing the procedure employed in the work, are written by members of the Survey who have originated for the most part the methods that are so essential to successful and authoritative classification. The development of the Survey's organization for land classification is described by W. C. Mendenhall, who as chief of the land-classification board has been directly responsible for the preparation of the bulletin. The history and legal basis of classification are discussed by M. W. Ball; the classification and valuation of coal lands by G. H. Ashley and C. E. Lesher; Mr. Lesher also contributes a short section on the preparation of data for classification. Field methods in coal, oil, phosphate, and potash classification are discussed by E. G. Woodruff, C. H. Wegeman, R. W. Richards, F. R. Clark, and H. S. Gale, all of whom are geologists of wide experience in field work leading up to land classification. J. D. Northrop has contributed the section on classification of oil and gas lands, and A. R. Schultz the section on classification of phosphate lands. Potash-bearing lands and their classification are treated by Messrs. Schultz and Gale. E. H. Finch has contributed the section on miscellaneous non-metalliferous lands, F. C. Calkins the discussion of metalliferous minerals, and G. S. Rogers a section on "By-products of mineral land classification." The discussion of classification in relation to water resources has been prepared under the direction of N. C. Grover, chief engineer of the land-classification board, M. O. Leighton, Herman Stabler, E. C. La Rue and W. B. Heroy collaborating.

A full statement of the policy of land classification and a detailed description of the procedure and methods so far found necessary to carry out that policy, in the stage of development already reached, are presented in this report, which covers nearly 200 pages. This information is believed to be of value both to students of government and to geologists and engineers interested in the application of scientific investigation to practical business. The historical and legal phases of the discussion may be of greatest interest to the citizen concerned in his country's highest development, and the description of field methods should be of immediate value in indicating new requirements imposed upon scientific education, for details of this business policy of the government are already being adopted in private and corporate land examinations.

A copy of the bulletin (No. 537) may be obtained free on application to the director of the Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

MOUNT MAZAMA WAS POSSIBLY HIGHEST MOUNTAIN IN THE UNITED STATES.

The highest mountain in Oregon is Mount Hood, 11,225 feet above sea level. Compared with Mount Whitney, to the south in California, and Mount Rainier, to the north in Washington, each rising well above 14,000 feet, Mount Hood does not appear as a skyscraper. However, according to the geologists of the United States Geological Survey and other authorities, Oregon had at one time, probably before the dawn of life upon the earth, a great volcano which towered as far above Mount Hood as does Mount Rainier, possibly even several thousand feet higher. This was the great Mount Mazama. But thousands of years ago this mountain disappeared into the bowels of the earth and all that is left today is the huge rim around Crater Lake.

Crater Lake is the caldera of this extinct and collapsed volcano and is nearly six miles in diameter. The inside walls of the rim of the ancient mountain are in places nearly 4,000 feet high and almost perpendicular. The lake itself is in places 2,000 feet deep and parts of the wall rise above its waters another 2,000 feet. A restoration of the mountain in fancy, using as a basis the angles of the lower slopes, which still remain, shows that the apex could not have been far from 15,000 feet in height, so that Mount Mazama was one of the most lofty and majestic peaks in the United States.

The director of the Geological Survey at Washington has a fine topographic map of Crater Lake and vicinity for sale at the nominal price of 10 cents. This map has on the back an illustrated description of Crater Lake and an account of its formation from the ancient mountain.

MORE COMBINATIONS.

The innocent persons who believed that the tide of concentration had about reached its crest have been undeceived by the recent census bulletins. The figures for 1909 show that the combinations predominate more than ever. In 1904 nine-tenths of 1 per cent. of the factory establishments turned out 38 per cent. of the total product, while in 1909 1-10 per cent. turned out 43 and 8-10 per cent. of the product. In the mining, quarrying and petroleum and gas industries, 7 1-10 per cent. of the operators turned out 84 6-10 per cent. of the product.

The large establishments are of course mostly held under the corporate forms of ownership. All of the establishments engaged in the smelting and refining of lead in 1909 were operated by corporations, and more than 90 per cent. of the blast furnaces, steelworks and rolling mills, cotton-seed oil mills and establishments manufacturing steam railroad cars. The corporations, says the census report on factories, turned out 73 7-10 per cent. of the total product in 1904, and 79 per cent. in 1909. "Even during this short period of five years," reads the report, "the corporate form of ownership increased so greatly that it represented an appreciably larger proportion of the manufacturing interests of the country in 1909 than in 1904."

This development is exactly in line with what the Socialists have been predicting. It follows an economic law, and no legislative prohibition or executive and judicial meddling has seriously impeded it. In spite of the Bourbon notion that it can be retarded, it will continue until organized society is ready to assume the ownership and democratic management of the industries.—Metropolitan.

WHICH SYSTEM DO YOU PREFER?

Under This System	Under Socialism.
The men who make the fabrics wear rags.	The men who work will get their full product.
The men who build houses live in rented hovels.	Every man can afford to own a good home, clear of all indebtedness.
The men who make the automobiles walk.	No man will be enabled to live by working others.
The men who build the railroads tramp between the rails, seeking work.	Every laborer will be enabled to travel and see the world.
The men who till the soil eat the refuse and sell the best so they may buy some soil.	The world will be transformed into a thing of beauty and will belong to those who made it.
The men who work the hardest have the least.	The producer, the farmer, will have the best of everything, and will no longer be in debt for the land he works.—Exchange.
The men who have transformed the world have legally no right in the world.

SHORT AND SIMPLE.

Paragraphs Pointing Out to the Workers That They Must Overthrow Capitalism.

The life that is destitute of noble ideals and the necessity for activity for their fulfillment is a wasted life.

Somewhere there must be a reason for poverty, crime, disease, and squalor. Have you ever tried to find the reason?

You may hasten or retard the triumph of the movement for the emancipation of the working class, but you can no more stop it than you can tomorrow morn forbid the rising of the sun.

A man can't be overwhelmingly happy when he has to look at each side of a sixpence before he spends it.

The loafer will have a cold time under Socialism.

Many people now loaf on rents, dividends, etc.

Others loaf because the boss's eye can't be always on them.

When all the workers are co-operators, the loafer will be the cynosure of all eyes.

Socialism is coming to revive individual initiative and enterprise, which are being destroyed under the present system.

Individuality cannot possibly be developed under capitalism where the selfish scramble for wealth develops only callousness and greed.

Wage-slavery means the degradation not only of the masses, but also of the class which brutally keeps them down.

Socialism will represent the conscious and successful attempt of the masses to uplift themselves, and overthrow their alleged masters.

No man ought to be expected to shout himself hoarse hurrahing over a 10 per cent. increase in wages when prices on the necessities of life have gone up from 20 to 50 per cent.

A policeman should be as keen to get evidence of his prisoner's innocence as he is of his guilt. This is impossible to expect while promotion is given to the officer who has been instrumental in securing the largest number of convictions.

Old ideas die hard, but proggress is a merciless headsman, and gets them all.

The tendency of the world's progress is peaceful, which seeks the betterment and not the butchery of mankind.

There are many national flags, but only one international flag of red, which is the emblem of human brotherhood and peace.

The wealth-makers, who are many, have to struggle tempestuously to secure the wherewith to buy back sufficient of their own products to keep them.

The ownership of the tools of production is the first and chief cause to be settled for the good of man.

A distinctive feature of Socialism is its fight in behalf of the children.

Capitalism merely regards children as so much cheap labor.

The toilers should know better than to trust the parties of capitalism.

An English medical authority says that "vegetables have a soothing effect on the nerves." We don't think he would find it so if he had to buy vegetables at the present high prices ruling everywhere.

A Parisian doctor says that people dwelling in hot climates would "get no more wrinkled, dry or shriveled than those who live in cool, damp countries if they were to live largely on fat." This may be so, but the reason most people become "wrinkled, dry or shriveled' in cold countries or in hot, is because Fat lives largely on them.

POETICAL

"ONE REASON WHY!"

(W. E. Hanson, Butte, Mont.)

I left the glare of the "Great White Way,"
For the streets where the Magdalens dwell, and entered a so-called den of vice—
Which the godly call "Doors of Hell;"
As I looked on the noisy and drunken men,
At the faces of girls once fair,
I asked of one who was still a child,
The reason that she was here?

"It was not by my will that I've fallen,
Besmirched my body and soul.
I was grist in the mill for profits,
Where woman pay virtue as toll,
To keep from dying of hunger,
For a shelter from rain and cold
As the wage we get will not suffice,
We barter our bodies for gold,

Perhaps you think as you see us here,
That we've neither a soul nor heart,
But oft while we sip the red, red wine,
And sing,—we are acting a part.
Men pay for smiles and not for tears,
And laughter and ribald song,
It is what we are, and not what we were
Before we joined this throng.

Our eyes that shine with a luminous light,
That is caused by the fumes of wine,
Are often dimmed by scalding tears,
Of which revelers see no sign.
Oh the thoughts we harbor, the sorrows,
That God and us only know,
And the silent prayer we offer to Him,
To show mercy to us in our woe.

Our lips that utter a jest or an oath,
Once prayed at a mother's knee
While you think us callous and reckless,
'Tis the part we wish you to see,
We are only creatures you men have made,
'Twas by man's injustice we fell,
In return for a shelter and food to eat,
We are guards at the Gates of Hell,

The flames may burn and heat will scorch,
But no worse than the pain we bear,
While we cajole and coax men into the web
By alluring arts that ensnare,
Our red, red lips and melting glance
That you take as a right that is just,
Is a story that never an ending has,
Until mankind turns to dust.

The world grows old, the world grows young,
But in every land 'neath the sun,
Are sisters of yours, and sisters of mine,
Who perhaps this race have begun,
But if you can say to the wide, wide world,
With a fearless voice, "all is Well'—
For no deed of mine ever sent a soul,
To guard the Portals of Hell."

"YOUR FLAG AND MINE."

(W. E. Hanson, Butte, Mont.)

You may cheer for your Flag of Freedom,
While I bow to the Banner of Red,
For under the folds of the flag I love,
The first blood for freedom was shed.
'Twas the flag at the Battle of Lexington
That gave courage to those that fought,
And gave birth to the thought for freedom,
And fostered and strengthened that thought.

When Washington showed his defiance,
To laws that were English bred,
The flag that they carried in battle,
Was the "now hated banner of red;"
And then when the conquest was over,
Back to England the enemy fled,
The banner that floated in triumph here
Was the "now hated banner of Red."

When the fields had been ploughed by battles,
And sown with thousands of dead;
And the harvest it brought had flourished,
"Stars and Stripes," superseded the Red;
For centuries "Red" was the emblem,
That united all men in one fold,
"Equality's symbol of justice,
As onward the centuries rolled.

Your banner is emblematic,
With its stripes of white and of red,
The white is the scars of the lashes,
On the backs of the slaves that bled;
And the red,—is the blood set flowing,
For the Master's power and gain,
When you praise your much vaunted banner,
Just glance at the truth which is plain.

"The Stars and Stripes gave you freedom?
"No,—Never,—That fact I deny;"
"Tis the banner for wars for profits,"
Under which the ignorant die.
"You say 'tis Equality's emblem,"
Yes,—for those who reign supreme,
Who throttle the voice of justice,
And for those who fondly dream,—

That fighting for God and a country,
In which they can have no share,
And giving their lives to a "Master Class,"
Who give never a thought or a care,
To the mass of ignorant, willing tools—,
Whom these masters class as "Slaves,"
These shed their blood on the battle field.
For the "Flag,"—and a nameless grave,

"Awake! Awake from your dreaming."
"And look at the "Red, White and Blue,"
And answer me one simple question,
What has the Flag done for you?
Has it bettered your life or condition?
Has it lightened your burden of toil?
Has it given you more than subsistence?
Do you no longer labor and moil?

Has it added in wealth one dollar?
Has it given to you a home?
Has it tempered the storms of winter?
When you are compelled to roam,
Trying to find occupation—,
Fighting the battle for bread?
Hurrah if you must for "Old Glory"
Bear in mind, "there's a Banner of Red."

THE MONEYLESS MAN.

Is there no secret place on the face of the earth
Where Charity dwelleth where Virtue has birth?
Where bosoms with mercy and kindness will heave,
Where the poor and the wretched shall ask and receive?
Is there no place at all where a knock from the poor
Will bring a kind angel to open the door?
Oh, search the wide world wherever you can,
Is there no open door for a moneyless man?

Go look in your hall, where the chandelier's light
Drives off with its splendor the darkness of night;
Where the rich hanging velvet in shadowy fold
Sweeps gracefully down with its trimmings of gold,
And mirrors of silver take up and renew
In long-lighted vistas the 'wildering view;
Go there at the banquet and find, if you can,
A welcoming smile for the moneyless man.

Go look in the banks where Mammon has told
Its hundreds and thousands of silver and gold;
There, safe from the hands of the starving and poor,
Lie pile upon pile of the glittering store.
Walk up to the counter, and there you may stay
Till your limbs grow old, till your hair grows gray,
And you'll find at the bank not one of the clan
With money to loan to the moneyless man.

Go look to your judge in his dark flowing gown,
With the scales wherein law weighteth equity down,
Where he frowns at the weak and smiles on the strong,
And punishes right, while he justifies wrong,
Where juries their lips to the Bible have laid
To render a verdict they have already made.
Go there in the courtroom and find, if you can,
Any law for the cause of the moneyless man.

Go look in yon church of the cloud-reaching spire,
Which gives back to the sun his same look of red fire,
And the arches and columns are gorgeous within,
And the walls seem as pure as the soul without sin.
Walk down the long aisle, see the rich and the great,
In the pomp and the pride of their worldly estate,
Walk down in your patches and find if you can
Who opens the pew to the moneyless man.

Then go to your hovel; no raven has fed
The wife who has suffered too long for her bread;
Kneel down by her pallet and kiss the death frost
From the lips of the Angel your poverty lost.
Then turn with your agony wherever you will,
Your poverty smites you and curses you still,
And you will find at the end of your life's little span
There's nothing but hell for the moneyless man.

In Memoriam.

Miami, Arizona, March 9, 1913.

Whereas; The murderous machine of capitalism has deprived the membership of Miami Miners' Union of a faithful brother, Murry T. Shelp, killed by cave in mine March 7, 1913, and

Whereas; The untimely death of Brother Shelp is deeply regretted by the membership; be it

Resolved; That Miami Miners' Union extend its sympathy to his relatives and that its Charter be draped for a period of thiry days; and further

Resolved; That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the local, a copy sent to the deceased's relative and a copy sent to the Miners' Magazine for publication.

My commission expires May 6th, 1915. Notary Public.

AT A MEETING held by the members of Alta Miners Union, No. 159, W. F. M., March 20th the mines of the Alta District, Utah, were declared fair. The mines are now paying the $3.50 minimum wage asked for.

IN THE LAWRENCE STRIKE the Socialists contributed $60,000, the local unions of the American Federation of Labor $18,000 and the One Great Big Union, known as the I W. W., $7,000. Editorial comment is unnecessary.

THE MINERS of the Flat River district of Missouri are giving their attention to the work of organization and the large attendance at the regular meetings show that the spirit of unionism has taken possession of the men of the mines and mills.

It is expected that the Flat River district will be thoroughly organized in the very near future.

THE INVESTIGATIONS that have been carried on probing conditions in many establishments where women and girls are employed, must ultimately have the effect of establishing a minimum wage, below which an exploiter cannot go. The fact has been established that low wages lead to prostitution, and it is only a question of time, when the people will be able to grapple with a problem that is world-wide.

STAY AWAY FROM WEST VIRGINIA! The United Mine Workers of America are engaged in a battle with the coal barons to establish a scale of wages and conditions that will enable men, women and children to live like human beings.

No laboring man with a vestige of honor in his makeup will become an ally of coal corporations by converting himself into a strike-breaker. The striking miners of West Virginia are determined to win this fight, and when victory is achieved this state, now dominated by the mandates of economic masters, will be made habitable for that citizenship that wears the livery of labor and that holds a card in the United Mine Workers of America.

IN OUR GLORIOUS REPUBLIC the Democratic party that is now in control of our national affairs promises to reduce the tariff so that the high cost of living may be reduced, and in England, where there there is practically no tariff, the statesmen are considering the advisability of resorting to the tariff to improve this condition of the common people.

The question of tariff or no tariff will fool the people but little longer, as the common herd is beginning to realize that such questions are but issues that enable professional politicians to crawl into office.

A real show down is close at hand.

THE FACTS in connection with the killing of George Prinaris and Nick Pappas who were shot at McGill, Nevada, October 17th, 1912, will not be re-submitted to another grand jury, unless the identity of the murderers can be shown. Prinaris and Pappas were shot by the state guards of Nevada and the court has ruled that specific evidence must be produced as to the identity of the person or persons who fired the fatal shots.

The state guards killed these two men, but as they were strikers against starvation wages, the prosecution will be dropped. Labor, as a general rule has no standing in our so-called "temples of justice."

ES. J. McALLISTER of Portland a prominent lawyer reformer, Y. M. C. A. enthusiast, a religious worker and booster for the Boy Scouts has been sentenced to serve from one to five years in the Oregon penitentiary. A man of such social standing as McAllister should not become an inmate of a penal institution, but disclosures in Portland some time ago caused a number of gentlemen in the upper strata of society to feel nervous concerning their liberty.

The "upper ten" of Portland were unmasked and the people became aware of the fact that the "pillars of society" were the leaders in organized degeneracy.

There were many others who would have accompanied McAllister to the penitentiary, but they flew the coop and Portland knows them no more.

"MOTHER" JONES at this writing is still held a prisoner in the custody of the state militia of West Virginia. "Mother" Jones has not only been charged with inciting to murder, but she is likewise charged with stealing a machine gun, one of those weapons used by the hired guards of the coal barons.

If "Mother" Jones is guilty of the awful crime of stealing a murderous machine from the paid assassins of the coal corporations, then she must be wonderfully clever, or else the thugs are a bunch of numbskulls.

When a woman in her eightieth year can steal a machine gun from an aggregation of brutal degenerates who have made murder a profession, there must be something radically wrong with the noodles of the bloodhounds.

The charge is so ludicrous as to be disgusting.

A COURT IN THE STATE OF GEORGIA sentenced a boy ten years of age to serve eleven years in the Industrial School of the state. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of Georgia—and the sentence of the lower court was affirmed.

What crime did the ten-year-old boy commit to be visited with such a sentence?

Did he commit murder?

Did he apply the torch to the city in which he lived and destroy millions of dollars' worth of property?

Did he wreck a railroad train and usher scores of human beings into eternity?

No. This boy only stole a bottle of soda water, and for this crime, the highest court in the state of Georgia upholds a decision which places a child eleven long years behind the walls of a prison.

Georgia must be in in Russia.

DAVID GOLDSTEIN, who was once circumcised, and afterwards baptized in the Catholic Church, is having a rough road to travel in his Crusade against Socialism. In nearly every town and city of importance the Israelite who deserted the faith of his ancestors and became a Catholic in order that he might get on the payroll of a German-Catholic Lecture Bureau is confronted with Socialists, who puncture the fallacies of the hired Hessian who is slandering Socialism for revenue only.

David has no yearning to meet Socialists in debate, and almost invariably refuses to be drawn into a discussion by those Socialists who attend his meeting and propound questions that kindle the wrath of the purchased defamer who draws a regular salary as a traveling professional vilifier.

David, as well as other salaried maligners of Socialism, will soon be forced to meet Socialists on the platform, otherwise, their paymasters will refuse to furnish ducats for the hungry cowards.

OILY JOHN gives the following advice to people who are desirous of preserving their health .

"As most persons eat too much, my theory is to get up from the table a little hungry. That is one sure way to keep one's health."

The above advice will not be needed by several millions of men, women and children in this country. There is no danger that the exploited victims of department stores, laundries, factories, mills and sweat shops, will injure their health through over-eating. If being hungry will protect health, then the woman working for $5.00 per week must be suffering on account of health.

There can be no gluttons among the overworked and ill-paid victims of exploitation, and the advice of Rockefeller will have no interest for millions of men and women whose wages do not even purchase the real necessaries of life.

Rockefeller's advice is for such gentlemen as Morgan, Frick, Corey, Carnegie, Belmont, Taft and other gluttons with corpulent bank accounts. Wage slaves will always be healthy providing that hunger protects health.

HUMAN BLOOD, human life, under the present industrial form of society, is so cheap that even a sweet child's life, as a wage-earner, in the factory, can be bought for a few cents a day—almost a drug on the market, the 'labor market." So cheap indeed is the life of the wage working class that the blood cost of war is regarded as comparatively unimportant by all except those who are sneeringly referred to as "sentimental people." These "sentimental people" presume to assert that the superiority of the nation's civilization is more convincingly indicated by its sacred regard for the purity and dignity of human blood than by its cheap and swaggering boasts about big battleships, "blooded" cattle "blooded" horses and "young men not only willing but anxious to fight," or by the nation's strutting announcement of our "readiness" to spill the toiler's blood at the factory door and on the battlefield.

Cheaply spilt human blood surely indicates a civilization fundamentally coarse and cheap.

Until human blood, human life, becomes too sacred to be sold for casht o escape starvation or bought for cash to win a profit on the bartered labor power—too sacred to be thus placed on sale, exchanged in the 'labor market" as horses and sheep are bought and sold in the "live stock" market—until then it will simply be impossible to realize the hideousness of the blood cost of war, impossible to compute and realize the vastness of the red crome committed againstt he worikng class."—George R. Kirkpatrick, in "War—What For?"

PRESIDENT WILSON, we are told by a Democratic newspaper, has informed the Democratic leaders in the House and Senate that he considers the proposal to exempt labor unions and farmers' organizations from the operation of the anti-trust law to be "class legislation of the most vicious character."

Mr. Wilson's attitude is consistent with his pre-election utterances. He has deceived no one. The deception, if there has been any, has been worked by Mr. Wilson's "labor supporters." If any workingman has been deceived he has been deceived by his own leaders. Mr. Wilson has practiced no duplicity.

The inclusion of labor unions and farmers' organizations by the Supreme Court in its interpretation of the anti-trust law has resulted in some striking inconsistencies in the government's relations with such organizations.

The agricultural department has been urging farmers to form cooperative marketing organizations. It has devised plans for such organizations and spent large sums of money to impress upon the farmers the benefit of organization. Yet when these plans have been submitted to the department of justice to find if they come within the inhibitions of the anti-trust law, the department has refused to give an opinion. Its attitude has been:

"Go ahead and see! If it's legal, you'll be acquitted. If it's illegal, we'll send you to jail!"

Mr. Wilson, we take it, believes that if they organize they ought to go to jail. He's true to his principles: Every man for himself—the devil take the hindmost!—Milwaukee Leader.

IN HIS ISSUE of the Miners' Magazine under the heading, "Creede Resurrected," appears a lengthy article from the pen of J. J. Kennedy. The communication is worthy of admiration, as it comes from the pen of a man who uses no embellishments to express his thoughts and opinions.

His article is couched in plain, simple language that can be readily understood by the average working man, and the points made in his article will appeal strongly to men of close observation. Men who stand outside the pale of organized labor offer many specious excuses for their failure in joining hands with their fellowmen in a movement to advance the material interests of the working class. These men who stand apart from organized labor are perfectly willing to accept all the benefits that may accrue from the presence of the labor organization in a mining district, but they are reluctant in paying their prorata share in the maintenance of the only organization that protects the employé in the industrial field.

There are some men who claim to be Socialists who look upon the labor organization as retarding the growth and development of the political movement which is looked upon by them as the only means by which labor is to win economic liberty.

These men do not seem to realize that there must be industrial solidarity, ere labor can show class solidarity at the ballot box.

It is beyond the comprehension of man to conceive of political unity among the worikng class while divided and scattered on the industrial field.

Industrial and political solidarity, mean the overthrow of capitalism and the emancipation of labor.

Living in the Past

IN IMPOSING SENTENCE upon the convicted officials of the cash register trust, Judge Hollister of Cincinnati, said: "You men belong to the walk of life which should set the example. You have lost the opportunity that was given you by the methods which you pursued. In your desire for gain you forgot everything else. The government is strong enough to protect its people, whether this protection extends to the transportation of dynamite across the land for the purpose of blowing up bridges or to the laying of hands upon men who seek to stifle competition by illegal business methods." Judge Hollister's remarks ought to be read by every American citizen—Durango Democrat.

The remarks of Judge Hollister show conclusively that he belongs to the age of the stage coach and the ox-cart. The man who stands for competition whether on the bench or in the humblest walks of life, demonstrates that his grasp of economics is narrow and contracted, and that he scarcely realizes that the world moves. Men who "seek to stifle competition by illegal business methods" are looked upon as criminals by Judge Hollister, but the question arises, what constitutes illegal business methods? The Cash Register trust has been prosecuted on the grounds that it is a monoply and yet, monoply is but the natural results of the very system which we support and uphold. The man who carried passengers on a stage or who delivered freight through the means of the ox-team some fifty years ago had cause to prosecute the railroads, on the ground that the railroads stifled competition.

The railroads relegated to the scrap-pile the business of the stage coach and the ox-team, but owners of stage lines and ox-teams finding their business destroyed through the railroads, had no standing in court under the plea that the railroads strifled competition. The student of economics knows that competition means death and that co-operation means life.

It is but natural that men in trade, commerce and finance shall combine, for in combination, that waste is eliminated that is found in competition.

The trust is the product of our industrial system, and the legislative body that provides penalties against men who combine in business and the court that imposes fines or imprisonment against men simply because they have entered combines to escape the disastrous effects of competition, are blind to the system that makes it absolutely necessary for men to come together in great combinations.

The man in commerce, finance or industry who stands alone in these days of amalgamation is doomed, for he can only protect his individual interests by placing such interests behind the bulwarks of the trust.

When the people reach a certain standard of intelligence they will not denounce the trust, but will demand that trusts shall become the collective property of all the people, and through collective ownership, industrial oppression will be eliminated. In other words, the trusts privately owned are teaching the people that an industrial democracy is the remedy that will cure our economics ills.

The Slime of the Slanderers

THE SYNDICALIST published at Chicago, Illinois, had the following to say editorially of the generosity manifested by the delegates of the United Mine Workers of Illinois towards the striking miners of West Virginia:

"The Illinois miners in convention amid the wildest enthusiasm, voted to assess themselves $100.000 for the benefit of the West Virginia strikers. They also voted to give them the remaining $800,000 in their treasury if it becomes necessary. This incident clearly proves that the miners' union is "an adjunct of the capitalist class."

In order that the readers of the Magazine may know something about the freaks who are responsible for such lunacy, it is only necessary to relate that one Jay Fox who was formerly a promoter of a defunct sheet known as the "Agitator" is editor, while another peculiar type of male mechanism known as W. Z. Foster, is manager.

Both of these so-called revolutionists, who are advocates of syndicalism" "direct action" "sabotage" or any other old propaganda that appeals to men who are more impulsive than thoughtful, are now engaged boosting for the I. W. W., and urging members of the I. W. W., to get inside the bona-fide labor organizations in order that they may be captured for that hungry horde of professional hoodlums whose free-speech fiascos are no longer yielding dividends.

Let us analyse the editorial paragraph of "The Syndicalist, this miserable rag, that brands the United Mine Workers of America as "an adjunct of the Capitalist Class," simply because, the delegates in an annual convention in the state of Illinois voted $100,000 to the striking miners of West Virginia and further declare that their whole treasury of $800,000 is at the command of the victims of corporate oppression providing it is needed to wrest victory from the soulless coal-barons of a state, that seems to know no law or constitution that gives any recognition to human rights.

An organization that is willing to empty its treasury in a battle against greed and for human liberty, is branded as "an adjunct of Capitalism" by an I. W. W. sheet, whose scribblers were never known to make a personal sacrifice in aid of struggling humanity.

Had the United Mine Workers' of Illinois no money in its treasury to give to the starving victims of corporate greed in West Virginia and refused to assess themselves, but decreed to bum other organizations for the funds to fight plutocracy, in the thug ruled and Cossask-ridden coal fields of West Virginia then the "Syndicalist and other slander-slinging organs of the yelping dervishes would have hailed such a bankrupt organization as revolutionary and worthy of bearing the seal of Class-consciousness, but the United Mine Workers' are men of the labor movement, who believe in taxing themselves to fight the battles of the working class, and because they levy such assessments on themselves as will provide a treasury whose funds are used to keep men, women and children from enduring the agonies of want during strikes and lockouts, they are members of an organization, that is "an adjunct of the Capitalist Class."

Had the United Mine Workers established soup-houses for chronic vagrants and veteran booze-guzzlers on money filched from laboring men, under the guize of free speech; had the membership been leeches and parasites and "worked the workers" with circulars that shamed truth and crowned falsehood with respectability, then such men would be worthy of the disgusting flattery of the moral and mental cripples of the Bummery.

Real union men should give this paragraph of "The Syndicalist" serious consideration, and when another appeal for funds comes from the promoters of the "Slander Syndicate," let it be known that workless beggars cannot spew their slime on the United Mine Workers and escape with impunity.

Liberty

Eugene V. Debs.

LIBERTY is not a word of modern coinage. Liberty and slavery are primal words, like good and evil, right and wrong; they are opposites and coexistent.

There has been no liberty in the world since the gift, like sunshine and rain, came down from heaven, for the maintenance of which man has not been required to fight, and man's complete degradation is secured only when subjugation and slavery has sapped him of the last spark of the noble attributes of his nature and reduced him to the unresisting inertness of a clod.

The theme tonight is personal liberty; or, giving it its full height, depth and breadth, American liberty, something that Americans have been accustomed to eulogize since the foundation of the Republic, and multiplied thousands of them continue in the habit to this day because they do not recognize the truth that in the imprisonment of one man in defiance of all constitutional guarantees, the liberties of all are invaded and placed in peril. In saying this, I conjecture I have struck the keynote of alarm.

For the first time in the records of all the ages, the inalienable rights of man, "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," were proclaimed, July 4th, 1776.

It was then that crowns, scepters, thrones and the divine right of kings to rule, sunk together, and man expanded to glorious liberty and sovereignty. It was then that the genius of Liberty, speaking to all men in the commanding voice of Eeternal Truth bade them assert their heaven-decreed prerogatives and emancipate themselves from bondage. It was a proclamation countersigned by the Infinite—and man stood forth the coronated sovereign of the world, free as the tides that flow, free as the winds that blow, and on that primal morning when creation was complete, the morning stars and the sons of God, in anthem chorus, sang the song of liberty. It may be a fancy, but within the limitless boundaries of the imagination I can conceive of no other theme more appropriate to weave into the harmonies of freedom. The Creator had surveyed his work and pronounced it good, but nothing can be called good in human affairs with liberty eliminated. As well talk of air without nitrogen, or water without oxygen, as of goodness without liberty.

It does not matter that the Creator has sown with stars the fields of ether and decked the earth with countless beauties for man's enjoyment. It does not matter that air and ocean teem with the wonders of innumerable forms of life to challenge man's admiration and investigation. It does not matter that nature spreads forth all her scenes of beauty and gladness and pours forth all the melodies of her myriad-tongued voices for man's delectation. If liberty is ostracised and exiled, man is a slave, and the world rolls in space and whirls around the sun a gilded prison, a domed dungeon, and though painted in all the enchanting hues that infinite art could command, it must still stand forth a blotch amidst the shining spheres of the sidereal heavens, and those who cull from the vocabularies of nations living or dead, their flashing phrases with which to apostrophize liberty, are engaged in perpetuating the most stupendous delusion the ages have known. Strike down liberty, no matter by what subtle and infernal art the deed is done, the spinal cord of humanity is sundered and the world is paralyzed by the indescribable crime.

Strike the fetters from the slave, give him liberty and he becomes an inhabitant of a new world. He looks abroad and beholds life and joy in all things around him. His soul expands beyond all boundaries Emancipated by the genius of Liberty, he aspires to communion with all that is noble and beautiful and feels himself allied to all the higher order of intelligences; and he walks abroad, redeemed from animalism, ignorance and superstition, a new being throbbing with glorious life.

What pen or tongue, from primeval man to the loftiest intellect of the present generation, has been able to fittingly anathematize the more than satanic crime of stealing the jewel of liberty from the crown of manhood and reducing the victim of the burglary to slavery or to prison, to gratify those monsters of iniquity who for some inscrutable reason are given breath to contaminate the atmosphere and poison every fountain and stream designed to bless the world!

It may be questioned if such interrogatories are worth the time required to state them and I turn from their consideration to the actualities of my theme. As Americans, we have boasted of our liberties and continue to boast of them. They were once the nation's glory, and, if some have vanished, it may be well to remember that a remnant still remains. Out of prison, beyond the limits of Russian injunctions, out of reach of a deputy marshal's club, above the throttling clutch of corporations and the enslaving power of plutocracy, out of range of the government's machine guns and knowing the location of judicial traps and deadfalls, Americans may still indulge in the exaltation of liberty, though pursued through every lane and avenue of life by the baying hounds of usurped and unconstitutional power, glad if when night lets down her sable curtains, they are out of prison, though still the wage-slaves of a plutocracy which, were it in the celestial city, would wreck every avenue leading up to the throne of the Infinite by stealing the gold with which they are paved and then debauch Heaven's supreme court to obtain a decision that the command "thou shalt not steal" is unconstitutional.

Liberty, be it known, is for those only who dare strike the blow to secure and retain the priceless boon. It has been written that the "love of liberty with life is given" and that life itself is an inferior gift; that with liberty exiled life is a continuous curse and that "an hour of liberty is worth an eternity of bondage." It would be an easy task to link together gilded periods extolling liberty until the mind, weary with delight, becomes oblivious of the fact that while dreaming of security, the blessings we magnified had, one by one and little by little disappeared emphasizing the truth of the maxim that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Is it worth while to iterate that all men are created free and that slavery and bondage are in contravention of the Creator's decree and have their origin in man's depravity?

If liberty is a birthright which has been wrested from the weak by the strong or has been placed in peril by those who were commissioned to guard it as Gheber priests watch the sacred fires they worship, what is to be done? Leaving all other nations, kindred and tongues out of the question, what is the duty of Americans? Above all, what is the duty of American workingmen whose liberties have ben placed in peril? They are not hereditary bondsmen. Their fathers were free born—their sovereignty none denied and their children yet have the ballot. It has been called "a weapon that executes a free man's will as lightning does the will of God." It is a metaphor pregnant with life and truth. There is nothing in our government it can not remove or amend. It can make and unmake Presidents and Congresses and courts. It can abolish unjust laws and consign to eternal odium and oblivion unjust judges, strip from them their robes and gowns and send them forth unclean as lepers to bear the burden of merited obloquy as Cain with the mark of a murderer. It can sweep away trusts, syndicates, corporations, monopolies, and every other abnormal development of the money power designed to abridge the liberties of workingmen and enslave them by the degradation incident to poverty and enforced idleness, as cyclones scatter the leaves of the forest. The ballot can do all this and more. It can give our civilization its crowning glory—the co-operative commonwealth.

To the unified hosts of American workingmen fate has committed the charge of rescuing American liberties from the grasp of the vandal horde that have placed them in peril, by seizing the ballot and wielding it to regain the priceless heritage and to preserve and transmit it without scar or blemish to the generations yet to come.

"Snatch from the ashes of their sires
The embers of their former fires,
And he who in the strife expires
Will add to theirs a name of fear
That Tyranny shall quake to hear."

The "Bummery" in Denver

THE VOLUNTARY VAGRANTS of Denver who claim to be members of that perpetually distressed organization known as the I. W. W. are becoming desperate at the manner in which the Bums are being neglected in Colorado's largest city. Under the heading "On to Denver," we find the following in "Solidarity," published at New Castle, Pa.:

Denver, Colo., March 11.

Forward, march, you fighters, and come to the aid of Local 26. You must realize that a crime is being committed here in Denver. The police are breaking the law, crying: "To hell with the Constitution of the United States." There has been going on for seven weeks a fight for free speech, and our men have not responded as they did at Spokane, Fresno and San Diego. Are you going to desert us now in our need and let the I. W. W. go down in defeat from the purple guards of the capitalists.

Again Local 26 asks you to come and help the fellow-workers who are behind the bars awaiting your aid. You know what it means to lose this fight; Local 26 will be put out of existence, and not only this local, but many others who depend upon the street corners to reach a certain class of slaves.

Put Denver on the map. Give the purple pups a lesson in direct action and what the I. W. W. really is. Let Chief O'Neill know that we are an organization of many and not a few, and that an injury to one is an injury to all. If, on the other hand, there be those who cannot come, let them hold meetings and send resolutions of protest to Governor Ammons and Mayor Arnold to put a stop to this outrage. Every little protest will help us and give the mayor and Chief O'Neill something to think about.

Yours for industrial freedom,

EXECUTIVE BOARD LOCAL 26.

The above letter sent to "Solidarity" and written by one Peter Murray, who is too strong to work, contains about as glaring falsehoods as generally flow from the pens of the literary celebrities of the "Bummery."

There is no "free speech" fight going on in Denver. There is no one being persecuted by the city authorities. A few professional tramps came to Denver a few months ago who claimed to be members of the I. W. W. and were given permission to speak at a certain corner on a certain street.

But as this corner and street was but a loafing resort for the unemployed and as the licensed jawsmiths discovered that these unemployed could not afford to make daily donations to the Bums who worked their mouths, it was decreed at a caucus held by the beneficiaries of the "Bummery" that the soap-box must be moved to a street where sufficient ducats could be secured to keep the "Bummery" in soup.

The police authorities refused the Bummery the new location selected by the Ciceros, and when they persisted in speaking on a street denied them by the authorities of Denver, they were arrested and charged with vagrancy, to which charge the "Bummery" pleaded guilty.

There is no violation of legal rights in Denver by the police force and if these vagrants had been unjustly dealt with, the labor movement of Denver would have taken up the fight and furnished the necessary funds to defray all legitimate expenses of a battle in court. But the "Bummery" in Denver knows that its letter in "Solidarity" is a brazen and shameless lie, but the Bummery realizes that some dupes may be caught who will believe that "free speech is in danger in Denver, Colorado." The dupe who sends any money to Denver, thinking that he is aiding a fight for "free speech" is more to be pitied than blamed, for his mental condition demands that his friends should take care of him.

Ascertain the Cause

NOWADAYS almost everybody is in favor of the social ownership of all public utilities—street railways, gas, etc—and all are agreed that it would be a good thing if the government would take over the railroads and such trusts as the Steel Trust, but the trouble is that we can not see that the social ownership of necessary things is the only way to secure the happiness and freedom of all.

It is frequently pointed out that the private ownership of necessary things is at the root of the colossal corruption that is eating the heart out of our boasted democracy. We know that the condition of the workers in the great industries is inhuman and degrading, while the masters of these plants are millionaires many times over and made so out of the sweat and blood of those who labor in return for a bare existence; and everybody knows, too, that the deaths in our industrial life are far greater than that of an army in war time yet we try to pour oil on these running social sores with never a thought of attacking the disease and never a move to abolish the cause. Everywhere we see goodness and energy poured out to bind up the wounds of society, and we give, in the name of charity, a Christmas dinner to hundreds of starving men, but make no move to secure them justice the other days of the year.

In a certain asylum they test out the patient by placing him in a room where there is an open faucet with the water pouring onto the floor, and tell him to clean up the room. Now, if the patient is very very crazy he will try to mop up the water—just as we do—but if he is not altogether too far gone, he will turn off the faucet and then proceed to clean up the floor.

"And isn't it time that we, ourselves, began to stop the flow of corruption and poverty that is festering in our midst to-day?" Instead of tinkering with symptoms, instead of trying to convict the men who corrupt, let us abolish the cause of the corruption; and instead of railing at the millionaires who make their wealth out of the competition of the workers for a job, let us make the industries the common property of all, so that all men can have access to the machinery and land that they need in order to make a living and reap the full product of their toil.

The remedy is so clear and so simple that the more enlightened men and women are to-day looking for the sources of our social misery, and are finding it in the fact that the workers are divorced from the means of providing themselves and their loved ones with the necessary things of life, while a few men claiming ownership of all the gifts of nature and of all that the genius of man has discovered, are using their power to wring more profit out of those who must use them in order to live. No man is fit to have such power over the lives of other men, and this is the cause of the misery and the wholesale corruption that poisons our life to-day, and the only thing worth while—the only thing worth living for—is to get into the fight for humanity, of restoring to the people the right to life, the right to apply their labor and the undiminished product of their toil.—Norman Dunbury in 'Frisco "Labor Clarion."

A Chain Is As Strong As Its Weakest Link

WE POINT OUT recently how the capitalist employers array one nationality against another in order to keep their workers in subjection. The workers must meet these tactics of the capitalists by organizing all the workers, regardless of racial lines.

There is an old saying that "a chain is as strong as its weakest link." This saying is absolutely true of organized labor. We are as strong as the weakest among us—and no stronger. Therefore, we must make special efforts to organize those groups which are in the most defenseless condition.

If the standard of living of those who are now organized into trade unions is to be maintained, the millions of immigrants who are now unorganized must be brought into these organizations or organized into new unions. Otherwise, whenever there is a strike there will always be thousands of non-union workers ready to take the strikers' places. Moreover, with the development of modern industry the capitalists are seeking to displace the skilled workers by the unskilled. This means that the unskilled must be organized just as strongly as the skilled in order to maintain living wage standards and to improve working conditions.

During the next five years the labor movement of America should spend millions of dollars to educate and organize the immigrants, both economically and politically. Every million dollars spent in such organization and education will save tens of millions in strike benefits and loss of wages.

The trades union movement has proved its usefulness by securing to the workers higher wages, shorter hours and improved sanitary conditions. Its continuous and rapid growth within the last two decades, in the industrial centers of the world, manifests its inherent mission in the gradual solution of the economic problems which confront the relations between labor and capital.

The working women constitute another great industrial group who have been sadly neglected. Out of the five or six million women engaged in industrial pursuits less than one hundred thousand are organized into trade unions. The capitalists are hiring women because they can get them cheaper than men.

Unless the women are organized, not only will their own wages be low, but they will undermine the wages and working conditions of the men. Therefore, from self-interest, if nothing else, those who are now organized in trade unions should make every effort to organize the working women.

It is only a question of time before the women will have the ballot in every state in the Union. They already vote in six states. Therefore it is necessary that they should be organized politically to stand side by side with their brothers in the struggle for political and economic freedom.

The labor movement of America can no longer take a purely defensive position. We must begin an agressive battle from coast to coast to organize every group of workers, both politically and economically. Our chief weapon in this struggle must be education.—Amalgamated Journal.

Shall This Man Be Left to His Enemies?

WE ARE unfeignedly glad to see that those powerful and intelligent trade union bodies, the Western Federation of Miners and the United Mine Workers of America, have decided to come to the aid of the famous labor lawyer, Clarence S. Darrow, who is about financially ruined through litigation forced on him by vengeful capitalism, not merely as an outcome of the McNamara trial, but as a result of his legal struggles in the cause of labor for a generation.

Though once acquitted of the charge of bribery, and once the jury was able to agree, his enemies are still pressing the same charge, and the third trial is set for a few days hence. That one of the objects of this persecution is his financial ruin is too palpable for denial, and whatever else they may fail in, this result is practically certain.

We feel assured that thousands of Socialist party members not connected with either the W. F. M. or the U. M. W. of A. will comprehend the nature and vital importance of this fight and participate with those trade union bodies in assisting to finance it. For this reason we direct attention to it editorially, though it has already been noted at considerable length in our news columns.

Donations can be sent to Ernest Mills, 605 Railroad Building, Denver, Colo. It may not be possible that organized labor and the Socialist party combined can ever reimburse Clarence Darrow for the time, energy, ability and money he has expended in championing the cause of labor in the courts of the relentless capitalist enemy but at least we can see to it that he does not go down under the feet of the common adversary for mere lack of money to conduct his defense. At the very least, we owe this man that much.

There is no bounds to the vengeance that capitalism, under the pretext of "justice," would wreak upon Darrow had it an absolutely free hand. To some extent at least we can checkmate its infamous design. Darrow has fought for us for a generation. We can at least fight for him for a few months as a small return for his services, even if we cannot fully reciprocate.—New York Call.

Intelligence Will Liberate Humanity

REV. JOHN W. LANGDALE delivered an address recently in the Avondale Methodist Church at Cincinnati taking for his subject "The Problem of Poverty."

The clerical gentleman handled his subject without gloves and his bare-knuckle jolts must have wounded the sensitive feelings of well-fed and wel-groomed church members.

Langdale declared that "extreme wealth on one hand and poverty on the other are the evils of civilization."

He contended that while charity may cover a multitude of sins, it also created sin, and that many of the donations given to hospitals and similar institutions was but conscience money given by those who felt that they owed something to humanity. Langdale does not believe in the "blessings of poverty" for he declared that "poverty is a sister of death and a cousin of hell."

The ideas expressed by this preacher demonstrate that he is not shackled by the hoary dogmas of a past age, but that he has heard the mutterings of discontent from the impoverished slaves of a nation that boasts of democracy.

Men of the Langdale type in the church, are realizing that promises of sumptuous apartments for the poor in a world that is merely based on creeds, will no longer placate the victims of industrial oppression whose misery is due to the economic wrongs of a system, that enthrones the dollar and degrades humanity.

Men in the ranks of labor who read and think, believe that it should not be necessary for human beings to die from the effects of poverty in order to win that promised inheritance of an invisible world, but that joy and happiness should reign upon earth, and that poverty can be swept from the face of this old planet, when the victims of poverty unite and decree that the comparatively few shall no longer revel in luxury and splendor on the sweat and suffering of the many.

Ignorance is the greatest enemy of the human race, but ignorance is rapidly being dispelled by lessons that are being learned in the cruel school of experience.

Detective Burns Soliciting Business

THE FOLLOWING is a circular letter sent out by the William J. Burns National Detective Agency to employers, soliciting their patronage.

The WILLIAM J. BURNS NATIONAL DETECTIVE AGENCY, Inc.
Representing American Bankers Association.

Seattle, Wash, March 12, 1913.

Gentlemen:

We desire to call your attention to our industrial department, wherein we maintain a competent force of experienced operatives, comprising every nationality and occupation.

Our system of inspection and checking of employés must certainly appeal to every business man who desires to secure the most efficient service from them, and to know whether they are honest, loyal and working together as one, without friction, finally attaining profits.

Agitators are a detriment to any business, and by eliminating these, strikes and all other labor troubles are controlled, prevented or reduced to a minimum.

By having a secret service operating in your plant, you can know just what is going an at all times. They mix up with the employés, finding out just how they feel towards their employers—just what their grievances are, if any.

They being skilled, scrutinize the work and carefully point out the defects, if any exist. They in addition to the information, furnish a good day's work, thereby making the cost of the information furnished comparatively slight to you.

You pay a large amount of money each year for fire insurance, employers' liability insurance, etc. Why not pay a modest premium to insure yourself against labor troubles? Also to insure yourself in favor of efficiency?

No matter what you may have in mind, we would be pleased to take it up with you futher, and respectfully ask an interview for one of our representatives.

Very truly yours,

The WILLIAM J. BURNS NATIONAL DETECTIVE AGENCY, Inc.
WALTER R. THAYER, Manager.

The above letter is similar in character to the circular letters sent out by all other agencies that furnish spies and spotters for employers of labor. The vast majority of moral degenerates who are on the payroll of detective agencies are criminals, for even Burns himself has declared openly that almost all detectives are "crooks."

Burns stands no higher in the scale of manhood or honor than the "crooks" whom he desires to place in mines, mills and factories at so much per "crook."

Detective agencies are no longer engaged in uncovering criminals, but are continually engaged in conspiracies to fasten crime on members of organized labor. The detective agency has been made the ally of employers' associations, manufacturers' associations and mine operators' associations, and were it not for the revenue received from the combinations that are fighting the labor movement, the detective agencies would go out of business.

An Eloquent Review of the Trials at Indianapolis

MISS MARY FIELD, the brilliant writer who was sent to Indianapolis to report the proceedings of the trial of the Iron Workers, for "organized labor" of San Francisco, has returned to her home.

On her journey home Miss Field by invitation of the Central Labor Council of Los Angeles stopped off in the city of General Otis and the M. & M. Association, and was tendered a banquet by her host of admirers. Miss Field and Clarence Darrow were the guests of honor, and after the guests had dined, many speeches were made by those present.

Clarence Darrow delivered a masterly and eloquent address, and was followed by Miss Field, whose review of the great trial at Indianapolis as published in The Citizen, is worthy of perusal by every member of organized labor in this country.

Miss Field spoke as follows:

We were told by the newspapers that a "trial" of some forty odd defendants took place in Indianapolis last fall. As usual we have been misinformed. No such procedure occured. A farce-tragedy was, however, enacted in the Indianapolis Federal Court. The last scene of which was the "conviction" of thirty-eight labor leaders.

In these lofty court rooms with their suppressions and stilted formalities, their marble and mahogany, their subservient attaches, it is more diffieult to recognize the class struggle than out on the crude industrial field. Here the struggle is written in more subtle and hidden terms. Here capital, wealth, education, law, is imposing, omnipotent. Into these courts labor comes as defendant with his cheap clothes, his ungrammatical speech, his ignorance of the wiles of the law. He hears the word, that holy word of the courts, "precedent," echo and re-echo through the sacred stillness and he knows that his case has no precedent. for his problem is one of life and not of property; that the question of his guilt or innocence is one which cannot be decided by the yellow, musty books of the past to which a prejudiced judge turns for authority.

"Steel Armored Court."

There was a judge in Indianapolis in that steel armored court. Had he and the district attorney been paid by the United States Steel Corporation for their services, they could not have more expeditiously and more eagerly have served their master. Whether the conscious or unconscious tool of that great corporation makes no difference in the result. Thin of body, narrow of soul, meager of vision was the judge, the epitome of the steel trust, itself, masterly of mind, heartless and bloodless. From the outside of the case it was apparent that counsel for the defense was there in court only "by courtesy." So arrogant, so overbearing, so intolerant was the judge that it was well nigh impossible for counsel for the defense to present their case. With threats of contempt proceedings, with constant beratings, the lawyers for the defense were hampered and intimidated and made to appear to the jury as criminals themselves.

The district attorney prosecuted the case with the ferocity and brutality of a wolf. All the prejudice and hatred of the class he so ably serves rose and fell in his voice as it roared its own vast virtue, and bellowed forth labor's mighty sins. A butcher with a college education is District Attorney Miller, who cannot see beyond the glittering cleaver of the law with which he fills his victims.

The jurymen were old Hoosiers. Much of the time they slumbered. What did they, Indiana farmers, know of the vast struggle out in a world beyond their farms? what did they who walked securely in their corn fields know of the men who risked their lives daily on spans and beams girders? what could they in their stupid security and drowsy ignorance know of the colossal power that sought to crush, to reduce to slavery these defendants. As well bolster up twelve corpses! the jury, as required in all jury service, were men of property. Their sympathy was with capital, with precedent, with capital's methods of taking life.

An Impossible Task

But aside from all these considerations it was humanly impossible to weigh and consider so vast an amout of evidence as poured down upon that jury and to measure justly thereby the degree of guilt of the various defendants. Dozens of hotel registers, photographs, dynamite cases, tin cans, handwriting, suit cases circus posters bills of lading, caps, theater tickets, newspaper clippings, fuzes, 400 letters, 3,000 witnesses, magazines, picture postals, wire and umbrella handles rattled down upon the jury.

No wonder they threw up their hands and in one day said all but two— they had to say one or two to give an impression of careful deliberation—were guilty on all counts or on 1040 points! Then inability to sift "the just from the unjust" was evinced by the fact that the judge immediately set aside their verdict and let five more victims of a jury's justice out of the steel trap.

For the human mind—and I am not sure these minds were human —to try a case involving the collection and individual guilt of forty defendants, involving questions of greater or less responsibility, involving great social issues as well as technical or legal guilt is absolutely impossible,—even with a fair and unbiased jury.

Burn's Men Pillars

As to the evidence: The temple of justice erected by the prosecutors rested upon those noble pillars, Burns' detectives and labor's betrayers; upon men, who though in the employ of the government received their pay from the Steel Trust. Robert J. Foster, "chief investigator" for the Steel Trust, a man of disreputable character and history dishonorably discharged from the U. S. Army, a ruffian by nature and by occupation was one of the chief witnesses for the government. All the letters of the Structural Steel Workers introduced into evidence were branded with the initials "R. J. F." of the Steel Trust.

The keystone in the carefully constructed arch of the Steel Trust Conspiracy case vs. Labor, was the malignant, malicious McManigal and about him were mortared the testimony of informers, stool pigeons, traitors, labor haters and liars. It is an old story that men should save their own lives by betraying their fellows, but it remained for the McManigal, the dime-novel hero, his little ego inflated to bursting, to take the stand and to send his brothers behind bars, in a spirit of joy. Not a sign of contrition for his own deeds, not a quaver of sympathy at the sight of the wife and little child of the defendant whom he was involving in his gleeful recital, not a gesture of pity, not a twinge of sorrow, not a shadow of remorse! McManigal is enough to make the whole human race of which he is a member bow its head in shame.

Mass of Evidence

Four hundred letters out of the 60,000 stolen from the Iron workers headquarters were introduced into evidence, and of these 400 only bits, slivers, sentences were taken. "Dynamite," "Conspiracy," they all spelled to the noisy district attorney. But he failed to see thro' his steel rimmed glasses, in all these letters a record of a great class struggle of men battling for life against inhuman odds; to read therein the old, old story of work, hard, dangerous, monotonous work, of privation; of fear; of winter; of sacrifice; of brotherhood and of death.

The technical question of "guilt" or "innocence" of these men is a matter which greatly interests the Steel Trust and its servants, Burns Fredericks, Miller, Otis, Foster. Labor, however, sees something greater than the petty issue of capital's courts. It sees the class struggle in which this Indianapolis farce is but an incident. Labor sees beneath the polish of mahogany, the richness of environment, the deathlike, stillness of these courts. Labor sees that back of this immediate question of lesser guilt or innocence looms mountain-high the greater guilt of the Steel Corporation. To capital's charge of "21 innocent lives," to the steel tears that the charge elicits, Labor replies, "21,000 lives, aye and more!" Lives. broken and crushed and mangled, or dying the slower death of starvation and privation. When capital points its bloody fingers to the Times disaster, Labor points its wasted hand to the death roll of the iron workers, to the poverty-swept hills of Homestead and McKee's Rocks! Labor answers Capital, "It may be that our brothers, driven in the frenzy of despair in their impatience at slower, surer methods, have attacked the citadel of capital with violence. But if they have, Labor refuses to join the manhunt for vengeance, for Labor understands, and Labor refuses to sing in the chorus with Burns, Foster and Miller"

Gates of Prison

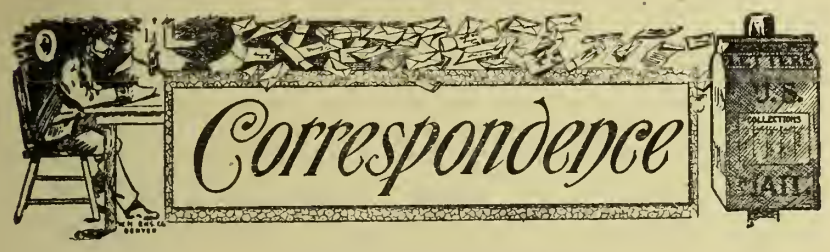
Labor knows too, that these questions of social maladjustments cannot be solved in the Courts of Property. Labor knows that when a working man enters these portals, "Guilty" is the sentence already prepared for him; that invisibly and invincibly behind the judge's chair lie the gates of the penitentiary.

Labor should not be surprised that Judge Anderson "exercised undue haste" in accelerating the movement of the defendants to Leavenworth. The train for the conveyance of "75 or more passengers of Leavenworth" was submitted to the jury. The jury having "deliberated" one day, slept on their verdict Friday night, bringing in their instructions,—I mean their verdict,—Saturday morning, thus making it impossible, as courts close Saturday noon, to secure the customary stay of sentence which is issued upon taking an appeal to the higher courts.

Monday morning the men were sentenced, openly paraded through the streets, followed by moving picture men, and subjected to the humiliation and indignity of the stares of the curious throngs.

Society Like Ostrich

By Tuesday morning the men were in jail, peans of praise were ascending to the skys, from the goldthroats of the press, and society, ostrich-like with its head in the sand, rejoiced that now once more it it was safe. And in the din of capital's rejoicing, the deep mutter from the hills of Pittsburg is scarcely heard!



INFORMATION WANTED.

Information is wanted of the whereabouts of Bernhard Tilly who came to America in the early part of the year 1870, and was then about 18 years of age. He came from Brakel, Hoxter county, Westphalen. Germany, and is now near 60 years old. When last heard from was in the year 1890, and was then working in a silver mine at Kingston, Sierra county, New Mexico. Anyone knowing his present address will confer a great favor by writing to Ferdinand Neusius, 494 Ninth avenue, New York, N. Y.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Ymir, B. C., March 19, 1913.

Miners' Magazine, Denver, Colorado:

Anyone knowing the present address of William Girvan, Belfast, Ireland, will please send his address to his daughter, Miss Sarah Girvan, 38 Clara St., Belfast, Ireland. Left the Ymir district about November 1, 1912.

USE THE LABEL.

Denver, Colo., March 28, 1913.

Editor Miners' Magazine:

If you can afford a little space in your valuable magazine I wish to say that the Carpenters' District Council of the city of Denver have been successful in getting their label on all goods manufactured by The Rocky Mountain Casket Company, located at No. 888 South Broadway, in the city of Denver, and any patronage that your brother members can put this way will be highly appreciated by the Brotherhood of Carpenters.

As this is the only casket factory west of Chicago using the label, we would like to see it made a success.

Thanking you for your favor, we remain Yours fraternally,

CARPENTERS' DISTRICT COUNCIL,
FRANK GARDELL, President.
BERT WHITE, Secretary

LOOK OUT FOR THIS FRAUD.

Spokane, Wash., March 18, 1913.

All City Central Labor Councils and Friends, Greeting:

In order that we may protect the labor organizations and members, also business men of the country from being defrauded, it becomes necessary for the Spokane Sectional Central Labor Council to warn all city central labor councils and others that a man has been grafting, representing himself as being at the head of national label leagues and the Lord only knows how many other fake organizations he is at the head of.

This man, Louis LeClair, formerly a member of the Electrical Workers of this city, and at one time secretary of the local card and label league, has, as we have been informed, been passing off as a trade unionist, at the head of the above organization. He was kicked out of the movement in this city and advertised by our local labor paper.

We wish to warn everyone that he is a fake, and not entitled to the least consideration at the hands of the labor movement or its friends, and the sooner these facts are known to you all, the better for our movement, as any good trade unionist does not want this kind of a man grafting the public, and giving in turn a black eye to the labor movement of our country.

Trusting you will give this communication as much publicity as possible, we beg to remain, Fraternally yours,

SPOKANE SECTIONAL CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL,

VICTOR HUGO'S PROPHECY.

For four hundred years the human race has left its plain vestige behind We enter now upon great centuries.

The sixteenth century will be known as the age of painters, the seventeenth will be termed the age of writers, the eighteenth the age of philosophers, the nineteenth the age of apostles and prophets.

To satisfy the nineteenth century it is necessary to be the painter of the sixteenth, the writer of the seventeenth, the philosopher of the eighteenth and it is necessary to have the inmate and holy love of humanity which constitutes an apostle and opens up a prophetic vista into the future.

In the twentieth century, war will be dead, the scaffold will be dead, animosity will be dead, aristocracy will be dead, but MAN WILL LIVE.

For there will be one country—that country the whole earth; for all there will but one hope—that hope the whole heaven.

All hail, then, to that noble century, which shall own our children, and which our children shall inherit!

LABORS PROTECTIVE UNION NO. 8079 AFFILIATED WITH THE A. F. OF L. AND THE N. Y. S. F. OF L.

Mineville, New York, March 18, 1913.

To the Members of Organized Labor and sympathizers.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

The strike at Mineville is still being fought, and the men and women of the district are making a determined stand against the inhuman and atrocious conduct of the companies and their deputized private police who have resorted to every possible expedient in their efforts to compel the strikers to return to work and break their own strike.

Superintendents and bosses have compelled a tribute of graft for jobs and the same for the privilege of living in company houses. Justice courts are operated for profit, and many, mostly foreigners, have been mercilessly exploited thereby, but after an investigation by a state department, nothing but a request to those involved, to resign, resulted, and the companies are now using these officials in their efforts to oust unionism from this district.

Men have been taken from their beds and compelled to work at the points of guns; others have been thrown into jail because they refused to become scabs. Men and women have been beaten and are practically without recourse at law, and now the strikers are being evicted and with their wives and children are fiendishly thrown out; little children three and four years of age, without shoes or stockings and otherwise woefully short of clothing, have been forced out at six o'clock in the morning into the snow and ice with the thermometer down near to the zero point. Babes in arms have received practically the same treatment, and motherhood has been made the laughing stock of the hired thugs employed by the greedy corporations. Families, without having time properly to dress themselves have been forced out at this early hour.

Jury trials have been denied our men where the statutes stipulate that they shall be given, and the will of the mine managers has superseded law in Mineville, and our workers do not propose to submit to these wrongs, and are determined to maintain their union and abolish the savage conditions to which the companies are endeavoring to keep them bound.

These are the things and conditions which our strikers are fighting. Will you not help in our struggle? We must have financial assistance to win our strike and we ask you to come to our aid with a donation at this time. Our men and women are satisfied to suffer the hardship of eviction, and many of them are practically without resources to continue the battle unless help is given.

Nothing stands in the way of victory now but the necessary money with which to continue the struggle. If you can, please respond immediately to our appeal.

Address all communications to James Young, Treasures, Mineville, Essex Co., New York.

CREEDE RESURRECTED.

Creede Local, prominent by its prolonged silence, can once more claim for its membership about 60 per cent of eligibles working in and around the mines. This doesn't sound like closed-shop talk, nor does the present outlook indicate it will be in the immediate future, but through the activities of those alert to their best interests our union has increased from twenty to one hundred, or thereabouts, and though we may have most of the wheat separated from the chaff, our more active members have not despaired of their fixed hope of making this a thoroughly union camp, and actuated by this desire they keep knocking incessantly for admission to the small chamber of intellect, encompassed by a heavy bulwark of bone the chief asset of the non-union miner).

In the many excuses they offer for failure to join our ranks, there's nothing really new, and are interesting only to the extent of their absurdity. One will admit he one time belonged, and somehow in the language of the "Cousin Jack" he lost his bit drag with the boss, while another was inveigled into going out on strike one time in his whole life and remained out two long days and didn't win a thing, so what's the use? But the most surprising and inconsistent excuses come from a source least expected by any one familiar with the modern policies of our up-to-date economic movements.

We have a Socialist Local here, dominated in the main by members who consider it taking a step backward to belong to any branch of the trades union movement. Well, I belong myself to the Socialist party. I don't claim membership here any more since I found there's no law laid down by the Socialist party forcing me to retain membership in a Local of non-union miners, while I do know of a law that permits me to belong to one composed of union men when my application is not rejected.

I have many times heard the labor movement criticized for advancing too slowly, but it remained for some of our carping critics here to inform me it's in an advanced stage of retrogression. Of course, I can't state what kind of literature my esteemed friends read, but I fancy I smell the fumes of Dan De Leon's doctrine or, perchance, it's the aftermath of the voice of the late saviour of man, who so recently contributed to our heretofore incomplete vocabulary the word "sabotage." In any event, we're content to know their attitude don't reflect the sentiment expressed by advanced thinkers, such as Kier Hardie, who recently reprimanded some of our Eastern comrades for standing aloof from their craft unions for reasons similar to the above set forth. Many non-union men here complain that to pay dues is unjust. I agree with them, especially as it applies to their case. For instance, the most of the non-union men here are working for a company that won't pay more than $3 per day, while the union miners are, with three exceptions, getting $3.50 per day.

You're right, Mr. Non-Union Miner, you're paying dues to the company to the tune of $15 per month. That's too high. Come with us; we only charge $1 per month and pay benefits besides. We are now considering the advisability of charging, what is termed here, the three-dollar wage scale, which we might in the future term a three-and-a-half minimum, and if we raise their wages, I presume it would do them no harm, just the same as their working for low wages will do us no good.

Yours for the advancement of Socialism over the trail blazed by unionism,

J. J. KENNEDY.

WOULD NOT CAST SOCIALISM INTO HELL, BUT CAST HELL OUT OF PEOPLE.

(By a Democrat.)

Editor Miner's Magazine:

I am in receipt of a marked copy of the "Rush Springs Herald, a paper published at Rush Springs, Oklahoma, containing an article by the editor, criticising, in somewhat vindictive spirit, an article which appeared in print entitled: "Shall Negroes be Burned at the Stake?" Said article being a contribution by my esteemed friend and brother, Hon. R. A. Dague, Creston, Ia.

It is not my purpose to enter into defense of brother Dague. nor the article which he is the author if, nor to discuss the tenents of Socialism but to plead an explanatory cause for said contribution and what led upto its conception, and, incidentally to express my views from the standpoint of a Democrat.

Brother Dague is an erudite humanitarian of the highest type, and is well qualified to defend himself, being a veteran in newspaper lore, an able lawyer and a versatile writer of national reputation.

What gave rise to the article? Brother Dague and myself are very congenial in our trend of thought; for the past twenty-five years we have been in almost weekly communication with each other, and are, very naturally interested in each other's welfare. A short time ago I mailed a newspaper clipping, taken from the "Salina Daily Union," Salina, Kansas, to my friend in Iowa. The clipping embodied an editorial interview between a prominent ex-judge of the south and the editor of the Daily Union, in which the ex-judge expressed his opinion regarding the method of punishment to be administered to negroes that are guilty of assaulting white women. In his interview the ex-judge proclaimed that the only remedy, and that which would have a terrorizing effect, was to "burn the negro at the stake."

The sentiment coming, as it did, from an ex-judge, appealed to me as being so monstrous and diabolical, that I hastened to forward the clipping to my friend Dague, knowing that he could not let such utterances pass without challenging their horribleness.

Crime is soul revolting, no matter how inflicted, but to repay a crime that has been committed, by committing another, and one that entails worse suffering and horror, is a double tragedy more damnable and murderous in its aspects than that which prompts the instigator to perpetrate an assault for the purpose of gratifying a beastly passion, inherited from ancestrial parentage. "Vengegance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord," is in my opinion, a human acclaim, fraught with vicious, vendetta spirit, not sufficiently humanized to recognize the fact that, out of the same substance, the same birth were all mankind created. That the same Divine power implanted in all creative life, feelings and passions, and the subjecting of those feelings and passions are augmented or restrained in proportion to our environments, none of them to be destroyed by vicious and inhuman methods, but proper cultivation of their usages and when.

An assault, committed in the Southland, is no more revolting than if committed in some Northern state. The degree of beastliness is the same. I would not recall the old Mosaic law into practice by declaring in its behalf: "Tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye." Better still proclaim; "Father forgive them for they know what they do," is an edict far more potent in its effects for world building and the humanizing out of animalism and those base conditions in which the negro race were plunged by the infliction of slavery, dating back to the time of Egyptian bondage, carried to America by our Caucasian ancestors and here made subservient to passions of vices more degenerate and loathsome than the conditions described by the Apostle John, in his vision, in Revelations.

The living and the dead are approaching closer; the fires of hell are no longer a material belief nor an accepted reality, but on the contrary, a fancied place where vengeance is meted out to mortals for crimes committed whilst sojourning in a condition of ignorance, and obsessed condition of a morbid brain.

Students of science, psychologist, sociologist are a unit in declaring that conditions of evil, disease and criminal tendencies have their proscriptions on account of the mental conditions of society; that the ravisher is the legitimate offspring of a ravished motherhood, the thief a product of a propaganda whose mental attributes are based on functional lines of avarice and selfish greed. The whole human kingdom carries within the souls of humanity their own dungeons, purgatory, licentiousness and criminal desires, and, from these germinating hot-beds spring the fruits of the parent germ. Would it not be better to prepare better parents for the begetting of better offspring, than to kill the offspring because they are bad?

Now, Mr. Editor of the "Rush Springs Herald," endeavor to expunge from your feelings that spirit of the hyena and the jackall; drive from your soul all murderous thoughts; be not a breeding pool for foul and venomous hatred, but rather that you exemplify by living actions, the words of Him who condemned not the Magdalene nor the thieves upon the cross, but instead spake words of comfort and cheer. If such teachings are akin to Socialism, then I am an advocate of Socialism; I would not cast it into hell, but on the contrary cast hell out of the people's minds that insist on keeping it in their minds. I know of no more inspiring thought in which to close this article than by quoting an extract from one of Mrs. Felica Hemen's poems, titled:

"Then would ye swing your brother up;
High up in heaven's clear air,
And place the image of your God
A dangling victim there?"

A BINGHAM PROBLEM.

"A fool in revolt is infinitely wiser than a philosopher forging an apology for his chains."—Kossuth.

The struggle of the miners in Bingham, Utah, has done much to test the sincerity of many of the men in their advocacy of unionism. The great body remain firm, but many, the fair-weather variety of unionists, question the righteousness of this attempt to boost the quality of the workers' existence in the mining camp. The main opposition runs to seed on the sayings and actions of individuals. A hundred and one suppositions that cluster about the weaknesses of individual members are fathered by these critics in an attempt to despoil the principles of unionism. These men do not remark upon the strength that Nature may have blessed members with, the cementing force that makes for brotherhood they ignore in their counsels. They deal in human frailties and sum up with "There! The union is no good."

All the movements that have being in the ranks of labor they subject to a test that they would not dream of applying to Freemasonry, Republicanism or Christianity, for they appear to imagine that the mere advocacy and acceptance of the workingman's reform principles should immediately solve the wonderful problem of human nature; that all traits that distinguish one man from another should disappear from the ken of earth, and a sameness be wrought in the million and more personalities who give their troth to the cause. If unionism, struggling in an hostile environment, could accomplish such a miracle as they dream of, it would, indeed, be the power that would solve the riddle of the universe, and sustain the ideals, maybe, of some of the staunchest strikers; but, alas! what would become of the loophole—the wish to escape allegiance that seems to specialize on the reasonings of the parlor unionist?

One miner placarded unionism " a no-good proposition," because John Doe, who chanced to stay with his ideas of right, happened to owe him $5 that he did not seem inclined to pay in a hurry. The ability to absorb booze, the thrift that enables one to tide over the hardships of the strike period, a few words spoken in a hot or unguarded moment, the grouchiness of some union man, an uneven distribution of relief funds, and what not, are thrown into the scales in an endeavor to outweigh the fact that "unity is strength," and that humanity has a right to strive for freedom and progress. These apologists may belong to the M. E. Church, but their allegiance to their creed never wavers if the pastor gets drunk or surrenders to some other personal weakness. The old political parties do not suffer from the accusations they may hurl at the antics discovered in the professional politician. Apparently they do not accredit the beliefs whispered in the House of God or the cut-and-dried warwhoops of the old parties with being able to muster such a magical force as they demand from unionism, viz., the perfection of amicable human dispositions.

What is liberty? As one defines it so we arrive at his meaning of life. If his definition includes a belief in the liberation of every thought and feeling that will elevate man he will be a rebel, a crank, a mortal misunderstood, a human who frets under the weight of chains riveted to his soul. If his meaning of the word is adjudged "safe and sane" by the ordinary mind, if it is bound by the narrow walls of job sanctity he will plod through life contented to bear the lot of a "from-hand-to-mouth" existence. The boss worshiper will conform to the rule of wrong, if it is constitutional; will oppose the introduction of the new; will combat anything that butts in to stay or ease his daily grind; will uphold the virtues of peonage. He will resent being branded "a slave," for his regard for his position evolves a dignity that finds fit environment in a chicken coop for its functions; he is the slave of a barbarian's definition of liberty. His brain moves and a chain rattles, but one must not offend him with the admonition, "You are no free man," for, verily, do not the gods of his crude imagination, the gods clustering about his daily grind, quiet every qualm of conscience so his life may go on undisturbed by the new gospel of hope? It is painful to think, particularly if one finds one's notions challenging the divinity of the quarter-of-a-loaf-is-better-than-no-loaf philosophy. Anyhow, one must find an excuse for one's actions, for his persistent evasions, if he would keep his berth in the beanery or in his master's affections, and what easier than to deny the worth of principles one accepted mechanically by simply pleading, "None of it for me; John Doe is a union man, and he swears." Yes! in troublous times motives are liable to be wilfully or otherwise misconstrued by other men so they may voice the right of their industrial debaucheries.

William Thurston Brown (the "Truth Seeker"), in a lecture in New York city, said: "Can he (man) live his best without any consciousness of having part in an order of things that transcends the petty interests of a hand-to-mouth existence?" After answering his own question with, "He can't" he proceeds as follows: "The challenging now and here is the arena for men. Political evolution has rejected once and for all the very notion of an individual savior or an individual salvation. For human society to turn its face again toward kings and autocrats of any kind, even toward so-called great leaders, would be to begin its march back to the bug and the worm. (Place not too much faith in individuals as the movers of mountains). The evolution of the human mind, of the moral sense, must as surely reject once for all the very notion of a moral or spiritual autocrat. (One shouldn't let one's ideas be moulded by others, or by their acts). Not that way lies life or happiness or freedom. Not that way lies manhood, self-realization, fulfilment. That life should be an art, that all the work of your hands, all the deeds of your life, all the output of your mind should be the free expression of your personality, and that all the noblest fruition of every individual life waits most of all for the arrival of that social solidarity and the consciousness of it, whose purpose is the freedom and fulfillment of the individual—these alone can put you or anyone in possession of an incentive, a motive, an ideal, an inspiration adequate to the needs of a worthy and efficient human life." Unity of purpose for individual elevation. Why be led away from our ideas of right by our prejudices or fears if in a united whole lies our advancement? Human nature is a combination of tragedy and comedy; it's funny, anyhow; yes! The situation in Bingham has shown the complexity of human nature. The critics of their fellows of the local have aided to more obscure the problem, for what perversity of consistency is theirs that confounds, disparagingly, sunlit principles with the physical and moral deformities of individuals on the one hand, while it applauds, without stint, in another sphere a philosophy or various "isms" that have their leperous adherents.

SIMCOVITCH AND FANNY.

(By Theresa Malkiel.)

"Judge, your honor," pleaded Sincovitch, a striking tailor, before a city magistrate.

"Your honor, my wife she is sick. I have a letter from a doctor. I cannot move now! I cannot pay my rent. I am out on strike. Your honor, give me time."

"You must move Thursday," said the judge curtly, without looking at the doctor's note.

"Aye, aye," muttered Simcovitch, "Twenty years in America and now on the street. For forty years I have handled the needle and shears, handled them early and late, in season and out of season, made heaps and heaps of new coats, fixed greater heaps of old coats. Black and blue and gray coats went through my hands until the hands grew unsteady, my eyesight dim.

"I am on strike," he continued mournfully, addressing nobody in particular, "not because I have anything against my boss. I am in no position to make terms now. I know my days have gone. I cannot keep up with the younger men. I ought to be glad to get as much as my boss gives me; I don't know if anybody would give me even that much.

"Do you know what it means to work forty years at making coats? What have I to show for all my work? Where is it all gone to? Who benefited by it? There's nobody that can say I did. I have never known what it means to have an extra dollar in my pocket. The money I made during the season went for food, clothing and the payment of debts. When I was idle,

I had to borrow all the time. What I would buy during the season would go to the pawnshop in time of slack. Everything went there. Fanny's ring, her suit, my coat, the new bedspread, the curtains, the blue and white tablecloth, the locket with my dead child's picture in it, and even the little shoes we took off from her feet.

"I was a good tailor in my days. I am a schneider fon zu house, and now my Fanny is sick, the landlord is dispossessing me, the needle and shears are idle. I am a striker.

"Not that I am complaining against the strike. The tailors had to strike; their patience came to an end; they could not go on as they did. And who am I to go scab on them? Not that I was better off than the rest, but I am an elderly man.

"Yes, yes, your honor, I'm going! But where? To take my sick wife into the street. It is cold; we have no coats. Yes, no coats after making coats for forty years, I have not one to put on my back.

"I did not have to strike, you say. But I am only one in a hundred thousand. They were made to strike by the landlords, the butchers, the grocers, the bakers. Everybody wanted more money. They did not have it; they could not steal it; they had to strike for it. I have to be satisfied with what I get. I am an elderly man; my days are over. I am glad when I can get ten coats finished a day, 9 cents a coat, 90 cents a day; pretty good for an elderly man, but old people, too, have to live unless you kill them outright.

"Starvation stares me in the face, you say. I'm almost used to starve, and Fanny too, for that matter. I was out of work for eighteen weeks last winter. That time it wasn't my fault. I wanted to work. I would like to work now, too. I'm no idler, but a man must have enough to eat when he works; the tailors did not get it and they quit.

"Your honor, Fanny is sick. I tell you I cannot move. I have no place to move to. Give me time. Don't you see, we must win the strike. I want to work, I will work, I will pay."

"The fellow talks too much; remove him," ordered the judge.—Painter and Decorator Magazine.

REVIEW OF THE BINGHAM STRIKE.

Soon after the strike was called, Mgr. Jackling of the Utah Copper Co. declared that he was not going to introduce scab labor to take the places of his striking employés. It being evident (according to his royal highness) that in view of the starvation wage they had formerly received, that out of the entire number of operatives on strike, comparatively few, were more than ten days from starvation.

It being quite evident, that the bread and butter question, is evidently, the club with which the masters, continue to subdue the slaves, by forcing them (through their economic necessity) to either continue working for the wage offered them by their masters, or submit (ultimately) to starvation. In this case, however, the ten day starvation proposition was not productive of the expected results, for it was not until more than thirty days after the strike was called, that the Utah Copper Co. with a few of their loyal unscrupulous and contaminated scabs, to even make a semblance of a showing, in the way of starting their mine.

It was also evident that their former mercenaries were not yet quite ready to be ground into dollars for a heartless, unhallowed and criminal oligarchy.

But with all of Mr. Jackling's no strike-breaking policy, this ostentatious labor loving and altruistic despot, had at the same time a great number of his loyal deputies, composed mostly of the criminal riff-raff of society, patroling the continent in search of scabs to fill the places of the strikers. In a short time, however, there arrived in Bingham, over the B. & G. R. R., also a Utah Copper concern, a train load of the most decrepit looking specimens of humanity, that were ever unloaded, within the sacred domain of the Prophet, Seer and Revelator. A great many of those unfortunate wage slaves having been recruited from the ranks of the horny handed sons of a warm southern clime. But in order to secure the service of these unfortunate white men, it was necessary to inform them that there was no strike in Bingham, that the work there was easy, wages high, and a tropical climate to live in and if they wished to take advantage of this splendid opportunity, just get on the train and the Utah Copper would do all the rest.

But when those semi-naked, ill-fed physical wrecks landed in Bingham they soon discovered that the bananas, cocoanuts, and in fact all of the tropical fruits they were told so much about had been shipped abroad. Thus leaving only the never-fading mountains, with their snow clad peaks to remind them of the banks of the Wabash far away. As soon, however, as it was possible for a majority of these free-born wage slaves to beat a retreat they were marching down the industrial causway, back to the land of Dixie, and as they marched along you could hear that old familiar song, "Hang Up the Fiddle and the Bow, Lay Down the Shovel and the Hoe, no scabbing goes for poor old Ned for he's gone where all good folks go." Out of the thousands of men, composed of the different nationalities, creeds and colors, shipped in by the Utah Copper Co., but very few remained to do any effective work, their efforts along this line having availed them nothing but a large bill of expense. They are now making a final appeal to the farmers of Utah, or at least it looks that way, as there are assembled here at this time, quite a number of local hay shovelers and beet dehorners, who know absolutely nothing of the industrial movement, and seem to care less, but it may be some time before it will be possible for the Utah Copper Co. to make effective and profitable mine operatives out of those native sheep herders. As all experience has shown that the road from the plow to the steam shovel is a long, hazardous and expensive one.

December 12, 1912. By this time the Highland Boy Mine (with about forty men) had also started to operate and with the exception of a few Mexican laborers, who were trying to do some effective mining, all were gunmen. This seditious bunch of ladrones and ruffians were stationed in nearly every nook and corner where it was possible for them to command a good view of the public road leading through the company's property.

With gun in hand, upper lip pulled back over a ghastly set of man eaters, ready to devour any unfortunate lunch bucket stiff that happened to put in his appearance.

Sometime during the day in question, an Austrian miner (who was living with his family not far from the mine) went over to the Highland Boy Company store to do some trading and while there happened to meet an old friend with whom he conversed a few minutes and after (otherwise) attending to whatever business he was there to dispose of, immediately proceeded on his journey homeward. Just before reaching the house in which he was living he was overtaken by one of those nefarious vampires, in the garb of a human being, (Deputy) this pusillanimous jackal with a soul of stone and a craven heart, immediately began to pour forth his vitriolic maledictions upon the unprotected form of this calumniated, accused and despised miner who was peaceably returning to his loved ones.

The wife of this unfortunate Austrian who was not far distant, on hearing the voice of her husband calling for assistance, immediately proceeded to the seat of war. Arriving on the battlefield, this fragile little woman, attempted to assist in her husband's defense, but before her efforts became effective another one of these putrid unsavory and disgusting altruistic ghouls who was in charge of the company's ore tram (Joe Ruttle) arrived and instantly seized hold of this helpless little woman and with the brutality of a Knight of the Inquisition, proceeded to abuse and maltreat this helpless victim (who was also about to become a mother) to such a degree that on her return home it was seen that she was almost covered with blood from wounds inflicted by this addled monster.

It developed later that as a result of the severe punishment received she was placed under the care of a physician who left no stone unturned in his effort to restore this innocent victim to her home and family. But, alas, the job was completed, and the master avenged and in the city Necropolus, there appears another little mound of fresh earth, submerged in a sea of beautiful flowers, silent tokens of love and tender sympathy from the many friends and loved ones for their departed sister, wife and mother.

This sad story (we are told) is one of the kind that cause the Angels to weep in Heaven, while the criminal that stands convicted of this atrocious deed, will be turned over to Judas Iscariot as another recruit for the army of the damned.

The strike is still on, however, and the only evidence of success for the companies involved, is a scrap pile of broken machinery, donkey engines standing on side tracks, stripped of their vitals in order to keep in repair the ones that are in use. Nine or ten steam shovels are laying on side tracks close to the shops, patiently waiting for the skilled hands of upright, reliable and competent mechanics who are not compelled to work with rings in their noses and that when they slant their domes of intellect heavenward for a mouthful of God's free air, they will not be compelled to breathe it through the barrel of a gun.

THE IGNITION OF MINE GASES.

The Ignition of Mine Gases by the Filaments of Incandescent Lamps, is the title of Bulletin No. 52, which has just been issued by the United States Bureau of Mines.

The authors, H. H. Clark and L. C. Ilsley make the following general statement:

"As part of its investigations of the causes of mine accidents and of the safest and most efficient methods of handling electricity underground, the Bureau of Mines undertook a study of the ignition of mine gases by the filaments of electric incandescent lamps. This bulletin describes the investigation in detail and gives a complete record of the results obtained.

"The investigation was undertaken for the purpose of determining the degree of danger that attends the use of certain specific sizes of incandescent lamps in atmospheres containing inflammable gas. Previous investigators have, to a greater or less extent, been concerned with certain theoretical features of the problem, such as the effect of the temperature and the dimensions of the lamp filaments and the question whether a lamp may ignite gas by the heat of its glowing filament or by the spark that is drawn when the filament is broken. Although these features were considered in the present investigation and are briefly discussed in this bulletin, the principal object of the tests was to determine what sizes of incandescent lamps suitable for mine use would ignite explosive mixtures of mine gas and air, and what were the circumstances most effective in causing such ignition.

"The result of the investigation may be generally summarized as follows:

"The naked carbon filaments of standard lamps, burning at rated voltage, will invariably ignite explosive gaseous mixtures.

"If the gas can reach the filaments of standard lamps without breaking the filaments or producing partial combustion within the bulbs, the explosive gaseous mixture is sure to be ignited.

"Several sizes of both standard and miniature lamps, when smashed while burning at rated voltage, will ignite gas.

"Standard lamps that do not usually ignite explosive gaseous mixtures may do so if the broken pieces of the filament cause a short circuit when the lamps are smashed."

RESOURCES OF SOUTHERN STATES.

An impresive exhibit of the mineral resources of the sixteen Southern States whose industries are included in the exhibit of the Southern Commercial Congress is seen in a large wall map which has just been specially compiled by the United States Geological Survey for the use of the congress. The minerals of the several areas are shown on the map in appropriate colors and tints, some of which are of course superimposed on others.

Coal is the premier mineral resource of the Southern States. The map shows large areas of workable bituminous coal in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, and smaller areas in Georgia and North Carolina. The Geological Survey's estimate of the original tonnage (in the ground) of the southern coal fields is 613,537,000,000 short tons; the total production to January 1, 1912, was 1,624,537,268 tons The area of the southern coal fields "containing workable coals" is shown as 104,696 square miles and that which "may contain workable coals" as 146,700 square miles additional.

The areal distribution of oil and natural gas as shown on the map is very inconspicuous compared with the great coal areas. The value of the oil and natural gas produced in 1911 was, however, nearly three-fourths that of the coal produced in the same year. The value of the coal produced in 1911 was $124,000,000; that of oil and gas was $89,000,000.

Clay products of the southern states in 1911 amounted to more than $29,000,000 and the Geological Survey is authority for the statement that the southern deposits probably exceed in area and volume those of any other portion of the United States of the same size.

The lead and zinc produced in the Southern States in 1911 was valued at $16,614,360. The stone was valued at $14,276,163 and is shown on the map to be well distributed. The production of phosphate is essentially a southern industry and the value of the output in 1911 was $11,860,811.

Of iron-ore deposits, large areas are indicated on the map in Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina and smaller bodies in Maryland, Alabama, Texas, South Carolina and Georgia. The output from the ten producing southern states in 1911 was valued at $7,379,267. An estimate of the available iron-ore reserves in the Southern States by C. Willard Hayes, formerly chief geologist of the United States Geological Survey, places it at 500,000,000 long tons, together with a much larger quantity of low grade ore. Copper is produced in seven of the Southern States; the value of the 1911 output was $2,455,363.

This large map shows 22 mineral deposits of the Southern States, the annual output of which is valued at $1,000,000 or less.

FATALITIES IN THE METAL MINES.

Washington.—An inquiry just completed by Albert H. Fay, mining engineer, of the United States Bureau of Mines, shows that fatal accidents in metal mines in the United States are more numerous in proportion to the number of men employed than are the fatal accidents in coal mines. Of the 165,979 employed in the metal mines in the United States during the calendar year 1911, 695 were killed, which represents a rate of 4.19 per 1,000 men employed, as compared with 3.73 per 1,000 for the coal mines of this country for the same period.

The total number of fatalities and serious and slight injuries due to accidents is as follows: Deaths, 695, or 4.19 per 1,000 men employed; serious injuries, 4,169, or 25.12 per 1,000; and slight injuries, 22,408, or 135.01 per 1,000. Of the total number of fatalities, 532 occurred underground, or at the rate of 5.18 per 1,000 and 153 were killed on the surface, or 2.49 per 1,000.

The figures show that approximately two-thirds of the total deaths and injuries that occur in and about metal mines were caused as follows:

Of the fatal accidents, 32.52 per cent are due to falls of ore or rock from roof, wall, or bank; 11.23 per cent to explosives; 15.39 to falling down stope, shaft or winze, and 5.32 per cent to mine fires.

Of the serious accidents, 28.86 per cent are due to falls of roof, wall, or bank; 19.05 per cent to car and haulage systems; 12.19 per cent to machinery, and 6.41 per cent to timber and hand tools.

Of the slight accidents, 28.86 per cent are due to falls of roof; 15.52 per cent to car and haulage systems; 10.10 per cent to machinery, and 8.02 per cent to timber and hand tools.

The figures for the copper mines show 396 operators, employing 44,693 men, of whom 31,557 were employed underground and 13,136 on the surface. The total number of deaths and injuries due to accidents reported is as follows: Deaths, 238, or 5.33 per 1,000 men employed; serious injuries, 1,326, or 29.67 per 1,000, and slight injuries, 9,016, or 201.73 per 1,000. Of the total number of fatalities, 199 occurred underground, making this rate per 1,000 men employed 6.31. The surface fatalities were 39, or 2.97 per 1,000.

The figures for the iron mines show 207 iron mine operators, who employed 45,953 men, of whom 25,461 were employed underground and 20,492 as surface men, including those engaged in steam shovel work. The number of deaths and injuries resulting from accidents in these mines is as follows: Deaths, 197, or 4.29 per 1,000 men employed; serious injuries, 2.032, or 44.22 per 1.000, and slight injuries, 8,690, or 188.3 per 1,000. Of the total number of fatalities, 136 occurred underground, or 5.34 per 1,000 men, and 61 employés were killed while engaged in surface work, making this rate 2.95 per 1,000.

The figures for the lead and zinc mines refer only to those in the Mississippi Valley. The lead and zinc mines of other states are grouped with miscellaneous metal mines on account of the difficulty of making a distinct classification, as lead and zinc occur in so many places as associated metals in silver ores, as, for instance, in the lead-silver mines of the Coeur d'Alene district, Idaho. The Mississippi Valley lead and zinc mines form a class by themselves, and hence are easily segregated.

The statistics given embody the reports of 483 operators employing 12,521 men, of whom 9,247 are underground employés and 3,274 surface men. The total number of deaths and injuries due to accidents is as follows: Killed, 43, or 3.43 per 1,000 men employed; serious injuries, 177, or 14.14 per 1,000, and slight injuries 1,311, or 125 per 1,000. Of the number of men killed, 32 fatalities occurred underground, making this rate 3.46 per 1,000 men employed, while 11 men were killed on the surface, or 3.36 per 1,000 men.

The figures for the miscellaneous metal mines show 3,917 operators, employing 48,919 men, of whom 35,176 were underground and 13,743 surface men. The deaths and injuries due to accidents are as follows: Deaths, 193, or 3.95 per 1,000 men employed; serious injuries, 540, or 11.04 per 1,000; slight injuries, 3,078, or 62.92 per 1,000. Of the total number of fatalities, 163 occurred underground, or 4.63 per 1,000, and 30 on the surface, or 2.18 per 1,000.

The rates of serious and slight injuries are low when compared with the iron and copper mines. This may be accounted for in part by reason of the fact that this group includes many prospectors and small mines that keep no records. Fatal accidents impress themselves on the memory and are easily reported. The serious and slight injuries are soon forgotten if not recorded. Many of these mines are in states where there is no inspection, and they are not required to keep accident records. Many of the larger companies operating gold and silver and lead-silver mines of the West have, for their own protection, hospital service and medical aid for their employés.

The reports from some of these large companies show that excellent records are being kept.

The non-metal mines employed 13,893 men, of whom 3,182 were employed underground and 10,711 on the surface. The total number of deaths and injuries due to accidents reported is as follows: Deaths 24, or 1.73 per 1,000 men employed; serious injuries, 94, or 6.77 per 1,000, and slight injuries 313, or 22.53 per 1,000. When compared with the copper and iron mines, these ratios seem exceedingly low. Judging from the reports received, this is largely accounted for by the fact that the mines, being small and employing an average of only 42 men each, do not keep complete records. The majority of these mines are in states where there is no state inspector, and are therefore not obliged to keep accident records and make rports thereon.

The statistics have been published in Technical Paper No. 40. Copies may be obtained by addressing the Director, Bureau of Mines, Washington, D. C.

POSSIBLE OIL TERRITORY IN SOUTHERN OKLAHOMA.

Official Geologists Give Practical Suggestions as to Locations for Wildcatting.

During the autumn of 1912 a brief and somewhat cursory geological exploration in Tillman and Cotton counties of southern Oklahoma, was made in accordance with a co-operative arrangement between the United States Geological Survey and the Oklahoma geological survey, in order to see whether in some of the areas not yet tested by the drill and hard rock strata are sufficiently exposed and offer such characters as to enable the geologist to pick out places that might seem favorable for the occurrence of oil and gas pools. Also the attempt was made to cover in a rapid reconnaissance survey as much of the territory in southern Oklahoma adjacent to the Electra, Petrolia and Burkburnett oil fields of northern Texas as the available time and funds would permit.

Experience in many regions of the country shows that it is often possible to select areas in advance of drilling that will consistently furnish better chances of finding pools of oil and gas than if the test wells were located without taking into consideration the geologic factors which are largely responsible for these accumulations. Nevertheless, it is only the fake or "practical geologist," probably concerned mainly in promoting either himself or some wildcat proposition, who "knows" beyond question where the oil and gas pools can be found. Real geologists, who have given years of work and study to a scientific explanation of the causes of oil and gas accumulations, approach the problem of the location of test wells with much caution. No one realizes better than they that factors indeterminable in advance of actual tests may entirely alter the prospects for oil and gas On the other hand, a study of the oil fields of the world has shown that of the geologic factors involved in oil and gas accumulation certain very important ones, such as the character and age of the unexposed rocks within reach of the drill and the structure or "lay" of the strata, are usually determinable to some extent in advance of drilling, and that by observing and properly interpreting these factors the chances of failure may be very greatly decreased with corresponding prevention of money waste in profitless wildcatting. The region examined is undoubtedly destined to be the scene of considerable exploratory testing with the drill ("wildcatting") which will probably bring some successes and certainly will meet many failures, a part of which are avoidable. The purpose of the survey work is not only economically and immediately to promote the successes, but also to prevent as far as possible, the drilling of "dry" holes with their losses and disappointments.

The area covered by the reconnaissance embraces about 360 square miles in the southeastern corner of Tillman county and the southwestern part of Cotton county, Oklahoma. It includes the whole or parts of Tps. 3, 4 and 5 S., Rs. 12, 13, 14 and 15 W. and portions of Tps. 4 and 5 S., R. 11 W., and the east part of Tps. 3, 4, and 5 S., R. 16 W. The report of the work, which was carried on by M. J. Munn, geologist of the U. S. Geological Survey, in charge, assisted for a part of the time by J. B. Newby, for the state, will call attention to certain portions of the area which, from the structure standpoint, appear to be more or less favorable for the occurrence of oil and gas. The studies are not yet completed, so that even the more salient of the preliminary conclusions are subject to revision as the material collected during the field work is more thoroughly studied.

Favorable Places for Test Wells.

In his preliminary statement to the survey of the main results of the examination, Mr. Munn reports that an anticline appears to cross Red river in or near the SW. ¼ sec. 32 T. 5 S., R. 12 W. The dip within 1½ miles along the western limb of this fold is probably betweeen 50 and 75 feet (the character of the rocks exposed rendering an exact measurement impossible). The trend of this fold is uncertain but it may be stated that almost any portion of sec. 32, T. 5 S., R. 12 W., appears favorable, structurally, for oil and gas. The northwest quarter of the section seems most favorable. If an oil and gas pool is present in this vicinity it very probably extends to adjacent portions of sec. 33, 28, 29, and 31.

In T. 4 S., R. 12 W., some good exposures of Permian sandstone and clay-lime conglomerate suggest strongly that a structural "high" exists a short distance north of the town of Randlett. It is not possible at this time definitely to outline this anticline or structural dome, but it seems likely that the crest is situated somewhere in the S. W. ¼ of sec. 21, the S. E. ¼ of sec. 20, the NE. ¼ of sec. 29, or the NW. ¼ of sec. 28, T. 4 S., R. 12 W. The "high" may be a dome of small extent, or it may be a part of a fairly definite anticline trending eastward leaving the township in either sec. 24 or 25. There may be a secondary structural dome in sec. 24, T. 4 S., R. 12 W. because the beds dip about 50 feet from the top of the large butte in the northeast quarter of this section to a small butte about one mile north of it in sec. 13, and also at about the same rate towards the northeast. The structure of the rocks south of the large butte for almost two miles can not be determined. In the NW. ¼ sec. 26 the beds are several feet lower. The trend of this anticline is probably south 50° or 60° E. The position of this fold was not determined in T. 4 S., R. 11 W. It seems most likely to pass across some portion of sec. 32 and 33, but it is probably becoming lower and flatter toward the southeast. The shallow test well drilled in the southeast corner of sec. 30 probably lies half a mile south of the axis of this fold. This location seems on the whole a favorable one for testing, but a still better one would be about 1¼ miles northwest of it, as the rocks there are probably 30 feet higher structurally. If a test well is sunk near Randlett it should be located near the center of either sec. 21 or 27, T. 4 S., R. 12 W.

In T. 4 S., R. 13 W., the strata at the southwest corner of sec. 24 seem to be between 40 and 50 feet higher than they are in secs. 35 and 11. Other available data suggest that the high elongated hill in sec. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26 and 27, T. 4 S., R. 13 W., is in part structural and therefore somewhat more favorable for oil and gas than portions of the adjacent territory. There seems to be little preference in a location for a test here. Probably as good a place as any would be in the northeast quarter of sec. 26.

In a general way the northwestern part of T. 4 S., R. 13 W., would appear worth a trial for oil or gas if pools are found in other areas. Secs. 8, 9, 16, and 17 are probably somewhat more promising than the adjacent ones. A small, round hill in the NW. ¼ sec. 16 is capped by a thick clay-lime conglomerate that is probably 40 feet higher at this place than at the northern edge of Devol, one mile to the southwest. It is also about 20 feet higher than at an exposure near the northeast corner of Sec. 8, but its altitude at intervening points is not known. This clay-lime conglomerate bed dips about 15 feet in the first one and a quarter miles to the north from the northwest corner of Sec. 8, and from that point dips about 55 feet more in the next one and a half miles northward to the dry hole in the N. W. ¼ Sec. 28, T. 3 S., R. 13 W. It seems very probable that if this well had been located one mile farther to the southeast it would have been on the axis of the anticline which plunges steeply toward the north. So far as structure is concerned the location of this dry hole is very unfavorable, and it should not be considered a fair test for this vicinity. In fact, it is thought that test wells located in the S. W. ¼ of Sec. 33, or on. or near the high hill in the southwest corner of Sec. 35, T. 3 S., R. 13 W.; in the N. E. ¼ or the N. W. ¼ of Secs. 8 and 9, respectively, T. 4 S., R. 13 W., will perhaps, have as good chance of developing oil or gas as any part of this territory.

North of Deep Red Run rock exposures are meager. If a test well is contemplated in T. 3 S., R. 13 W., north of Deep Red Run, it might as a venture be placed in the N. ½ of Sec. 9 or adjacent territory to the northeast.

In Tps. 3 and 4 S., R. 14 W., the principal structural feature is a "high," vaguely outlined by exposures on Big Blue and Little Blue creeks and on streams flowing north into Deep Red Run. Spirit level lines to these outcrops show that from the divide between Red river and Deep Red Run the rocks dip fairly uniformly, but at a low angle to both of these streams. The exact position and character of this structural feature is not fully determined It is probably a broad, low, irregular fold with a somewhat sinuous east-west trend and may be a continuation of the "high" already described in the northwest part of T. 4 S., R. 13. It seems to continue westward through portions of T. 4 S., R. 15 W. A test in the area east of Grandfield should be located either in the north tier of sections of T. 4 S., R. 14 W., or in the southern tier of T. 3 S., R. 14 W. Probably the central part of Sec. 1, T. 4 S., R. 14 W., should receive slight preference.

When the field work was being done a derrick had been built in the southwest corner of Sec. 9, T. 4 S . R. 14 W., about one mile southward from the station at Grandfield. This seems to be a fairly favorable location for a wildcat test though the available data are too meager to admit of a more definite statement.

In T. 3 S., R. 14, northward from Deep Red Run, the rocks rise very gently, but the exposures are so rare as to furnish no evidence of decided folds, if they exist.

There is some good evidence that a small anticline crosses Big Blue creek in the S. E. ¼ of Sec. 26, T. 4 S., R. 14 W., less than a mile above its month. The axis of this fold seems to trend almost east-west. A test in this vicinity should be located near the east-west line through the middle of Sections 26 27, 28 and 29.

In T. 4 S., R. 15 W., the beds appear to rise at a very small angle from the east, south and north to a broad level area in Secs. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15 and 16 in which very few exposures occur.

The structure of T. 3 S., R. 15 W., also is not definite. The most prominent feature is a gentle rise of the rocks toward the west and southwest, across the township.

A dry hole, located in the N. E. ¼ of Sec. 9, less than a mile north of the station at Loveland, seems to be near the middle of a very broad, flat syncline in which the rocks are practically level.

Work was done in the eastern parts only of Tps. 3, 4 and 5 S., 16 W. Few exposures are present in this territory and but little geologic information is available regarding the structure. The character of the topography suggests a general dip towards the west from east of the middle of T. 4, but this evidence taken alone is of very little value.

According to the present incomplete data it is suggested that the first wells in Tps. 3, 4 and 5 S., Rs. 15 and 16 W., should be located in some parts of the high, smooth prairie country south of the "Breaks" in T. 4 S., R. 15 W. Also it is suggested that any producer who may be inclined to wildcat in the Quanah district should locate on the old town site of Quanah or in the west half of Sec. 31, T. 3 S., R. 15 W.

In offering these suggestions for the use of drillers in choosing locations for test wells ("wildcatting"), the geologists are assuming that the formations containing the oil-bearing sands in the Electra, Burkburnett and Petrolia fields of northern Texas underlie adjacent portions of Oklahoma. This assumption is warranted to some extent at least by the evident continuity of the outcropping beds from one district to the other. It has been assumed that the formations containing the oil sands in northern Texas also contain the same or similar oil-bearing beds in southern Oklahoma. It is quite certain that the general structural conditions are similar in the two areas, and on the whole, there seems to be no reason, determinable in advance of drilling, why portions of southern Oklahoma do not contain pools of oil and gas of commercial size. One object of the governmental examinations is to give the driller some aid in choosing locations for tests. The tests must be made before the question of the occurrence of oil may actually be settled. The locations mentioned as good places for wildcatting are based almost wholly on the structure or the dip of the rocks, and the probable height of the oil sands here as compared with their height where they are productive in the Burkburnett, Electra and Petrolia fields. It should be remembered that the areas suggested for tests may not be all that are favorable for tests in the region, but they are the more apparent ones brought to notice during the course of the field work. The actual difference in elevation of the probable oil sands at various points in this area can be determined only after further study of the field notes. It is believed that test wells located according to the suggestions given by the Geological Surveys in this district will offer much better chances of finding oil or gas than those on locations made in the ordinary unscientific way, though it must always be borne in mind that in most new and unproven regions, even where the conditions for structure determination are favorable (quite contrary to the present instance) no human agency can at present determine with certainty, in advance of drilling as to whether at any given point oil or gas will be found in commercial quantities.

The complete report on this region is being prepared by the United States Geological Survey and will be issued as soon as possible. It will contain a large map of the area covered, showing the facts upon which the above conclusions are based. The report will be for free distribution and when issued, notices will be sent to the newspapers.—United States Geological Survey.

GOLD AND SILVER MINING IN 1912.

Smallest Production of Gold in Past Five Years.

The gold-mining industry of the United States was generally normal in 1912, according to H. D. McCaskey, of the U. S. Geological Survey, but early figures indicate the smallest production since 1907, when the output was $90,435,700. In 1908 the output increased to $94,560,000, in 1909 to $99,673,400, in 1910 it dropped to $96 269,100; in 1911 it increased slightly to $96,890,000, but in 1912 it decreased to $91,685,168, according to preliminary estimates of the Bureau of the Mint and the Geological Survey.

The decrease is to be ascribed mainly to Nevada, where there was a falling off of about $4,500,000, chiefly from Goldfield and to a smaller degree from National and Seven Troughs. The greatest Goldfield mines produced more ore than in 1911, but the average grade treated was considerably lower; the mill at National was burned in September, and production was delayed at Seven Troughs by a cloudburst in July. On the other hand, the Manhattan, Round Mountain, and Fairview districts somewhat increased their yields. A decrease of $300,000 to $400.000 is also indicated for Colorado where, although there was an increased production from Cripple Creek of about $500,000, owing partly to successful drainage by the Roosevelt tunnel, and an increase in gold output also from Gilpin county, there was an estimated decrease in production of about $1,000,000 from the San Juan region, including the counties of Dolores, La Plata, Ouray, San Juan, and San Miguel. The bulk of the decrease, however, was from the Camp Bird mine, in Ouray county, as the output of San Juan and Dolores counties increased. In Utah and Washington decreases of gold output of $100,000 to $200,000 are indicated. In Montana there was probably a smaller decrease.

The production of gold was normal in Alaska, Arizona, Idaho and New Mexico, and there was a somewhat increased output in California and Oregon. The year 1912 was most prosperous in South Dakota, where the output increased about $400,000 and was the largest in the history of the State. The great Homestake mines, as usual, made the bulk of the output. The hydroelectric plant of the company owning these mines, which has been under construction for several years, was completed and in operation in 1912.

California retains first place in gold output, regained from Colorado in 1911.

Gold dredging continued generally active in 1912, especially in California and Alaska, where increased dredging capacity was added. The output from 120 dredges in 10 states (including Alaska) in 1911 was $10,311,589.

In the Geological Survey's report on gold and silver for 1911 it was shown that of the total gold production 24 per cent was derived from placers, dredging alone producing 10.9 per cent; 53.8 per cent was from gold and silver mills (23.9 per cent by amalgamation, 26.1 per cent by cyanidation and 3.8 per cent by chlorination), and 22 per cent from smelting. These proportions will probably not greatly change for 1912, except that dredging may be expected to increase somewhat and the output from chlorination will continue to decline.

A decline in prospecting has been noted in several of the Western States and in 1911 and 1912 there was no notable discovery of new ore bodies or deposits that seem likely to promise immediate material increases in the domestic gold output. The largest producers are operating at probably near their maximum capacity and though steady output from them is assured, in some places, as at Goldfield, the grade of ore has begun to decline. New development and discovery of gold deposits will in all likelihood not much more than offset such decline in grade, or the exhaustion of older mines. From present knowledge there is no great prospect of an increase in gold production of the United States in 1913.

According to estimates made for the Survey by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce the imports in 1912 comprised gold valued at $61,400,000. The gold exported in 1912 was valued at $48,600,000. The excess of imports over exports was about $12,800,000, against $20,262,110 in 1911 and $447,696 in 1910. This marked change from the condition in 1909, when the excess of exports over imports was 88,793,855.

The gold imported in 1912 was mainly in the form of ore and bullion, and a large amount came from Mexico, with Canada a close second. England, France and Central and South American countries supplied the bulk of the remainder, The exports consisted of refined bullion and coin. The largest amounts went to France, South America, Canada and Japan, and smaller shipments were sent to the West Indies and other North American countries.

THE INTELLECTUAL BASIS OF DEMOCRACY.

The majority shall rule. This is the fundamental principle of our modern democracy, but it has as yet never been realized. In all historic times, as long as political society exists, it has always been a minority that ruled, sometimes a large one and sometimes a small one, and most of the time a very small one.
